Distinction between this and Clayton Act.—"In considering the cases which arise under the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission, the distinction between the Clayton Act [see 9 Fed. Stat. Ann. 2d ed. 730] and the act which creates and defines the jurisdiction and duties of the Federal Trade Commission must be kept in mind. The purposes of the Clayton Act and of the Federal Trade Commission Act are different. The Clayton Act is intended for the prohibition of contracts and combinations in restraint of trade which are of sufficient force of oppression or coercion as amount to a monopoly or trust. In order for the government to succeed in an equity or criminal action, or for a private litigant to succeed, where he seeks damages as a result of such alleged trust or combination, each must successfully bear the burden of establishing a combination which restrains trade. No such obligation is imposed upon the Federal Trade Commission before its order may issue requiring an individual, partnership, or corporation engaged in commerce to desist from a practice which might lead eventually to an unlawful trust or combination which would be in restraint of trade. Section 5 of the Federal Trade Act prohibits unfair methods of competition in commerce, declaring them unlawful. This act forbids all unfair methods of competition. It does not define what is unfair competition, but leaves that to the commission for determination. Section 5 provides that the commission is empowered and directed to prevent persons, partnerships, or corporations, except banks and common carriers subject to the acts to regulate commerce, by using methods of unfair competition in commerce. It will thus be observed that there is no restriction or qualification to the powers thus conferred, but the method of commerce must be unfair." Beech-Nut Packing Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 885, per Manton, C. J., in concurring opinion.

Commission as censor of commercial morals.—"The commission is not made a censor of commercial morals generally. Its authority is to inquire into unfair methods of competition in interstate and foreign commerce, if so doing will be of interest to the public, and if such method of competition is prohibited by the act to issue an order requiring the person or corporation using it to cease and desist from doing so." Winsted Hosiery Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 957.

Necessity that unfair competition relate to interstate commerce.—This section does not apply to a contract of sale made and performed in the same state. Quincy Oil Co. v. Sylvester, (Mass. 1921) 130 N. E. 217, 14 A. L. R. 111.

In Ward Baking Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 330, it was held that where a baking company transported its bread in its own wagons to another state, and the drivers of such wagons called at the retail stores in the latter state and sold the bread to such retailers as desired to buy, this did not constitute interstate commerce and that an order of the trade commission in regard thereto was unauthorized.

Voluntary unincorporated association.—The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction in the case of a voluntary unincorporated association of manufacturers where the members of the association are engaged in interstate commerce and such commerce is claimed to have been directly affected by the alleged unfair methods of competition. National Harness Mfrs.' Assoc. v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 705.

Giving gratuities to employees of customer.—The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction to determine whether the giving of money or other gratuities to employees of a customer without the knowledge or consent of their employer as an inducement to influence the employees or owners to purchase supplies is in violation of this act and if it determines that it is then to order such acts to cease. Hurst v. Federal Trade Commission, (E. D. Va. 1920) 268 Fed. 874.

Elements to be considered.—"Freedom of access to the consumer, and the entire absence of monopoly and nondeprivation of the public, have been regarded as an important element in the decision of cases of alleged unfair business competition." Curtis Pub. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 881.

Damage as immaterial.—The fact that no damage has been shown is immaterial as the remedy afforded by the statute is preventive not compensatory. National Harness Mfrs.'

Assoc. v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 705.

Prevention of competition as to resale price.—A company in selling its products to such purchasers, principally wholesalers and jobbers, as do not resell at a price lower than that fixed by the company and in refusing to sell to such as do, with the purpose of eliminating competition in the sale of the company's products does not engage in an unfair method of competition in violation of this provision. Beech-Nut Packing Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 885, wherein the court said:

"The ground upon which the conclusion of law rests is that the method is unfair, because it stifles competition and so restrains trade. The obvious purpose of the respondent is to prevent any competition as to the resale price between purchasers of its products. Such a method, founded upon an agreement between a manufacturer and purchasers severally, was held to be a violation of the Sherman Act in Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Park & Sons Co., 220 U. S. 373, 31 Sup. Ct. 376, 55 L. ed. 502. It is difficult to say why a different conclusion should be reached, if the same result is attained by acquiescence and co-operation without express agreement between the manufacturer and his purchasers severally. Eastern States Retail Lumber Association v. United States, 234 U. S. 600; 34 Sup. Ct. 951, 58 L. ed. 1490, L. R. A. 1915A, 788. But we understand the Supreme Court to hold in United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U. S. 300, 39 Sup. Ct. 465, 63 L. ed. 992, that a similar, but less drastic, method of sale constitutes merely the exercise of a man's right to do what he will with his own, and is not obnoxious to the Sherman Act."

Customers misled by labels on goods.—Where labels on goods were thoroughly established and understood in the trade and there was no passing off of one manufacturer's goods as those of another, and no combination in restraint of trade or to create a monopoly, the fact that some customers were misled by the labels or that some dealers deliberately deceived them as to their meaning has been held not to constitute unfair competition within the meaning of this act. Winsted Hosiery Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 957.

Condition as to use of leased devices.—A condition imposed by the sellers of gasoline that devices leased by them to the retailers for the storing and vending of gasoline shall be used by the latter solely for the handling of the product of the sellers is not a situation which constitutes an "unfair method of competition" within the meaning of this section. Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 478.

"The practice of leasing, at a nominal rental, tanks and automatic measuring pumps, for the storing and distributing of gasoline, upon condition that the tanks and pumps so leased be used by the lessee, the retailer, exclusively for the purpose of storing and marketing gasoline purchased from the lessor," is not a violation of this section. Canfield Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 571.

Contract between magazine publisher and agent.—In Curtis Pub. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 881, contracts between a magazine publisher and its agents were held not to constitute unfair competition.

Dealers with same name invading each other's territory.—Where two persons of the same name carry on similar businesses one as a retailer and the other as a wholesaler, it is not unfair competition for the retailer to expand his business into a wholesale one and invade the territory of the other, where there is no similarity in the labels of the goods. To prohibit such expansion would interfere with the fundamental rights of reasonable trade competition, and with reasonable and commendable purposes of trade enterprise through expansion. Walker v. Walker Bros. Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 395, wherein it was said:

"Unfair competition cannot be said to result from the idea that a single salesman sought to palm off one Walker product for another Walker product; and this would be so, whether it was in the wholesale or retail trade.

"Unfair competition in commerce results from actual misdoings, or from an assembly of circumstances, which are calculated, in and of themselves, to mislead the public, or, as it is sometimes expressed, 'the average trade.'

"We fail to see anything unreasonable in the efforts of a business concern to expand its enterprise by carrying it into broader fields and into larger and broader ways of doing business. We cannot avoid the view that restraints upon business expansion would be an unreasonable restraint, and an unreasonable hamper, not only of the natural trade ambition, but of the broad right of opening free competition.

"It is quite true, in cases of unfair competition, in the usual phase, that the question of good or bad faith, while upon another phase the question would be whether a situation, in and of itself, without regard to the question of good or bad faith; the ways and means are, in and of themselves, calculated to deceive members of the public into buying one thing when they think they are getting another. The questions always are whether trade is being unfairly interfered with, and whether the public is being cheated into buying and paying for something which it is not, in fact, getting. It is true that the defendants' goods as well as the plaintiffs', carried the name 'Walker'; but that was a rightful name which they had used for many years. It cannot be seen that this involves deceitful similitude, because it was their own name, and because the goods bore distinctive descriptions and designations of the product of the Philadelphia Walkers."

Vol. IV, p. 578, sec. 5 [B]. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 114.]

Order against voluntary association.—"The order may be enforced by reaching the officers and members, personally and individually. A voluntary association, having many members, may be brought into court by service on its officers and such of its members as are known and can be conveniently reached, sufficient being served to represent all the diverse interests." National Harness Mfrs. Assoc. v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 705.

Vol. IV, p. 578, sec. 5 [C]. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 114.]

Finding of commission as conclusive.—"The facts as found by the commission, being supported by testimony, are conclusive; but the effect of them is a question of law, to be expressed in a conclusion of law." Beech-nut Packing Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 885.

"While the act provided that the findings of fact made by the Commission were final and conclusive, it still remained the duty of the supervising court to determine the same legal questions which a supervising court had in reviewing actions of the trial court, namely, whether under all the facts found by the Trade Commission a case of unfair business competition was established." Curtis Pub. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 881.

One function of the Trade Commission is to discover and prohibit in the beginning practices which tend to "unfair methods of competition" but an inference from the facts as found by the commission is a question of law for the court. Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 478.

Vol. IV, p. 578, sec. 5 [D]. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 114.]

Review by Circuit Court of Appeals.—"The commission is given full power and authority to investigate, make findings of fact, and render its judgment and order in relation thereto, and before the same is carried into effect, the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals, the second highest court under the government, is to be sought by the commission, to enforce its order, and any party required by such order to cease and desist from using such method of competition may obtain a review of such order in the Circuit Court of Appeals, by filing its written petition praying therefor. The action of the Circuit Court of Appeals is final, save that when its interposition is sought by the commission, certiorari lies from its decision to the Supreme Court of the United States. The jurisdiction of the Circuit Court of Appeals to enforce, set aside, or modify orders of the commission, is exclusive. In all of the proceedings, whether before the commission or the court, the amplest provision is made for notice to and full hearing of all parties interested, and for this court, [the district court] for any of the reasons urged, to anticipate by injunction the action of the commission, and the judgment of the court charged under the law with the review thereof, would be clearly an usurpation of authority." Hurst v. Federal Trade Commission, (E. D. Va. 1920) 268 Fed. 874.

Scope of review.—As to the scope of review by the Circuit Court of Appeals it is said by that court:

"Now, it is very apparent that, where the supervisory review by the Circuit Court of Appeals, which Congress invoked, provided that that court 'shall have power to make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony and proceedings set forth in such transcript, a decree,' it is the province, and indeed the duty, of the reviewing court, to consider not merely the findings of the Commission, but the whole record, the whole proofs, and the whole proceeding, and to say, first, whether, in view of all the proofs, the limited facts found by the Commission really passed on the pertinent and decisive facts, and so warranted an injunction; and, second, if such limited facts do not reach the merits, and do not alone legally justify and warrant a decree of unfair competition and injunctive relief, then, since Congress has enacted the Circuit Courts of Appeals 'shall make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony and proceedings set forth in such transcript, a decree affirming, modifying or setting aside the order of the Commission,' it is quite clear that it is not only the province, but the duty, of the Circuit Court of Appeals, and indeed the expressed purpose of Congress that such reviewing court should itself examine the pleadings, the entire testimony and proceedings, and upon such inclusive examination determine whether the facts found by the Commission and the proofs on which the Commission made no findings, and which the court, in the absence of such finding, itself finds and determines, legally established a case of unfair business competition by the Curtis Company." Curtis Pub. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 881.

Mode of exercising power to review.—The Circuit Court of Appeals says in this connection:

"In passing this act and granting to a commission power, in a new and untested field, to issue injunctions which should stop and prohibit commerce, we are of opinion that Congress, in invoking the reviewing supervision of federal courts, experienced in review, meant that those courts should exercise that reviewing power as they had been accustomed to do it theretofore." Curtis Pub. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 881.

Constitutionality.—This section is constitutional. Hurst v. Federal Trade Commission, (E. D. Va. 1920) 268 Fed. 874.

Right to attack statute.—One cannot attack this Act on the ground that this provision violates the provision of the Fourth Amendment against "unreasonable searches and seizures," where the commission has not attempted to exercise the powers conferred by this and the following section. *National Harness Mfrs. 1918 Supp., p. 387. [Initial carrier of goods, etc.]

See also annotation under sec. 20 [K], supra, this title, p. 515.

Amendment as altering rule regarding liability for baggage.—This amendment to the Cummins Amendment did not alter the rule regarding liability for baggage. Under this act carriers may limit liability of baggage by published tariffs. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Woodbury, (1920) 254 U. S. 357, 41 Sup. Ct. 114, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (Tex. 1919) 209 S. W. 432.

Limitation of liability as to baggage.—Change made by this act in Cummins Amendment recognized and applied. Culbreth v. Martin, (1920) 179 N. C. 678, 103 S. E. 374.

Limitation must be in accordance with rules.—Even though the Interstate Commerce Commission, under the authority conferred upon it by said statute, has adopted and promulgated regulations by which such limitation of liability may be effected as to all property in interstate shipment, except ordinary live stock, and in compliance with such regulations a carrier has filed and published and put into effect its tariffs and rules for maintenance of rates dependent upon value declared in writing by the shipper or agreed upon in writing as the released value of the property, approved by said commission, it remains liable for such full actual loss, damage, or injury, in the case of any particular shipment, unless it takes from the shipper a written declaration of the value of the property, or a written agreement with him upon the released value thereof, signed by him. In such case the delivery to the shipper, of a receipt executed by the carrier, in which there is no statement of value signed by the shipper, does not relieve the latter from liability based upon full actual value, even though the rate charged for carriage of the property is the same as would have been legally charged upon the minimum value of the property, under the regulations and tariffs validly promulgated, posted, and maintained. Lindenburg v. American R. Express Co., (W. Va. 1921) 106 S. E. 884.

Extent of liability.—Under the act of Congress passed August 9, 1916, known as the "Second Cummins Amendment" to the Interstate Commerce Act, a common carrier is liable for the full actual loss, damage, or injury to ordinary live stock received by it for shipment in interstate commerce, caused by it or any connecting carrier to which it is delivered, and for such loss, damage, or injury to any other property so received, except baggage, unless, by the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission and itself, exoneration from such liability and adoption of a limited one, based upon a declared or agreed value, are effected. Lindenburg v. American R. Express Co., (W. Va. 1921) 106 Atl. 884.

Burden of negating negligence.—"The value of the hog shipped having been agreed upon by the parties, and the rate fixed in accordance with the value, it is specifically provided by the federal statute (1915-1917, 39 Stat. 1, c. 301, p. 441) that a special contract of shipment may not be made relative to certain live stock (including hogs) so as to release the carrier of any of its common-law duties, or restricting the valuation. This then leaves the carrier as an insurer, under the rule declared in A. C. L. R. R. Co. v. Rice, 169 Ala. 265, 268, 269, 52 South. 918, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1214, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 389. This rule as there stated, and which it is unnecessary for us here to repeat, places the burden upon the carrier in cases such as the one at bar of acquitting itself of negligence in case of damage to live stock received for shipment." American R. Express Co. v. Dunaway, (1920) 17 Ala. App. 649, 88 So. 60.

1920 Supp., p. 77, sec. 206 (a).

Claim affected in general.—"The statute was not intended to provide that every claim with relation to the property which had previously been in the government's possession must be brought against the United States, nor did the statute intend that the government should thus indirectly become liable for anything more than those acts for which the government should be properly responsible." The Arizona, (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 267

Fed. 598, wherein it was further said that this section was to be construed as meaning that the claim must have as a proximate cause possession and use by the government.

Suit in rem.—This section does not bar a suit in rem against a boat for salvage services. The Arizona, (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 267 Fed. 598.

Return of corporation to private ownership as affecting prior liability.—The liability of a carrier for negligence occurring while it was being operated under a lease made under Act. of Aug. 29, 1916 (9 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1095), is not affected by the return of the corporation to private ownership. Gilham v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., (1920) 179 N. C. 508, 103 S. E. 10.

The carrier may be joined in an action against the federal agent for a cause arising during federal control. Parker v. Seaboard Air line R. Co., (1921) 181 N. C. 95, 106 S. E. 755.

Substitution of agent.—"We hold that under said Transportation Act of 1920, it is proper to substitute John Barton Payne, the agent designated by the President under said section 206, paragraph (a), as defendant in this case, in lieu and in place of both the railroad company and the former Director General of Railroads. The said Act of 1920 contemplates that such agent shall be so substituted, without reference to whether the suits of the character designated, of which the suit before us is one, were pending against the railroad company, or the former Director General of Railroads, or both." Adams v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., (Mo. 1921) 229 S. W. 790. See also Kersten v. Hines, (1920) 283 Mo. 623, 223 S. W. 586.

As to the effect of the act on pending actions and the necessity of substituting the federal agent for the Director General, the court said in Hines v. Collins, (Tex. 1921) 227 S. W. 332:

"We are inclined to the opinion that it was the intention of the legislation that these suits should be prosecuted further only under the provisions of section 206 of the act. It must be remembered that the government can be sued only by its permission. So that the language authorizing the suit is naturally permissive. If in granting the privilege a particular method of proceeding is provided this would be exclusive. Commonwealth Bonding & Casualty Ins. Co. v. Bowles, 192 S. W. 612. It is the rule that general provisions are controlled and limited by more specific provisions in reference to the same subject. Section 202, in which the more general language concerning the settlement and adjustment of questions or disputes arising out of federal control was used, is in a setting of provisions dealing with other kinds of claims, and provides a separate fund for their payment. Section 206 deals specifically with the subject of litigation of this character, and provides a different fund for the payment of the judgments that might be rendered in such cases. A provision for the substitution of another agent who should represent the government in the conduct of such litigation, already instituted, would not be unconstitutional, as depriving the litigant of a vested right, as this relates merely to the remedy, and does not affect the right itself. Ettor v. City of Tacoma, 228 U. S. 148, 33 Sup. Ct. 428, 57 L. ed. 773. Even if the President might have granted authority to the agents named by him, in pursuance to the general authority conferred by sections 202 and 211 to conduct this litigation, yet it does not appear that the President and his agents, appointed in pursuance thereto, have acted under this authority. On the contrary, the President has named an agent under section 206, and the agents and attorneys who had theretofore been conducting the litigation under other authority granted before the act of February 28, 1920, are in effect denying their authority to further act for the government in this litigation. In this respect this case might be distinguished from that of the case of Keene v. Hines, supra.

"The further question then arises as to whether, since the titular defendant would be the same, before and after the substitution, it would be necessary to go through the form of substitution, including the service of process on such defendant. We confess that we have not arrived at a conclusion as to this question entirely satisfactory to ourselves. On the one hand, it appears reasonable to conclude that it was probably the purpose of the President in appointing said Walker D. Hines, as agent to conduct such litigation, to provide for the continuance of the suits then pending without a break, it being perhaps contemplated that the said agent would use the same agencies as he had theretofore employed in the defense of such litigation and proceed with the same without delay. On the other hand, a substitution of parties ordinarily requires a service of process on the party substituted in case he does not voluntarily appear. White v. Johnson, 50 Am. St. Rep. 741. It is also true that where the same person is sued in a different capacity service upon him in his new capacity is required before the suit may proceed. Henderson v. Kissam, 8 Tex. 46; Enc. of Pleading & Practice, vol. 20, p. 967. We may assume that the Director General had no personal knowledge as to the many suits that were pending at the time of the termination of federal control, and that upon his appointment as agent to conduct this litigation he could have employed different agents than those who had been theretofore representing him in his other capacity; and it may be that, in the absence of the voluntary appearance by his duly constituted agents acting for him in his new capacity, he had the right to rely upon formal substitution being made and service had in the regular way upon such agents as he might appoint to represent him, in accordance with the provisions of section 206 of the act. We reverse the case on other grounds, but suggest that it would be the safest policy, under the circumstances, to require a formal substitution of the present agent representing the government in the conduct of this litigation."

Where a judgment has been rendered against a carrier and the Director General, the agent appointed under this section will on motion be substituted. Gundlach v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1920) 172 Wis. 438, 179 N. W. 985.

Substitution in Appellate Court.—"The plaintiff, respondent in this case, in his brief here and now respectfully moves the Supreme Court to make a proper order of substitution . . . as has been repeatedly done." Such substitution was made by this court in Kersten v. Hines, 223 S. W. 586, and is not without precedent elsewhere. In Gundlach v. Railroad, (Wis.) 179 N. W. 985, said John Barton Payne, as such agent, was substituted, as sole defendant, instead of the railroad company and the federal Director General, after affirming a judgment against both of them by amending the mandate. This substitution was made on motion of the defendants in that case. But we hold that such substitution can be made on motion of either or any party to a suit of the character designated in said Transportation Act. Consequently, 'John Barton Payne, Agent designated by the President, under the Transportation Act of 1920,' is hereby substituted for the appellants, defendants below, as sole defendant and appellant in this cause." Adams v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., (Mo. 1921) 229 S. W. 790.

Waiver of notice of substitution.—In Payne v. White House Lumber Co., (Tex. 1921) 231 S. W. 417, in upholding a substitution without notice, by supplemental petition of the agent appointed under this act the court said:

"In this state, while notice or citation is ordinarily required to bring in a new party, yet such notice or citation may be waived by making an appearance, and we think under the facts of this case that the court was justified in holding that the attorney, whose names were signed to the pleadings of Hines, were in fact the attorneys representing John Barton Payne, Agent, under the Transportation Act. We take judicial notice of the fact that he was the agent for the company, some time prior to the trial of this case in the lower court, and that Hines was no longer a Director General or entitled to represent the government at that time. If Hines was dismissed from the case by the appellee in a supplemental petition, and by order of the court, it was rather a strange and anomalous, procedure for him to still remain in the Trial Court and make a complete defense to the cause of action alleged as a party to the suit, when he was no longer a party, and that John Barton Payne should then take advantage of his bills of exceptions and his objections to the testimony and to the action of the court in rendering judgment and present the very same objections to this court for review and at the same time contend that he had not made an appearance in the Trial Court. To hold that the Trial Court was not justified in treating appellant as having appeared in the court below, would be to do so in the face of almost a conclusive presumption that he had then made his appearance, and to set aside the findings of the court in the judgment that the defendant did appear by counsel and answer would be in the face of the record."

New service of process on the agent appointed under this section in a pending action is not necessary. Payne v. Stockton, (1921) 147 Ark. 598, 229 S. W. 44, wherein the court said:

"It is clear that the Transportation Act of February 28, 1920, was not intended to destroy vested rights of action, or to authorize the President or his agents to do so. The sole purpose of the act, as shown by its terms, was to provide for the designation of an agent by the President who might be served as an agent of the United States and defend suits which had arisen out of the operation of the railroads by the President. It did not purport to destroy any right of action which the claimants might have had before the Transportation Act was passed."

Dismissal as to Director General.—A judgment rendered against the Director General as well as the agent appointed under this act will be reversed as to the former. Hines v. Jordan, (Tex. 1921) 228 S. W. 633.

Venue.—"The venue of suits against the federal agent on causes of action arising out of the operation of any particular railroad by the government is that fixed by law for the prosecution of such suits on such causes of action as if they had arisen against such carrier." Payne v. Coleman, (Tex. 1921) 232 S. W. 537, holding that the federal agent could not be sued in a county where the road represented by him had no agent. It appeared in that case that goods consigned through connecting carriers to the place where suit was brought were seized before coming into the hands of the terminal carrier, and the federal agent was sued as the representative of the intermediate carriers.

Removal of action.—An action for damages for the wrongful death of an employee, on a railroad while under federal control, is removable, being one arising under the laws of the United States. Stark v. Payne, (D. C. Mont. 1921) 271 Fed. 477, wherein it was said:

"In reference to section 206a, it is permissive, and not mandatory; it relates to original jurisdiction, which it extends, and not to removal, which it does not restrict. But for it plaintiff might be constrained to sue at defendant's residence or in the federal court.

"The action is a new species of the genus of removable cases, and the law of the latter opens to include it. In legal contemplation the United States is the real defendant. The liability is imposed upon it, and it will pay any judgment against defendant. All plaintiff's right is created by federal law, though admeasured by state law. Hence the case arises under the laws of the United States, and is removable, regardless of citizenship."

In Mizell v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., (1921) 181 N. C. 36, 106 S. E. 133, it is declared that the fact that this act does not repeat the prohibition of removal contained in the act of 1918 (Fed. Stat. Ann. 1918 Supp. 757) does not give a right to remove a suit which was begun against the Director General.

1920 Supp., p. 79, sec. 206f.

Constitutionality and construction in general.—In Standley v. U. S. Railroad Administration, (N. D. Ohio 1920) 271 Fed. 794, the court holding that this section was applicable to an action for personal injuries which was barred by the state statute said that its language "admits of no other interpretation than that the period of federal control is not to be taken into account in computing the period of time within which causes of action are barred by statutes of limitation. The period of federal control thus excluded runs from and after December 31, 1917, to March 1, 1920, and, excluding this time, plaintiff's action is not barred by the four-year statute of limitations."

"Nor can any question be properly made respecting the power of Congress to enact this legislation. Plaintiff's action, it is true, was barred February 28, 1920, when this act was approved; but there is no constitutional prohibition forbidding the removal of the bar of the statute of limitations against causes of action based upon debts, claims, or personal demands, even though the bar has already attached when the act is passed. Campbell v. Holt, 115 U. S. 620, 6 Sup. Ct. 209, 29 L. ed. 483; 12 Corpus Juris, 980, § 576.

"Nor does it seem to me any question can be made as to the power of Congress to legislate upon this subject-matter. Its power so to do rests upon the same basis as its power to pass the other acts relating to the federal control of railroads."

Under its power, as a war measure, to extend the period of limitations fixed by the laws of the several states, Congress was empowered to enact this section, which is applicable to an action against an interstate carrier to recover damages for failure to furnish cars which was barred by the state statute of limitations. Wenatchee Produce Co. v. Great Northern R. Co., (E. D. Wash. 1921) 271 Fed. 784.

Period of limitation fixed by uniform bill of lading.—An action by a shipper for the loss of goods is governed by the terms of this section, where in the absence of contract between the parties, the period of limitation is fixed by the terms of the uniform bill of lading published and filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and consequently the time so fixed is extended. Lazarus v. New York Cent. R. Co., (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 271 Fed. 93.

Application of section to suits under Employers' Liability Act.—This section does not apply to suits under the federal Employers' Liability Act [8 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1208]. Jones v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (N. J. 1921) 114 Atl. 331.

1920 Supp., p. 80, sec. 208 (a).

Constitutionality.—The retention by the federal government of a measure of control over intrastate rates even after the period for full control has expired is within the war power of Congress and therefore this section is not open to objection on constitutional grounds. Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Michigan Public Utilities Commission, (E. D. Mich. 1921) 271 Fed. 319, wherein it was said:

"We cannot think that Congress exceeded its war powers in this particular. It was delivering back the railroads to their owners, saddled with burdens which made the rates of a year or two earlier quite impossible. In making this return, it was certainly proper for Congress to fix conditions which should preserve the property temporarily from the immediate destruction that would otherwise surely result; and Congress, in effect, declared that these existing rates, which had proved to be necessary during the war, were also necessary until the still existing war conditions should be materially modified. It turned over the property to the owners, and (as we are now assuming) it returned to the states the power of regulatory control, saying, only that this control must not be exercised without a fresh consideration of what would be right and proper. We are content to rest our conclusion upon this construction of the war power."

Effect on intrastate rates.—The intrastate as well as interstate rates adopted during federal control of the railroads remain in effect under this statute until changed by federal or state law or in pursuance to authority of law, and do not automatically return to the pre-control status. Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Michigan Public Utilities Commission, (E. D. Mich. 1921) 271 Fed. 319, wherein the court said:

"Prior to the taking over of federal control, a complete system of intrastate rates existed in many or all of the states, and these rates were fixed, sometimes directly by statute, and sometimes by regulatory bodies. It was recognized that these intrastate rates were within the state jurisdiction, and were not a matter of federal control, save to a degree and in contingencies not here important. Undoubtedly all these various state laws and regulations were suspended by the operation of the Federal Control Act, and, having been thus merely suspended, and not repealed, they would automatically take effect again at the end of the suspension; that is, at the termination of the federal control. Tua v. Carriere, 117 U. S. 201, 209, 6 Sup. Ct. 565, 29 L. ed. 855. If Congress, in passing the Transportation Act, intended that this automatic reversion should occur, that is the end of the matter, and the commission was right in proposing to enforce the Michigan act after September 1st; but if Congress intended otherwise, we come to further questions. The congressional intent must, therefore, be ascertained.

"To us the intent seems very clear upon the face of the statute. We take notice of the orders of the Director General and of the Interstate Commerce Commission under which, during the period between March 21, 1918, and February 29, 1920, the cost of railroad operations had enormously increased and the rates had been advanced in an effort to provide the increased cost. We take notice, also, of the general change in conditions, such that, in February, 1920, perhaps no one could have been found who would contend that it would be fair or reasonable to reduce the railroad rates to the figures prevailing before the war and leave the roads subject to the permanently fixed and greatly increased costs of operation. It would seem most natural and reasonable that the rates, both interstate and intrastate, should remain at the figures then existing until the proper authority, federal with reference to one and state with reference to the other, should have opportunity to investigate the situation as it might then exist and determine whether or not any change should occur. In apparent execution of this natural intent, we find the statute saying that the rates in effect on February 29, 1920, shall continue in force, 'until thereafter changed by state or federal authority, respectively, or pursuant to authority of law,' and then providing that in no event shall the rates be reduced before September 1, 1920, unless with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It would be a strained construction of language to say that the mere automatic reversion to the pre-control status, which would have occurred on February 29, if the Transportation Act had made no inconsistent provision, is that change, subsequent to February 29, which the act contemplates when it speaks of 'thereafter changed.'"

Co. v. Public Service Commission, (N. D. N. Y. 1920) 268 Fed. 558, wherein the court said:

"The case turns entirely upon the construction of this section. It clearly authorizes the states to change the existing federal rates as to intrastate carriage on and after March 1, 1920, except that they cannot reduce those rates before September 1, 1920, without the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The continuance of the federal rates for 6 months from March 1, 1920, was coincident with the government's guaranty of just compensation to the railroads for this period provided in section 209, and is a protection to the government.

"Congress was legislating for 48 states, some of which we suppose had not fixed intrastate rates by legislation or by administrative commissions, and therefore it was provided that the change of the federal rates should be made by 'state authority' or 'pursuant to authority of law.' When a state law existed regulating the rates the Federal Control Act did not repeal, but merely suspended, that law. Upon the termination of federal control the state law continues to control the rates ex proprio vigore. See the very analogous situation discussed in Tua v. Carriere, 117 U. S. 201, 6 Sup. Ct. 565, 29 L. ed. 855, and Butler v. Goreley, 146 U. S. 303, 13 Sup. Ct. 84, 36 L. ed. 981.

"It seems to us incredible that Congress could have intended to require a state which had enacted such a law to express its intention to continue its established rates by enacting a new law in the same terms. Section 48 of the Public Service Commissions Law of the state of New York (Consol. Laws, c. 48) authorizes the commission to investigate of its own motion any act done or omitted to be done by a railroad corporation 'in violation of any provision of law.' If, as we hold, the existing legislation of the state of New York will change the federal rates by restoring the state's rate on and after September 1, then the plaintiff was bound to file with the Public Service Commission an amended tariff in accordance therewith on or before August 1. It was this which the order complained of required the plaintiff to do, and the plaintiff refuses and has omitted to do so in violation of law.

"We are told that the case is one of great importance, will go to the Supreme Court, and that no time should be lost; therefore, without saying more, the motion is denied."

State statute enacted during federal control.—A state statute passed during the period of federal control, but containing a provision suspending its operation until after the period of federal control, stands on the same footing as a statute regulating rates enacted prior to federal control and therefore does not automatically go into effect after the cessation of federal control without further change as provided by this section. Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Michigan Public Utilities Commission, (E. D. Mich 1921) 271 Fed. 319.

1920 Supp., p. 87, sec. 211.

The Director General of Railroads appointed pursuant to this section, clothed with all the powers and duties conferred or imposed on the President except the powers and duties specially reserved under section 206 is the proper party plaintiff in actions or suits to recover on causes of action accruing to the United States during the period of federal control. The practice adopted and followed and approved under the Federal Control Act of March 21, 1918 (1918 Supp. p. 757), of bringing these actions in the name of or against the Director General is equally proper under this section. Hines v. Struthers Furnace Co., (N. D. Ohio 1920) 271 Fed. 792.

1920 Supp., p. 88, sec. 302.

Effect on boards created by prior act.—This section did not continue the existence of a board of adjustment appointed under section 3 of the Federal Control Act of 1918 (Fed. St. Ann. 1918 Supp. 760). Gregg v. Starks, (1920) 188 Ky. 834, 224 S. W. 459.

1920 Supp., p. 88, sec. 303.

Controversies within act.—It was not the intention of Congress by this act to provide for the trial by a board of adjustment of a controversy between two conductors as to their rights of seniority, and a state court has jurisdiction of such a controversy. Gregg v. Starks, (1920) 188 Ky. 834, 224 S. W. 459.

1920 Supp., p. 89, sec. 307.

The reasonableness of wages of employees of a railroad in the hands of a receiver is subject to the jurisdiction of the United States Labor Board, though the question of the ability of the receiver to pay the established wages is within the jurisdiction of the court. Birmingham Trust, etc., Co. v. Atlanta, etc., R. Co., (N. D. Ga. 1921) 271 Fed. 731, wherein it was said: "Receivers are not expressly mentioned in the portion of the Transportation Act establishing the Labor Board, but its definition of the carriers dealt with as including 'any carrier by railroad, subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, except a street, interurban, or suburban electric railway not operating as a part of a general steam railroad system of transportation' (41 Stat. 469), is sufficiently broad to cover a receiver operating an interstate railroad. See United States v. Nixon, 235 U. S. 231, 35 Sup. Ct. 49, 59 L. Ed. 207. Many questions touching terms and conditions of railroad employment, in view of the superior information and wider experience of the Labor Board on such questions, might be better handled by it than by the court, and no objection is seen to a receiver submitting such to the board, with the approval of the court.

"But where, as is the case here, there is no dispute as to conditions of employment, nor as to the just and reasonable wage normally to be paid, but only a question as to the ability of the receiver to pay the wage that has been established, without violating the Constitution, it is not seen how a decision of the Labor Board would be helpful. Not only are the purse strings of the receivership in the hands of the court, but the interpretation and application of the Constitution is the function of the court as against all boards and commissions, and the court cannot abdicate that function. Its decision upon the question indicated is the only ultimately effectual decision, and to seek that of another tribunal would be barren of practical result. Questions between a receiver and his employees do not ordinarily involve matters of normal railroad operation or abstract desirability, but are always complicated by the peculiar condition of the business in his hands and are limited to short periods of readjustment. Frequently the expense and delay of seeking an advisory decision from a Labor Board would be disastrous in the exigencies of the receivership."

Failure of receiver to comply with order as to wages.—Where a carrier is in the hands of a receiver and its earnings are insufficient to pay the wages established by the Railroad Labor Board, and unable to obtain by loans the money necessary to comply with its order, the receiver is not subject to punishment under this section for failure to comply with the order. To require the carrier to continue in business at a loss is beyond the power of Congress or a state. St. Louis Union Trust Co. v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., (E. D. Ark. 1921) 270 Fed. 796.

1920 Supp., p. 95, sec. 400, subd. (4). [Duty of carriers, etc.]

Section as declaratory of common law.—The provision in this section requiring the carrier to provide and furnish transportation on reasonable request is merely declaratory of the common law rule concerning the duty of common carriers. Lucking v. Detroit, etc., Nav. Co., (E. D. Mich. 1921) 273 Fed. 577.

1920 Supp., p. 96, sec. 402, subd. (12). [Distribution of coal cars.]

Purpose and effect of act.—In Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Lambert Run Coal Co., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 776, the court said: "We cannot doubt that by subdivision 12 of section 402 the Congress clearly expressed the intention to abolish all preference to mines furnishing railroad fuel coal under the assigned car rule in periods of ordinary car shortage. The count of each and every car required is not a mere independent futile enumeration, but a count of each and every car furnished or used against the mine, to the end that there should be proportional distribution of all available coal cars, resulting in fair and equal opportunity to each mine on the basis of its rating. Before the enactment of the statute the matter had been controlled by rules, regulations, and practices made by railroads, or the government railroad administration, which had been the subject of much controversy. Evidently the Congress, having in view this controversy, after full consideration settled the matter by an imperative enactment against the assigned car rule in times of ordinary coal car shortage."

The real purpose of paragraph 12 was to carry into the statute what had been a requirement of the Interstate Commerce Commission; that is, that each car must be counted against the mine to which assigned, in determining whether the assigned cars equal or exceed the distributive share of such mine. Corona Coal Co. v. Southern R. Co., (N. D. Ala. 1920) 266 Fed. 726, wherein it was further said: "In considering the effect and scope of this paragraph, the high and comprehensive administrative powers and duties of the Interstate Commerce Commission must not be forgotten; and it is well to remember that the acts of Congress furnish repeated evidence of a legislative policy to broaden and add to, rather than to narrow and subtract from, the powers and useful work of the commission. Again it is to be borne in mind that the Supreme Court of the United States has often, in interpreting the Interstate Commerce Act (24 Stat. 379) and the amendments thereto, given judicial recognition of this legislative policy."

"I think the paragraph 12 quoted should be considered and construed in the light of this knowledge, as well as in pari materia with the other related sections of the Interstate Commerce Law."

"Apply just and reasonable ratings."—"The origin and history of the phrase 'apply just and reasonable ratings of such mines and to count each and every car furnished to or used by any such mines for transportation of coal against the mines,' shows the reason for its adoption by the commission and its incorporation afterwards into the statute. Congress knew that at one time assigned cars were not taken into account in the distribution by the carriers to mines served by them, and that the mines receiving assigned cars were given the same pro rata share of the ordinary commercial cars as were given to the mines that received no assigned cars, and that the assigned cars were not counted against the mines favored with them. In the Hocking Valley Case, 12 Interst. Com. R. 396, and in the Traer Case, 13 Interst. Com. R. 451, this practice was complained of and held to be unjust and not to be allowed. When the question came before the Supreme Court of the United States, the decision was upheld in I. C. v. Ill. C. R. R. Co., 215 U. S. 452, 30 Sup. Ct. 155, 54 L. Ed. 280. It is well to read the opinion in the Traer Case, rendered by Commissioner Clark, now Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It may be ventured that Congress did not intend to change the meaning of the phrase "count against the mine," or to enlarge the scope of the rule which is referred to in the Ill. C. R. R. Case, supra, and the Morrisdale Coal Co. Case, supra.

"In the argument of this case the statement of Commissioner Clark made before the House committee on interstate and foreign commerce, when it had under consideration the Each-Cummins Bill, which put into statutory law the rule found in paragraph 12 hereinbefore referred to, was read to me, and at the same time the pertinent part of the report of the House committee was stated. Undoubtedly this report shows that the House committee understood what the language, 'and to count each and every car furnished to or used by such mines for transportation of coal against the mine,' meant and gave legislative sanction, so far as it could, to the application of this rule theretofore adopted by the commission and approved by the courts; and from the hearings of the committee and its report it is evident that it was not intended to say assigned cars should in any event be prorated among the mines." Corona Coal Co. v. Southern R. Co., (N. D. Ala. 1920) 266 Fed. 726.

"To count each and every."—"Prior to the amendment of the Interstate Commerce Law by the insertion in paragraph 12 of the words "and to count each and every car furnished to or used by any such mine for transportation of coal against the mine," this rule, now statutory, had been by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission a rule of long standing for the government of railroads, and it had been often sanctioned by the courts in adjudicated cases. So it can be said that this approved rule, in effect already law, was by the Transportation Act of 1920 merely crystallized into statutory form." Corona Coal Co. v. Southern R. Co., (N. D. Ala. 1920) 266 Fed. 726.

Estoppel to assert unconstitutionality.—A plaintiff who claims the benefits of this act cannot at the same time assert the unconstitutionality of limitations contained in it. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Lambert Run Coal Co., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 776.

Complaint as to practice in delivering assigned cars as question for commission.—Where the issue between the parties was on account of the practice pursued by the defendant in respect to "assigned cars;" that is to say, the defendant delivered its own cars to mines with which it had contracts for fuel for its own use, and delivered the cars belonging to other railroads and privately owned cars committed to it for transportation to mines with which said other railroads and owners have contracts for fuel, and it was established that such cars were counted against the distributive share of the mines to which assigned, and that such mines were not given a share of the cars available for ordinary commercial shipments, unless, and to the extent only, that the assigned cars fail to equal the distributive share of these mines, which receive the assigned cars, it was held that the plaintiff's grievance should have been taken to the Interstate Commerce Commission and that the District Court was without jurisdiction. Corona Coal Co. v. Southern R. Co., (N. D. Ala. 1920) 266 Fed. 726.

Opinions of Interstate Commerce Commission as binding.—"It must be said that the opinion of the Interstate Commerce Commission in giving the working construction of the Interstate Commerce Act and its amendments, while not binding upon the court, is nevertheless deserving of serious and deferential consideration." Corona Coal Co. v. Southern R. Co., (N. D. Ala. 1920) 266 Fed. 726.

1920 Supp., p. 97, sec. 402, subd. (15). [Shortage of equipment, etc.]

Construction of statute generally.—"The Congress has not, however, conferred on coal mines equality among themselves—the right of each mine in time of coal car shortage to be furnished cars in proportion to mine ratings, without regard to the public welfare and safety. Coal is a public necessity. From many causes, crises and emergencies may arise in mine operation, transportation, and unexpected needs of the public, which cannot be anticipated and justly provided for by inelastic legislative enactment. It would be strange indeed if the Congress had guarded the private interests of the mines by an inflexible exactment of equality, lodging nowhere the power to relieve the public against unforeseen conditions which would make rigid proportionate distribution of cars disastrous to the country or to some portion of it. This would be to confer benefits on individuals at the sacrifice of the public safety and welfare.

"We think the Congress has clearly conferred on the commission the power to grant relief in such conditions, by providing—

"Whenever the commission is of opinion that shortage of equipment, congestion of traffic or other emergency requiring immediate action exists in any section of the country the commission shall have and is hereby given authority * * * (d) to give directions for preference or priority in transportation, embargoes or movement of traffic under permits at such time and for such periods as it may determine and to modify, change, suspend or annul them."

"The true construction required by the spirit and the letter of the statute is this: Subdivision 12 provides for equality among coal mines in proportion to ratings, in time of the usual long-existing car shortage. But, recognizing the necessity of a degree of flexibility, the Congress conferred upon the commission power, in case of a car shortage which in their opinion was so much beyond the usual as to constitute an emergency, to supplant or modify equality among the mines according to ratings, with preference and priority to such extent as will in its opinion meet the emergency.

"All the specific provisions of the statute for equality among designated classes is thus modified by the general provision for their suspension by the commission when they find an emergency requiring it." Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Lambert Run Coal Co., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 776.

Extent of authority given to suspend rules, etc.—"The authority given to the commission by (a) subdivision 15 in cases of emergency 'to suspend the operation of any or all rules, regulations or practices then established with respect to car service' does not extend to the suspension of a positive and definite enactment of the statute covering the subject. Rules, regulations, and practices mean the rules, regulations, and practices adopted by the commission or by the railroads in conformity to the act, or not forbidden by it, in contradistinction to the definite enactments of the statute. This appears from subdivisions 11 and 14 of the same section and other portions of the statute." Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Lambert Run Coal Co., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 776.

Conclusiveness of order.—"The commission having based their order on their opinion that an emergency such as was contemplated by the statute existed, it is not within the power of the court to annul their order on the ground that the administrative power conferred on the commission was unwisely or improvidently exercised." Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Lambert Run Coal Co., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 776.

Enjoining execution of order.—The execution of an order made by the commission under this section can be enjoined only by three judges, one of them being a circuit judge, after a notice to the commission and to the attorney-general. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Lambert Run Coal Co., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 776.

1920 Supp., p. 98, sec. 402, subd. (18). [New and extended lines, etc.]

Right to discontinue carriage by water.—The right of a carrier by water to discontinue its service does not seem to be prohibited by this provision. As to the right of such a carrier to thus act it has been said: "Is there, then, any statutory provision which prevents the defendant from exercising the right, which it otherwise has, to withdraw from the business in which it has been engaged, to the extent which it deems necessary or desirable? Plaintiff invokes the fourth subdivision of the first section of the Interstate Commerce Act, hereinbefore quoted, to the effect that:

"It shall be the duty of every common carrier subject to this act, engaged in the transportation of passengers or property, to provide and furnish such transportation upon reasonable request therefor."

"This language is merely declaratory of the common-law rule governing the duty of common carriers. 10 Corpus Juris, 66. It is to be observed that the provision in question applies to common carriers subject to the act 'engaged in the transportation' of passengers or property, and the obligation referred to is the duty 'to provide and furnish such transportation upon reasonable request therefor.' It is clear that the meaning and effect of this language is that a common carrier, subject to the act, which is actually engaged in transporting passengers or freight must receive and carry such passengers or freight as may be offered to it, without discrimination, and in the performance of the duty under which it rests so long as it holds itself out as a carrier of such passengers or freight to provide the necessary facilities and equipment for 'such transportation,' provided that 'reasonable request' is made therefor.

"There is nothing in this or any other section of the statute which prevents a common carrier, such as the defendant, from disengaging itself from the transportation of passengers or freight between particular points, or which makes it the duty of such a carrier to furnish such transportation if it is not actually 'engaged in' in the business of furnishing any transportation between such points. If in the present case the grievance of the plaintiff were that the defendant, while engaged in transporting passengers and freight over its so-called Detroit and Mackinac route, refused or failed to furnish adequate facilities or equipment for such transportation, the claim of plaintiff for proper relief from such a situation, on the ground that the defendant was violating a duty created or expressed in the language just quoted, would not be without force. The situation, however, actually presented, is quite different. To the extent that defendant discontinues the furnishing of any transportation over one of its routes, to that extent it ceases to be engaged as a common carrier in transportation, or subject to the obligation referred to in this portion of the statute. Considering the right which a carrier such as defendant has at common law to abandon entirely one or more routes for the operation of its vessels, an intention on the part of Congress to take away such right, and impose on such a carrier the duty resting upon a carrier by railroads in this respect, cannot be deduced from language which falls so far short of expressing such an intention as does the provision now under consideration. It would have been easy to have expressed such a purpose, and it must be assumed that if Congress had intended to create such an obligation, in derogation of the common-law rule applicable, it would have done so in appropriate terms.

"The conclusion, moreover, that it was not intended by the Interstate Commerce Act to impose upon such a carrier the obligation mentioned, is strengthened and confirmed by the provision in the eighteenth subdivision of section 1 of the act to the effect that:

"No carrier by railroad subject to this act shall abandon all or any portion of a line of railroad, or the operation thereof, unless and until there shall first have been obtained from the Commission a certificate that the present or future public convenience and necessity permit of such abandonment."

"In this part of the statute, Congress has legislated upon the subject of the abandonment of existing lines of transportation, and in so doing it has expressly imposed the limitations created, not upon 'every common carrier subject to this act,' as in other sections and clauses of the statute, but only upon a 'carrier by railroad subject to this act.' 'Expressio unius exclusio alterius.' The express imposition of this obligation upon common carriers by railroad evidences, in my opinion, an intention to exclude from the burden thereof every other common carrier. But, however this may be, I am unable to discover in any of the comprehensive terms of the statute invoked any language indicating a purpose to subject a carrier such as the defendant to the duty which plaintiff seeks to have this court enforce. Nor do I know of any statutory provision creating such an application, or any decision applying or announcing such a rule; none of the cases cited by plaintiff involving a proposed discontinuance or abandonment of a route of transportation by such a carrier. For the reasons stated, it results that the motion to dismiss the bill must be granted, and an order will be entered accordingly." Lucking v. Detroit, etc., Nav. Co., (E. D. Mich. 1921) 273 Fed. 577.

Power as to intrastate rates.—Congress has the power to legislate granting the authority to fix such intrastate rates so as to prevent undue or unreasonable advantages, prejudice, or preference between persons and localities in intrastate commerce and interstate or foreign commerce on the other hand, thus avoiding undue and unjust discrimination. Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Public Service Commission, (N. D. N. Y. 1921) 272 Fed. 758.

Order of commission as controlling.—"No local rule can nullify the lawful exercise of federal authority, and, after the Interstate Commerce Commission has made an order within its jurisdiction, there is no compulsion on the carrier to comply with any inconsistent local requirements. . . . Where state and federal views conflict, the judgment of Congress and the agencies of the government lawfully established by the laws of Congress must control." Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Public Service Commission, (N. D. N. Y. 1921) 272 Fed. 758.

Conclusiveness of findings.—The findings of the commission that certain railroads are engaged in interstate commerce are binding on the courts where they have some evidence to support them. New York v. U. S., (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 272 Fed. 768.

Findings of the Interstate Commerce Commission in respect to the reasonableness of rates are binding on the courts if they have any evidence to support them. Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Public Service Commission, (N. D. N. Y. 1921) 272 Fed. 758.

Effect of act generally.—See Thome v. Lynch, (D. C. Minn. 1921) 269 Fed. 995; State v. Fisher, (Del. 1920) 111 Atl. 432.

Effect of cessation of war.—The War-Time Prohibition Act had not become invalid in November, 1920, by reason of the cessation of the war powers of Congress as the government of the United States was still officially at war. Vincenti v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 114.

Effect of National Prohibition Act.—This act was not repealed by the National Prohibition Act (1919 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann.

Evidence.—See Ford v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 269 Fed. 609; Rose v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 245.

Prosecution by information.—Where one is charged with a violation of this act the prosecution need not necessarily be by indictment but may be by information, notwithstanding the provision in this section as to the conduct of the prosecution for the purpose of having offenders held for the action of the grand jury, the violation being a misdemeanor. U. S. v. Achen, (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 267 Fed. 595, wherein the court said: "A violation of the act is a misdemeanor, and in the absence of any intent on the part of Congress to require all prosecutions under the act to be by indictment, except as such intent may appear in the foregoing section, it does not seem to me that there is justification for holding that Congress has shown a purpose to abolish the long established practice of proceeding by information against a defendant not charged with an infamous offense. This section seems to me to be merely intended to secure the enforcement of the law by providing that the investigation of violations shall be under the direction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and prosecutions therefor conducted by the several United States attorneys." 1919 Supp., p. 203, sec. 3.

Sufficiency of information.—An information charging the maintenance of a nuisance in violation of this section is sufficient which follows the language of the statute with sufficient description to inform the defendant of the nature of the offense charged and the cause of the accusation, and with such certainty that he could prepare his defense and plead the judgment in bar of any subsequent prosecution for the same offense. Young v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 967.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain a conviction for violation of this section, see Young v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 967.

1919 Supp., p. 203, sec. 4.

Evidence necessary to issuance of injunction.—In order that a temporary injunction may be issued under this section it is sufficient that there should be a prima facie finding that illegal sales of liquor have been made at the place complained of as a nuisance, for which the defendant is now under arrest, and that illegal sales have been made at the same place since the arrest, and the further finding that the nuisance complained of exists. U. S. v. Schott, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 265 Fed. 429.

I. VOLSTEAD ACT GENERALLY

Constitutionality.—The "National Prohibition Act" is not unconstitutional as permitting the taking of private property for public use without just compensation. Feigenspan v. Bodine, (D. C. N. J. 1920) 264 Fed. 186.

Validity of 18th Amendment.—See infra, this volume, annotation to the 18th Amendment.

Act as limitation on privilege.—This act instead of granting a right is a limitation on privilege. Woods v. Seattle, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 270 Fed. 315.

Effect on state legislation.—In general.—The Volstead Act did not in view of the provision of the Eighteenth Amendment as to "concurrent power" annul previous state legislation appropriate to the enforcement of that amendment. State v. District Ct., (1920) 58 Mont. 684, 194 Pac. 308. See to the same effect Alexander v. State, (1921) 148 Ark. 491, 230 S. W. 548; Jones v. Hicks, (1920) 150 Ga. 657, 104 S. E. 771, 11 A. L. R. 1315; Scroggs v. State, (1920) 150 Ga. 753, 105 S. E. 363; Smith v. State, (1920) 150 Ga. 755, 105 S. E. 364; Shreveport v. Marx, (1920) 148 La. 31, 86 So. 602; Meriwether v. State, (1921) 125 Miss. 435, 87 So. 411; Kyzer v. State, (1921) 125 Miss. 79, 87 So. 415; State v. Fore, (1920) 180 N. C. 744, 105 S. E. 334; State v. Muse, (1921) 181 N. C. 506, 107 S. E. 320; Banks v. State, (1921) 88 Tex. Crim. 380, 227 S. W. 670; State v. Hartley, (1921) 115 S. C. 524, 106 S. E. 766; Allen v. Com., (Va. 1921) 105 S. E. 589; State v. Turner, (Wash. 1921) 196 Pac. 638; State v. Woods, (Wash. 1921) 198 Pac. 737; State v. Knosky, (W. Va. 1921) 106 S. E. 642.

This act does not invalidate a state statute prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquor which gives a different definition of intoxicating liquor and prescribes a different penalty for its sale. Franklin v. State, (1921) 88 Tex. Crim. 342, 227 S. W. 486; Ex p. Gilmore, (1921) 88 Tex. Crim. 529, 228 S. W. 199; Robert v. State, (1921) 88 Tex. Crim. 488, 228 S. W. 230; Russell v. State, (1921) 88 Tex. Crim. 582, 228 S. W. 948. And see Reece v. State, (Tex. 1921) 88 Tex. Crim. 569, 228 S. W. 562.

A state act is not invalidated by the fact that it prescribes a penalty different from that imposed by the Volstead Act. Allen v. Com., (Va. 1921) 105 S. E. 589.

Regulations more stringent than those in the federal act with respect to the manufacture and sale of intoxicants may be enacted by a state. State v. Barksdale, (1921) 181 N. C. 621, 107 S. E. 505.

Bribing police officer.—A state has the power to punish the acceptance of bribe by a police officer for agreeing not to arrest a certain person for violation of the Volstead Act. Harris v. Superior Ct., (Cal. App. 1921) 196 Pac. 895.

The Bone Dry Law of Alaska of Feb. 14, 1917, was not repealed by the National Prohibition Act. Abbate v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 735.

Effect of internal revenue regulations.—The provisions of this act cannot be extended in their scope by regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue beyond the terms of the act. Oertel Co. v. Gregory, (W. D. Ky. 1921) 270 Fed. 789, holding the following regulation to be unauthorized: "The use of the words beer, ale, or porter, and the well known synonyms for same, such as lager, bock or stout, either with or without prefixes or suffixes, is not permissible on labels for cereal beverages." The court said: "If Congress had deemed it proper to put into the Volstead or other act the language used in the new regulation, of course no objection could then have been made to it, but Congress did not do so, and in this situation the Commissioner undertook to supply what he must have supposed was a defect in the legislation. If Congress had chosen to add to the words 'beer, ale, or porter,' the words 'or any synonyms for same such a lager, bock or stout,' the regulation might have been authorized, but in the absence of those words from the act the rules plainly established by the Supreme Court make it clear that the Commissioner could not, even with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury or otherwise, add those words to those used by Congress in the legislation it enacted, and the attempt to do so must be held to have been unauthorized by law, and consequently not enforceable as against the plaintiff in this case."

Statute forbidding sale without license repealed.—In Louisiana it was held that: "Act 66 of 1902, by prohibiting the selling of intoxicating liquors without a license, implies the right of any and every person to obtain the license. Such a law, if enacted subsequent to the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment, would not be 'appropriate legislation.' It would be absolutely violative of the amendment. The statute is altogether inconsistent with the constitutional amendment, and is therefore without effect." State v. Green, (1921) 148 La. 376, 86 So. 919.

Act as affecting power of municipality.—It is held that a city has the power to regulate the possession of intoxicating liquors by action which is not in conflict with the National Prohibition Act or the laws of the state. U. S. v. Viess, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 273 Fed. 279.

Act as affecting lease of real property.—In Goldberg v. Callender, (Conn. 1921) 113 Atl. 170, a lease provided that: "It is hereby agreed that the premises herein leased shall be used only as a saloon and liquor establishment, and this instrument is conditioned upon said agreement, which shall be a condition precedent to the operation of this lease. * * * It is expressly agreed and understood by and between the parties hereto that if, at any time during the leasehold term, or any renewal thereof, the city of Hartford shall vote 'no license,' or if for any reason other than the unsuitability of the applicant a license should be refused by the county commissioners in and for Hartford county in said premises, during the leasehold term or any renewal thereof, then this lease is void at the option of said party of the second part." It was held that the lessee had the option to declare the lease void on the passage of this act, but that if he did not exercise his option, he was bound by the provisions of the lease and could not use the premises for any other purpose than that specified therein. The court said: "Suppose, for example, the General Assembly had forbidden the maintenance of saloons in theater buildings. The lessee would then have a right to vacate the premises and stop paying rent, without waiting to go through with the idle ceremony of asking the county commissioners for a license which they would have had no power to grant. The Volstead Act (41 Stat. 305), which is also a domestic statute, has superseded Gen. St. 1918, § 2731, so far as that section authorizes the county commissioners to grant licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors containing one-half of 1 per cent. or more of alcohol. If we assume that the covenant to use the premises only as a saloon and liquor establishment would not be performed, within the fair meaning of the contract, by using them for the restricted purpose of selling beverages containing less than one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol, then the Volstead Act, when it became operative on January 17, 1920, deprived the county commissioners of any power to grant a license to use the premises for the covenanted use, and also revoked the license which was then in force; and as the lessee was not bound to ask the county commissioners to do what they were forbidden by law to do, he was then entitled at his option to cancel the lease, or to keep it in force.

"On the other hand, if we assume that the use of the premises for the restricted purpose of selling beverages containing less than one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol is a performance of the covenant to use the premises as a saloon and liquor establishment, then the continued performance of the covenant has not been forbidden by law. In either case the lease is, for the purposes of this case, still in force as a contract controlling the legal rights of the parties because the lessee has not attempted to avail himself of his opinion to escape from its obligations.

"We hold that the contingency of a legal prohibition of the covenanted use was contemplated and its consequences provided for in the lease; that the revocation by the Volstead Act on January 17, 1920, of the existing license to sell intoxicating liquor containing more than one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol and the revocation of the authority of the county commissioners to grant a new license were, in legal effect, equivalent to a refusal by the county commissioners to grant a license, for a reason other than the unsuitability of the applicant; that the lessee was thereupon entitled, and within a reasonable time required, to elect whether he would declare the lease void or leave it in force, and that, having elected, notwithstanding the prohibition of the Volstead Act, to leave the lease in force, he remained bound by his covenants so far as they were legally capable of performance, and could not use the premises for a purpose for which he agreed not to use them.

"The use of the premises as a retail shoe store by the sublessees or assignees, Noll, Noll & Worden, was a breach of covenant which entitled the lessors to enter for condition broken and to retake possession of the premises."

Effect of prior conviction or acquittal in state court.—As to the effect of a prior conviction or acquittal in a state court under a state statute for the same transaction for which the defendant is indicted in the federal court under the National Prohibition Act it has been said: "Coming, now, to consider the question of the former conviction or acquittal in the state courts, I know of no decision by any authoritative tribunal. There are two cases submitted to me—the one, U. S. v. Peterson et al., (D. C.) 268 Fed. 864, where it is held that the proceedings in a state court are a complete bar to subsequent prosecutions in the federal court for the same transaction. U. S. v. Holt, (D. C.) 270 Fed. 639, is a case where the same question was presented, and the contrary conclusion reached by Judge Woodrough, in an opinion in which I fully concur, not only in the legal proposition decided, but in the practice to be followed, where it is shown that the accused has already been punished in the state courts.

"In addition to the views so well expressed by Judge Woodrough, and what has been said heretofore in this opinion, it occurs to me that something further might be said as to the meaning of the Fifth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States:

"Nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb."

"What meaning shall be given the words 'the same offense?' How shall they be construed? If the Congress can pass legislation to enforce the Prohibition Amendment, and the states may also do so, it is manifest that such legislative acts will differ—that different laws will be provided for the enforcement of the amendment, and different punishments will be imposed. It is also manifest that often the same act or transaction will violate both the federal and state provisions, so the question arises: Where the same act violates both statutes, has there been only one or more offenses committed? It will be conceded that the offender cannot be tried in the federal court for violation of the state statute, nor in the state court for the violation of the federal statute; so it appears that the offense is not the act or transaction alone, but that the act or transaction must be considered in the light of the legislative provisions and prohibitions.

"In the absence of such legislative prohibitions, the act or transaction committed would not be an offense. It is not the prohibited act, but the terms of the statute, which declares and defines the offense. It seems to me, therefore, that as each legislative entity, whether state or federal, declares its own offense, this cannot be the same offense as that provided by the other, though the same act or transaction may violate each of them, but that there are as many offenses as the legislative provisions may declare." U. S. v. Bostow, (S. D. Ala. 1921) 273 Fed. 535.

Prosecution as affected by indictment in state court.—The fact that the defendant indicted for violating the National Prohibition Act has been indicted in a state court under a state statute for the same transaction does not prevent the federal court from proceeding to try the defendant for the violation of the federal act, the offenses not being the same. U. S. v. Bostow, (S. D. Ala. 1921) 273 Fed. 535. The court said: "It is manifest in this case that the indictment in the state court which is pleaded here is based upon an offense of violating a state statute, and this court would have no power to try the defendant so charged in that indictment. It is also manifest that the indictment in this court, being based upon the National Prohibition Act, charges no offense on which this defendant could be prosecuted and convicted in the state court because no offense against the state laws is charged in the federal indictment, and no offense against the federal laws is charged in the state indictment.

"It is manifest that the federal government cannot appear in the prosecution before the state court, for it has no standing there, no federal statute being involved, and it is also manifest that the state has no right to appear in the federal court, because no state statute is involved. To hold otherwise must necessarily be to hold that, if one was prosecuted and convicted in the federal court for a transaction which violated the federal statute, and the same transaction also violated the state statute, the federal government, having prosecuted and convicted the defendant, should have the right to say that he should not be further prosecuted and put in jeopardy in any other court, and it should have and exercise the power to enjoin the state court from the prosecution of this man who has already been punished for the same act which was a violation of the federal statute. To state the proposition is to answer it. The whole question grows out of an incorrect analysis of the question."

II. CONSTITUTIONALITY AND CONSTRUCTION OF PROVISION FIXING ALCOHOLIC CONTENT.

"In so far as Congress, in aid of the general purpose of making possible the practical enforcement of prohibition, fixed a definite, maximum alcoholic content to 'nonintoxicating' beverages, it was acting clearly within its competency, and was proceeding in a way calculated to the attainment of the ultimate end in view and the successful performance of the duty imposed upon it by the constitutional amendment." U. S. v. Dodson, (S. D. Cal. 1920) 268 Fed. 397.

In Feigenspan v. Bodine, (D. C. N. J. 1920) 264 Fed. 186, the court said: "Is the definition of intoxicating liquors as 'containing one-half of 1 per centum or more of alcohol by volume which are fit for use for beverage purposes,' without basis in fact, and, therefore, arbitrary and void? It is the presence of alcohol that makes liquor intoxicating. Experts differ in their beliefs and opinions as to what quantity of alcohol will or will not produce intoxication. The effect of the same quantity upon different persons varies, depending upon a number of conditions, and defying exact definition.

"A failure to define legislatively what was intoxicating liquor would of necessity refer that question to judicial decision. This would inevitably result in a serious lack of uniformity of decision as to what constitutes intoxicating liquor. As persons are affected differently by liquor containing the same percentage of alcohol, and as in the absence of a fixed standard the effect upon the individual would most frequently control the decision, we would have conflicting decisions as to liquor drawn or poured from the same container at the same time. Such results would conduce neither to a proper enforcement of the Prohibition Amendment nor to a due respect for the administration of laws generally. Therefore, when Congress concluded, as it had a constitutional right to do, that a definition was necessary for a proper enforcement of the Prohibition Amendment, it, in determining what should be the standard, engaged in a work that necessarily involved discretion, the bounds of which were only that it should be reasonably exercised. If, in its exercise of such discretion, it determined that the proper enforcement of such prohibition required that a percentage be adopted that would certainly prevent intoxicating liquors being made and bartered, and the adopted basis or percentage has a reasonably appreciable relation to the subject-matter of the prohibition, it cannot be judicially condemned as arbitrary."

By the terms of this section nothing comes within the purview of the act except such fluids as contained an amount of alcohol over one-half of 1 per cent in the whole. Otherwise it is not intoxicating, and therefore not intended to come within any of the provisions of the Volstead Act, nor, indeed, those of the Eighteenth Amendment itself. Oertel Co. v. Gregory, (W. L. Ky. 1921) 270 Fed. 789.

1919 Supp., p. 205, sec. 2.

Search warrants to what officers issued.—One effect of this section is to grant power to issue search warrants under the limitations provided in the Espionage Act (1918 Supp. p. 128 et seq.) to other officers in addition to those named in that Act. U. S. v. Friedman, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 267 Fed. 856. See to the same effect U. S. v. Rykowski, (S. D. Ohio 1920) 267 Fed. 866.

Power of state officers to arrest without warrant.—The power of state officers to make arrests under this act exist only under Rev. St. § 1014 (2 Fed. Stat. Ann. 654) and accordingly a warrant is necessary to such an arrest. Lenski v. O'Brien, (Mo. App. 1921) 232 S. W. 235, wherein the court said:

"In our view it is apparent that the only state officers who are authorized to make arrests are those who are specifically designated in said section 1014, each of which said state officers is clothed with power to issue warrants for arrest. It is self-evident that it is not intended that the state officers mentioned in said section 1014 shall themselves do the actual arresting of the offenders, but that said officers, in their official capacity, upon proper showing 'agreeable to the usual mode of process against offenders in such state,' shall issue the necessary warrant for the arrest of any offender who shall have committed a crime or offense against the United States; and before any such state officer mentioned in said section 1014 is authorized to issue a warrant for the arrest of a person charged with the violation of any of the provisions of the National Prohibition Act of the United States, some person authorized under the law of the state where the arrest is sought to be accomplished must, agreeably to the statutes of such state, file a complaint before such authorized officer from whom the warrant is sought."

Issuance of warrant to municipal police officers.—Under this section and Rev. St. § 1014 (2 Fed. Stat. Ann. 2d ed. 654) a warrant for a violation of the Volstead Act may be issued to a municipal police officer. Harris v. Superior Ct., (Cal. App. 1921) 196 Pac. 896.

Contents of affidavit and warrant.—Whether an affidavit is filed and a warrant issued under R. S. sec. 1014, (2 Fed. Stat. Ann. 2d ed. p. 654) or under the act of June 15, 1917, (1918 Supp. p. 128, et seq.) the contents of each must be the same. U. S. v. Rykowski, (S. D. Ohio 1920) 267 Fed. 866.

1919 Supp., p. 206, sec. 3.

Constitutionality.—The provisions of this section forbidding the transportation of intoxicating liquor "except as authorized in this act" are declared to be warranted by the Eighteenth Amendment. Corneli v. Moore, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 267 Fed. 466.

This act is not unconstitutional because of the provision in this section that no person shall possess any intoxicating liquor after the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States goes into effect, except as authorized and permitted by that Act, although such intoxicating liquors were lawfully acquired before that time. Rose v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 245.

"Congress has obviously intended to prevent the use of intoxicating liquor as a leverage, and the provisions of the Volstead Act, forbidding any person to manufacture, sell, barter, transport, import, export, deliver, furnish, or possess any intoxicating liquor, except as authorized in this act, are consistent with an endeavor to make that intent effective.

clusion that the Volstead Act is valid as a war measure, even if it should be held to be

"While there seems no escape from the conclusion that the Volstead Act is valid as a war measure, even if it should be held to be an act to enforce the Eighteenth Amendment, it does not follow that the provision of section 3 against possession is unconstitutional. The amendment in question was adopted in order that the use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage might come to an end. It was within the power of Congress to adopt any reasonable means calculated to bring about the desired result. Limiting possession as the act has done will tend to such an effect." U. S. v. Murphy, (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 264 Fed. 842.

The exception in this section "is merely in keeping with, and in recognition of, other specific provisions in the act permitting the manufacture, sale, possession, etc., of 'intoxicating liquor' for certain nonbeverage purposes, such as sacramental, medicinal, etc., and for its possession in private dwellings only (title 2, § 25) for beverage purposes. It is in no wise inconsistent with, or counter to, the general purpose of the act." U. S. v. Dodson, (S. D. Cal. 1920) 268 Fed. 397.

Purpose as preventing use of liquors for beverage purposes.—The chief purpose of the framers of the Volstead Act was to reduce and as far as possible to prevent the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage. U. S. v. Turner, (W. D. Va. 1920) 266 Fed. 248; U. S. v. Masters, (M. D. Pa. 1920) 267 Fed. 581; Street v. Lincoln Safe Deposit Co., (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 267 Fed. 706; Ledbetter v. Bailey, (W. D. N. C. 1921) 274 Fed. 375; Kelly v. Lewellyn, (W. D. Pa. 1921) 274 Fed. 108.

"If anything is well settled and determined, it is that the Volstead Law, enacted pursuant to, and in consequence of, the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution, was intended and calculated by Congress, and by those interested in its passage, to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and transportation, for beverage purposes, of any and every kind of intoxicating liquor within the United States; and Congress expressly defined such 'intoxicating liquor' to be any spirituous, vinous, malt or fermented liquor or liquid 'fit for use for beverage purposes' containing alcohol to the extent of 'one-half of one per cent. or more' by volume. Volstead Law, tit. 2, § 1. So that by this law, which was enacted after much consideration of the circumstances and of the obvious intent and purpose of the people of the United States, as reflected by their ratification of the amendment, it was definitely and positively determined that any liquor or liquid, fit for use as a beverage, and possessing alcohol in excess of the maximum mentioned, might not be manufactured, sold, or transported in the United States. Even its mere possession was similarly prohibited, save under exceptional, severely necessary, and obviously harmless circumstances.

"This conclusion results, not only from the reading of the act in its entirety, looking at the big purpose in view and the means to be employed to gain the end sought, but also from the language of section 3 of title 2, the controlling section of the act, which is to the effect that:

"No person shall on or after the date when the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States goes into effect, manufacture, sell, barter, transport, import, export, deliver, furnish or possess any intoxicating liquor, except as authorized in this Act, and all the provisions of this Act shall be liberally construed to the end that the use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage may be prevented."

"Here, in unequivocal language, we have a declaration on the part of Congress that, however this act may be viewed, and tested by every means known to those whose duty and function it is to construe statutes, in every instance the statute 'shall be liberally construed to the end that the use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage may be prevented.' Nothing can be plainer than that, and it seems to me that Congress there, as it might properly do, has said that the courts shall not seek to construe the statute so as to permit the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, but that they shall use all reasonable means to construe it so as to prevent such use." U. S. v. Dodson, (S. D. Cal. 1920) 269 Fed. 397.

The primary object of the Prohibition Act is the prevention of the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, although it retains features of a revenue law. To effectuate that purpose the statute requires that all of its provisions shall be liberally construed. U. S. v. Saccin Rouhana Farhat, (S. D. Ohio 1920) 269 Fed. 33.

"It is apparent from the provisions of this act that intoxicating liquor may be imported for nonbeverage purposes. It is likewise manifest that the provisions of this act shall not in any way interfere with the operation of existing law, except where it is inconsistent, and the act expressly provides that persons shall not be relieved from any taxes or other charges imposed upon the traffic in such liquor." The Goodhope, (W. D. Wash. 1920) 268 Fed. 694.

Offenses under act.—Manufacturing intoxicating liquor without a permit; failing to make a permanent record of such liquor; and possession of property designed to manufacture liquor intended for use in violation of this act are separate offenses. Ex p. Poole, (D. C. Mont. 1921) 273 Fed. 623.

"Provisions of this act shall be liberally construed."—"If it were conceded . . . that the provision in section 3 that the act shall be liberally construed, to the end that the use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage may be prevented, is in excess of legislative power, that would by no means require a court to hold that the entire act is unconstitutional. That provision is but an inconsequential part of the entire act. Therefore, if, in the opinion of the court, Congress has no power to direct that an act penal in its nature shall be liberally construed, the advice will be wholly disregarded, and the essential parts of the statute, which clearly would have been enacted by Congress, regardless of whether this part is or is not constitutional, construed and applied in accordance with the established rules for the construction and application of penal law." Rose v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 245.

The liberal construction provided for in this section does not justify the court in extending the prohibited provisions of the act beyond what is plainly stated, nor omitting language which would change its plain meaning. U. S. v. Crossen, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 264 Fed. 459.

Under the provision in this section that "all provisions of this act shall be liberally construed to the end that the use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage may be prevented," it has been held that the delivery to an individual of whisky owned by him and stored in a bonded warehouse may be properly refused. Corneli v. Moore, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 267 Fed. 456, dismissing a bill in equity, praying for a decree compelling defendant, as collector of the internal revenue for the first district of Missouri, to accept the internal revenue taxes on a certain barrel of whisky, owned by complainant, and contained in a bonded warehouse of the United States, and to deliver this whisky to complainant.

Prosecution by information.—Violations of this act may be prosecuted by information, but an application by the government for leave to file an information against a defendant for such a violation will be denied where it appears that the government has failed to show probable cause of his guilt and that the only evidence which it can offer has been obtained as a result of an unlawful search in violation of the defendant's rights under the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution. U. S. v. Quaritius, (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 267 Fed. 227.

The district court has power to permit an information to be filed although the proceeding was instituted by a commissioner. U. S. v. Metzger, (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 270 Fed. 291.

Sufficiency of indictment.—An indictment charging a violation of section 16 of the Act of Feb. 8, 1875 (3 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) p. 1053), which is repealed by the National Prohibition Act, has been sustained as sufficient to charge a sale in violation of this section, it being declared that an allegation contained in the indictment respecting the omission to pay the special tax may, with propriety, be treated as surplusage.

Farley v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 269 Fed. 721.

An indictment charging the defendants with conspiring to commit the offense of knowingly, wilfully and unlawfully transporting, selling, bartering, furnishing and possessing intoxicating liquors in violation of this act is sufficient, though it does not allege that the liquor, the transportation of which was the object of the conspiracy was not to be used for nonbeverage purposes. Davis v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 928.

Sufficiency of plea.—Where an information charges the unlawful manufacture and possession of distilled spirits and from the defendants' plea it appears that they have complied with the National Prohibition Act by having a still registered and obtaining a permit to operate a dealcoholizing plant, and there is no charge that any of the prohibited articles were knowingly sold, the provisions of sections 4 and 5 of the National Prohibition Act are applicable, and a demurrer to the plea should be overruled. U. S. v. Mozzone, (W. D. Wash. 1920) 268 Fed. 652.

Evidence.—Under an indictment for violation of this act it is not necessary to prove that the defendant was engaged in the business of a retail liquor dealer, it being sufficient to show that he sold liquor in any quantity. Farley v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 269 Fed. 721.

Where a person has been arrested for intoxication, whisky obtained on a search of his person is not obtained by "unreasonable search" and is admissible in evidence on a prosecution against him for a violation of this section. U. S. v. Murphy, (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 264 Fed. 842.

For evidence held sufficient to sustain a conviction for a violation of this section, see Rose v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 245.

Acts of officers as entrapment.—In Farley v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 269 Fed. 721, where all that the officers did was to go to the tavern, and while at their meals order the waiter to serve them with some cough syrup, which was understood to be whisky, and they were served accordingly with drinks in small glasses and the officers had nothing to do with furnishing the whisky; their only purpose being to ascertain whether or not the defendant was dealing in or dispensing drinks of the kind to his customers, it was held that such deportment on the part of the officers does not constitute an entrapment that relieves the defendant from guilt. Farley v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 269 Fed. 721.

1919 Supp., p. 206, sec. 4.

"Preserved sweet cider"—Definition.—"Preserved sweet cider has been defined as cider which has not fermented; cider which is devoid of alcoholic content coming from fermentation—but also that it must be “preserved”; it must be cider to which some preservative, in the nature of heat or otherwise, has been applied, contributed in sufficient quantity to insure that its sweetness and its nonfermented, nonalcoholic state may be maintained. In other words, it must not only be “sweet cider,” within the meaning to be accorded to that term, as defined by authorities; it must be “preserved” sweet cider. Or, to phrase it still more simply, “preserved sweet cider,” under the accepted definition, is cider without alcohol, and in which the possibility of the natural development of alcohol has been prevented, through the use of some sort of preservative. U. S. v. Dodson, (S. D. Cal. 1920) 268 Fed. 397.

Manufacture and sale of.—As to liability under this Act for the manufacture and sale of “preserved sweet cider” it has been said in a case of an information charging the sale of cider having an alcoholic content in excess of that allowed by law:

“If, then, the thing actually manufactured and sold by defendant at wholesale was ‘preserved sweet cider,’ in virtue of the positive language of section 4, notwithstanding it might possibly develop, through the usual processes of fermentation, an alcoholic content in excess of the amount allowed by law, it was not at that time, or at any time thereafter, to be construed to be subject to the penal provisions of the Volstead Law. Parenthetically, however, if at the time of its manufacture and distribution by the defendant, it was merely ‘nonintoxicating,’ because below the prohibited alcoholic content, yet was not in fact ‘preserved sweet cider,’ and it afterwards developed the proscribed alcoholic content—in the language of the statute, ‘acquired a kick’—its subsequent sale would render the vender liable to all the provisions of the act respecting an unlawful marketing of a prohibited article, viz. ‘intoxicating liquor.’” U. S. v. Dodson, (S. D. Cal. 1920) 268 Fed. 397.

Effect of treatment with benzoate of soda.—The fact that cider has been treated with benzoate of soda and as thus treated is known in the trade as “preserved sweet cider” does not, in face of the prohibitory provisions of this Act, make it still vendible and possessable, irrespective of its actual alcoholic content and intoxicative effect. U. S. v. Dodson, (S. D. Cal. 1920) 268 Fed. 397.

The unadulterated juice of apples preserved by the addition of one tenth of one per cent of benzoate of soda has been held to come within the exception in this section of “preserved sweet cider.” Hildick Apple Juice Co. v. Williams, (S. D. N. P. 1920) 269 Fed. 184.

Proof of alcoholic content.—On prosecution for selling cider in violation of this act the government is not required to show that the defendant knew that the cider contained alcohol in excess of one half of one per cent by volume. U. S. v. Mathie, (S. D. Cal. 1921) 274 Fed. 225, wherein the court said:

“Any person who sells cider as a beverage does so at his peril. He must know that he is not violating the law. He must know that the cider contains less than one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol by volume. This is the only way the act could be enforced against persons selling cider containing more than one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol by volume.”

1919 Supp., p. 207, sec. 6.

Possession of permit as prerequisite to removal of whisky from bonded warehouse.—Injunction does not lie to compel a collector of internal revenue to accept taxes on, affix thereto and cancel the proper internal revenue stamps, and to deliver to plaintiff possession of whisky stored in a bonded government warehouse, and belonging to him, but in the custody of the collector, where the plaintiff is without a permit required by this section. Corneli v. Moore, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 993.

Application of this section and R. S. sec. 3296 to same transaction.—Both this section and R. S. sec. 3296 (4 Fed Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 57) may in some cases apply to the same transaction. “There is no constitutional objection to making one act or one transaction a violation of two statutes, although both emanate from the same sovereignty, if each offense embraces an element not embraced in the other.” U. S. v. Turner, (W. D. Va. 1920) 266 Fed. 248.

Power of commissioner.—While the commissioner is given authority under this section to prescribe the forms of permits and applications for the same he cannot evade the plain provisions of this act in exercising this authority. U. S. v. Masters, (M. D. Pa. 1920) 267 Fed. 581.

Contents of permit.—A permit issued to a person under this section should set forth fully and in detail what he may do, and when and where such acts may be performed, in order that the government and its agents may at all times be informed of his doings, and, if desirable, to supervise and inspect his conduct, so as to ascertain whether the law is being respected. In other words, whatever is done shall be done openly and with knowledge. U. S. v. Masters, (M. D. Pa. 1920) 267 Fed. 581.

Conviction for manufacturing whisky as bar to prosecution under revenue law.—A conviction under this section for manufacturing whisky without a permit does not bar a prosecution for violation of sections 3258, 3260 and 3279 of the revenue law. U. S. v. Sacein Roubana Farhat, (S. D. Ohio 1920) 269 Fed. 33.

Conviction in state court for transporting liquor as bar.—A conviction in a state court for unlawfully transporting liquor within the limits of that state is not a bar to a prosecution under this section for transporting liquor without permission from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, on the ground that the defendant being twice put in jeopardy, though both prosecutions involve the same act. U. S. v. Regan, (D. C. N. H. 1921) 273 Fed. 727.

1919 Supp., p. 210, sec. 10.

Seizure of books and papers.—The right to inspect does not give the right to seize books and papers. U. S. v. Kraus, (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 270 Fed. 578.

1919 Supp., p. 212, sec. 21.

Constitutionality.—This provision is constitutional. U. S. v. Cohen, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 420.

"Sold, kept, or bartered."— "Congress, by the use of the words 'sold, kept, or bartered' in violation of law, meant either habitually, or continuously, or recurrently so sold, kept, or bartered. . . . A single sale, without more, and with no evidence of the continuation or recurrence of law violation, or of facts strongly indicating either habitual sales, or long-continued violations, or such a recurrence of unlawful acts or sales to colorably indicate that the criminal prosecutions and penalties provided by other parts of the act are inadequate to cope with the situation, would constitute a nuisance or warrant the interference of a court of equity by injunction; for in such case it is not the crime of selling liquor, or selling a single drink of liquor, by a given person, at a given place, which constitutes the nuisance, but it is the maintenance and use of the room, house, or place as a situs for the doing thereof of unlawful or criminal acts, which constitute the nuisance.

"If the Volstead Act is construed to mean that a single sale is sufficient to constitute a nuisance, I should seriously question its validity, for upon such a view we are met by the rule which forbids equity taking jurisdiction where an adequate remedy at law exists, as also the rule that even Congress may not say a thing is a common nuisance, when in fact it is not." U. S. v. Cohen, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 420.

The word "kept" as used in this section refers to keeping for sale or for other commercial purpose. U. S. v. One Cadillac Touring Car, (E. D. Mich. 1921) 274 Fed. 470.

Meaning of nuisance.—Congress in using the word nuisance in this act must be deemed to have used the word in its usual and ordinary legal significance, and to have had in mind that it could not pass a law which had the effect to wipe out the constitutional rights of the citizen in private property. U. S. v. Cohen, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 420.

Knowledge of sale.—On a prosecution under this section for maintaining a common nuisance where the evidence shows ownership of the premises and of the liquors in the defendant and that there was a nuisance maintained on the premises, it is not necessary to prove that the defendant knew of sales being made or that he profited by the particular sale or sales complained of. Wiggins v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 41.

Admissions as to ownership.—For the purpose of showing ownership evidence is admissible of admissions made by the defendant to the officers that he was owner of the premises and of the liquors seized. Wiggins v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 41. The court said:

"The defendant made statements to other officers admitting ownership of the liquors and his desire to keep the liquors which had been seized. The admissions of a defendant, made voluntarily, and not impeached as having been made involuntarily, are strong evidence of the truth of what they purport to say."

An automobile seized while illegally transporting liquor is not subject to forfeiture as a common nuisance under this section, as being a vehicle in which intoxicating liquor is "kept." U. S. v. One Cadillac Touring Car, (E. D. Mich. 1921) 274 Fed. 470.

1919 Supp., p. 212, sec. 22.

Constitutionality.—This section is constitutional. U. S. v. Cohen, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 420, wherein it was said that the contentions that provisions of this section invade the police powers of the state, "and that, since no phase of interstate commerce is involved, the plaintiff has no standing and the federal court no jurisdiction, may be considered together, and disallowed almost out of hand, under the doctrine announced by the Supreme Court in the case of Rhode Island v. Palmer, 253 U. S. 350, 40 Sup. Ct. 486, 64 L. ed. —. It may be conceded that the provisions of the Volstead Act, in so far as they provide for the exercise of police powers by the Congress, would have been unwarranted and unconstitutional before the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment; but one of the chief things accomplished by that amendment was, as to the manufacture, transportation, and traffic in intoxicating liquor, to confer police powers on Congress, and to extend those powers into the territories of the several states." U. S. v. Cohen, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 420.

Right to jury trial.—It has been held that defendants are not entitled to a trial by a jury either upon a hearing of a suit to abate and enjoin, or upon a trial of any contempt which may grow out of a violation of any injunction which may be granted. U. S. v. Cohen, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 420.

Although the affidavits may be insufficient as a matter of law to warrant a temporary injunction a motion to dismiss should not be sustained where the bill is sufficient to justify the issuance of an injunction after a final hearing. U. S. v. Cohen, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 420. The court further said:

"In short, the affidavits seem to go to the authority of the court to issue a temporary injunction, and, the bill being sufficient, these affidavits have no bearing upon the authority of the court, after a final hearing, to perpetually enjoin."

Pleading.—In an action under this section to enjoin the maintenance of a nuisance facts should be pleaded tending to show the inadequacy of the law remedy or remedies. U. S. v. Cohen, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 420.

I. IN GENERAL

"Property designed for the manufacture of liquor."—In construing this phrase it has been held that if a defendant has a still or distilling apparatus set up, or wort, wash, and mash fit for distillation, he violates the National Prohibition Act, because he has in his possession property designed for the manufacture of liquor intended for use in violating the act. U. S. v. Puhac, (W. D. Pa. 1920) 268 Fed. 392.

A still and mash constitute property within the meaning of this section. U. S. v. Stafoff, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 417.

Possession of liquor in one's home is not unlawful under this section. State v. Helms, (1921) 181 N. C. 566, 107 S. E. 228, following Street v. Lincoln Safe Deposit Co., (1920) 254 U. S. 88, 41 S. Ct. 31, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, 10 A. L. R. 1548.

"The exception applies to the building or to the part of a building that is used and occupied by the person who is in possession of such intoxicating liquor. If all of the building or the part exclusively occupied by such person is used as a dwelling only, then such possession is not unlawful, although other persons may conduct in some other part of the same building, a store, shop, saloon, restaurant, hotel, or boarding house." Rose v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 245.

Presumption as to unlawful possession.—Where liquor was found in the basement or cellar vault of a hotel and seized by the internal revenue agents and title was claimed by a third person, the hotel owner disclaiming ownership, it was held that the attending circumstances and character of the place raised the presumption that the liquor was kept there in violation of this section. U. S. v. Masters, (M. D. Pa. 1920) 267 Fed. 581.

"No property rights" in liquor as preventing it from being subject of larceny.—Although whisky has no market value under this act except where it is purchased and kept under a government permit, yet it has an actual value and may be the subject of larceny. People v. Wilson, (1921) 298 Ill. 257, 131 N. E. 609, wherein it was said:

"Burglary may be committed where personal property which is the subject of ownership is taken, and the fact that the property is kept for an unlawful purpose does not change the nature of the crime. This has been decided as to intoxicating liquors kept for sale contrary to the provisions of a statute, or property used for gambling purposes contrary to law, or a pistol the sale of which was forbidden. State v. May, 20 Iowa 305; Bales v. State, 3 W. Va. 685; Commonwealth v. Smith, 129 Mass. 111; Osborne v. State, 115 Tenn. 717, 92 S. W. 853, 5 Ann. Cas. 797, 17 R. C. L. 29. The whisky had an actual value, whether it had a market value or not, and was the subject of larceny."

R. S. sec 3456 (see 4 Fed. Stat. Ann. 2d ed. 56) is not repealed by this section. U. S. v. Turner, (W. D. Va. 1920) 266 Fed. 248.

II. SEARCH AND SEIZURE

1. Existence of right

State law permitting search and seizure of private dwelling.—Notwithstanding the provision in this section prohibiting the issuance of a search warrant to search a private dwelling, a state or a municipality acting in conformity with state laws may provide for search and seizure. U. S. v. Viess, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 273 Fed. 279.

The reference to the Espionage Act only refers to the proceeding to be followed, and does not restrict the issuance of a search warrant to cases involving property used in committing a felony. If that construction were adopted, no search warrant could be issued. U. S. v. Metzger, (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 270 Fed. 291.

2. Necessity of Warrant

In general.—"In no case is a prohibition officer or agent justified in seizing intoxicating liquor or other property without a search warrant, except as provided in section 26, which makes it his duty to seize all intoxicating liquors found being transported contrary to law in any wagon, buggy, automobile, water or air craft, or other vehicle. Upon seizure in either case, however, the act contemplates a remedy by orderly process of law for the disposition of the intoxicating liquor seized." U. S. v. Crossen, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 264 Fed. 459.

Private dwelling.—This act "provides that no search warrant shall issue to search any private dwelling occupied as such, unless it is being used for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor, or is in part used for some business purpose. It should not be difficult to keep within these provisions. If in the attempted enforcement of the prohibition law a search warrant is applied for, the first inquiry of the judge or commissioner should be as to the character of the place to be searched. If it be a private dwelling, then the inquiry should be:

"What evidence have you that this place is being used for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor?"

"If the officer has no such evidence, he should not apply for the warrant; or if the judge or commissioner is not satisfied with the evidence offered, he should not issue it. If the officer is acting upon information, he should lay all the facts before the judge or commissioner, with the names of the persons from whom his information is received.

"It is not merely a pro forma matter, but one of utmost importance, that search warrants should be properly issued in the first instance. They should not be lightly applied for, nor lightly issued, as they trespass upon the most important rights of the people. When issued, they should be promptly served and promptly returned." U. S. v. Mitchell, (N. D. Cal. 1921) 274 Fed. 128, wherein the court further said:

"Much confusion seems to exist among the enforcement officers concerning the necessity for search warrants and their use. The confusion arises generally, in my opinion, because they are not willing to be bound by the limitations of the Constitution or the law. In pursuing liquor, recently made an outlaw by the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution, they are, in their zeal, inclined to disregard other provisions of the same document equally sacred and far more important to the rights of the people. The language of the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution is as follows:

"The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized."

"The protection thus afforded to the people can only be insured by the courts. It is far more important that the right to be secure in their persons, houses, and effects be zealously guarded than that a few individuals be convicted of violating the prohibition or any other law. It is one of the most sacred rights that the Constitution guarantees, and officers sworn to defend the Constitution should be the first to recognize and defend it. There is nothing obscure about it; the language is plain, and means what it says."

The search of a private dwelling and the seizure of intoxicating liquor found therein, without a warrant, is unlawful and not excused by a pretended consent obtained by a show of force and firearms. U. S. v. Marquette, (N. D. Cal. 1920) 271 Fed. 120, wherein the court said:

"The liquor was in a private home, where liquor might lawfully be, and could not be taken therefrom without a warrant, except upon consent of the occupants of the home, voluntarily given. A consent accorded to a show of arms, even though no open objection be made, will not be regarded as voluntary. The outlawing of liquor by the Eighteenth Amendment did not abrogate either the Fourth or Fifth Amendment to the Constitution, and the zeal of the enforcement officers in pursuing this recent outlaw cannot be permitted to carry them without warrant across the threshold of the home.

"The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons and things to be seized."

"Such is the language of the Fourth Amendment. The protection thus afforded can only be insured by the courts. Every case arising must, of course, be determined upon the facts of that particular case; and where, as here, the record shows an invitation to enter, but also shows the presence of shotguns and pistols, I cannot disassociate the one from the other. As there was no warrant either to search the premises or seize the liquor, and as the only justification pleaded is that of 'invitation to enter, and consent to the seizure,' under the circumstances recited, I am of the opinion that the motion for an order for the return of the property should be granted upon the pleadings."

A private dwelling does not lose its character as such and become a distillery from the fact that evidence procured on an unlawful search disclosed a home made still in operation. U. S. v. Kelih, (S. D. Ill. 1921) 272 Fed. 484.

Evidence obtained in a search of a private dwelling under a state law may be used in a prosecution under the National Prohibition Act, the purpose of the provision in this section against the search of a private dwelling not being to establish a special rule of evidence for prosecutions under the act but rather to define probable cause under the act for search. U. S. v. Viess, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 273 Fed. 279.

Garage.—The entry without permission, express or implied, into a private garage, without warrant, on a mission of search and seizure, by prohibition agents of the United States, is unlawful. U. S. v. Slusser, (S. D. Ohio 1921) 270 Fed. 818, wherein the court said: "The right of the people to be secure in their houses and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures is not limited to dwelling houses but extends to a garage used personally and for hire."

Search of arrested person.—Where agents have properly arrested a person they have the right to search his person as an incident of the arrest. U. S. v. Kraus, (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 270 Fed. 578.

Sense of smell indicating presence of still as justifying search without warrant.—In U. S. v. Borkowski, (S. D. Ohio 1920) 268 Fed. 408, it appeared that a warrant had been issued for the search of a nearby house. While engaged in the search, the officers smelled raisins in the process of cooking somewhere. They saw a light in the cellar of a house, perhaps two or three doors away. Persons could be seen there moving around. The officers went to such house and, entering the cellar, found a still in operation. They discovered the defendants in the commission of an act of a criminal character, a felony, and, having declared their purpose to search the premises, proceeded to do so. The evidence, although somewhat controverted, is that there was no objection made by either of the defendants to the search, and that one of them assented to its making; but the pending application may be decided without determining that question one way or the other. The fact is admitted that raisins were cooking on a stove in that cellar, that a still was in fact in operation, that raisin whisky and mash were found, and that the articles used in making the whisky and in the process of distillation were seized. Defendant admitted then and at his trial that he "was making a little whisky for Easter." The court said: "If an officer may arrest when he actually sees the commission of a misdemeanor or a felony, why may he not do the same, if the sense of smell informs him that a crime is being committed? Sight is but one of the senses, and an officer may be so trained that the sense of smell is as unerring as the sense of sight. These officers have said that there is that in the odor of boiling raisins which through their experience told them that a crime in violation of the revenue law was in progress. That they were so skilled that they could thus detect through the sense of smell is not controverted. I see no reason why the power to arrest may not exist, if the act of commission appeals to the sense of smell as well as to that of sight."

Insufficient evidence of consent to search.—A search permitted by a person after declaration by the prohibition officer, with a display of his badge, that they were there to search the premises, was not by such consent as will amount to a waiver of constitutional rights, but, on the contrary, is to be attributed to a peaceful submission to officers of the law. U. S. v. Slusser, (S. D. Ohio 1921) 270 Fed. 818.

3. Affidavit to Procure

In general.—"Under the act of 1917 (1918 Supp. p. 128 et seq.), a search warrant cannot be issued, except upon probable cause supported by affidavit naming or describing the person and particularly describing the property and place to be searched." U. S. v. Rykowski, (S. D. Ohio 1920) 267 Fed. 866.

The commissioner, before issuing the warrant, must examine on oath the complainant and any witnesses he may produce, and must require their affidavits or take their depositions in writing and cause them to be subscribed by the parties making them. U. S. v. Rykowski, (S. D. Ohio 1920) 267 Fed. 866.

The affidavits or depositions must set forth the facts tending to establish the grounds of the application or probable cause for believing them to exist.

Facts and not beliefs furnished.—Where an affiant merely swears that he has good reason to believe and does verily believe certain things but does not in any instance affirmatively swear that anything is true and does not state any facts or circumstances which will enable the United States commissioner to determine whether there was probable cause for his belief the affidavits are insufficient and a search warrant should not issue. U. S. v. Rykowski, (S. D. Ohio 1920) 267 Fed. 866.

"No search warrant shall be issued unless the judge has first been furnished with facts under oath—not suspicions, beliefs, or surmises, but facts—which, when the law is properly applied to them, tend to establish the necessary legal conclusions, or facts which, when the law is properly applied to them, tend to establish probable cause for belief that the legal conclusion is right. The inviolability of the accused's home is to be determined by the facts, not by rumor, suspicion, or guesswork. If the facts afford the legal basis for the search warrant, the accused must take the consequences. But equally there must be consequences for the accuser to face. If the sworn accusation is based on fiction, the accuser must take the chance of punishment for perjury. Hence the necessity of a sworn statement of facts, because one cannot be convicted of perjury for having a belief, though the belief be utterly unfounded in fact and law. The finding of the legal conclusion or of probable cause from the exhibited facts is a judicial function, and it cannot be delegated by the judge to the accuser." U. S. v. Kelih, (S. D. Ill. 1921) 272 Fed. 484.

Description of premises.—An affidavit on which a search warrant is issued has been held to sufficiently describe the premises to be searched where the property is described by street and number, and it is stated that they are occupied as a saloon and dwelling. U. S. v. Friedman, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 267 Fed. 856.

Where two streets have the same name except that they are distinguished by the added words "north" and "south" a designation of the street on which the premises are located by its common name without specifying whether "north" or "south" is insufficient. U. S. v. Rykowski, (S. D. Ohio 1920) 267 Fed. 866.

Property used as means of committing felony.—"It is not necessary, in order to have a search warrant under the National Prohibition Act, to set out in the affidavit that the property was used as a means of committing a felony, which is one of the grounds upon which a search warrant may issue under the Espionage Act." U. S. v. Friedman, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 267 Fed. 856.

Sufficiency.—An affidavit that "a violation of the National Prohibition Act has been committed, and affiant further states that he has reason to believe that there are illegally manufactured liquors and an illicit still are now concealed in or on the premises," etc., is insufficient of itself to warrant the judicial officer to find that a violation of the National Prohibition Act has been in fact committed as the witness attempts to find the ultimate fact, which must be ascertained by the officer authorizing the issuance of the warrant. U. S. v. Kelih, (S. D. Ill. 1921) 272 Fed. 484.

Affidavits which are made by a federal prohibition agent and which set out that the premises are occupied as a saloon and dwelling, that on a day and hour stated the affiant purchased intoxicating liquor there, and which further set out the kind and quantity of liquor purchased, and that it contained one-half of 1 per cent or more of alcohol, also setting out the sum paid for the liquor, state facts on which the commissioner can find probable cause to believe that an offense against the National Prohibition Act has been committed on the premises and which will justify the issuance of a search warrant. U. S. v. Friedman, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 267 Fed. 856.

4. Warrant

Presumption of validity.—The court will not assume that a search warrant is void where the petition for the return of papers seized contains loose allegations of its insufficiency and neither the warrant nor its supporting papers are presented. U. S. v. Kraus, (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 270 Fed. 578.

A search at night has been held to be in disregard of the law where the warrant contained no direction that it might be served at any time of the day or night. U. S. v. Rykowski, (S. D. Ohio 1920) 267 Fed. 866.

Amendment of warrant.—Search warrants are of such grave importance that they may be amended, if at all, only by the officer issuing them, and then only in conformity with the affidavits or depositions upon which they are based. They cannot be amended by the officers on a telephone communication from the commissioner. U. S. v. Mitchell, (N. D. Cal. 1921) 274 Fed. 128.

5. Return of Warrant

The failure to make a return of a search warrant is only an irregularity which may be corrected on motion. U. S. v. Kraus, (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 270 Fed. 578.

"The failure of the officer to whom a search warrant is directed to make a return thereof cannot invalidate the search or seizure made by authority of such warrant. If the officer neglects to do this, he can be required to make return of the writ at any later time, or if the person whose premises were searched or whose property was seized is injured in any way by the failure to make this return, the officer failing to make such return is liable to him in damages. The making of the return is merely a ministerial act, to be performed after the warrant is executed." Rose v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 245.

6. Seizure under Warrant

Seizure of books and papers.—It has been held that when books required under section 3318 of the Revised Statutes (4 Fed. Stat. Ann. 2d ed. 71) are not kept or are kept insufficiently, all documents showing transactions which should be so recorded may be seized on search warrant under the pertinent provisions of the Espionage Act. U. S. v. Kraus, (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 270 Fed. 578.

Right to remove locked safe.—In U. S. v. Metzger, (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 270 Fed. 291, the point involved was whether the government, having concededly a right to enter and search the premises, and being refused permission to search a locked safe therein contained, might take the safe into possession for a reasonable time till it could be forcibly opened. The court declared:

"I think this question must be answered in the affirmative. The power conferred by such a warrant to break and enter premises by force, if necessary, must carry with it power to take all reasonable measures which may be rendered necessary by resistance to ascertain what the actual contents of the premises may be. The act of the defendant in locking the safe and in refusing to open it upon demand might render a search warrant of no value. The officers of the government would be authorized to open the locked door of a closet in order to make a search; they were authorized to open by force, if necessary, this safe. Metzger should not be heard now to complain of the act of the officers in taking steps to prevent property of evidential value from being removed and the warrant rendered of no value."

7. Rights in Respect to Property Seized Illegally

The evidence obtained on an unwarranted search for intoxicating liquor cannot be used either to secure the owner's conviction or to forfeit his property, if petition for its return is presented to the court before trial. U. S. v. Slusser, (S. D. Ohio 1921) 270 Fed. 818, wherein the court said:

"An unlawful search cannot be justified by what is found. A search that is unlawful when it begins is not made lawful when it ends by the discovery and seizure of liquor. It was against such prying, on the chance of discovery, that the constitutional amendment was intended to protect the people."

To permit the government to use the evidence gained upon an unlawful search in the prosecution of a criminal case would be to compel defendant to give evidence against himself within the meaning of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution. U. S. v. Kelih, (S. D. Ill. 1921) 272 Fed. 484, wherein it was said:

"It is further contended, because the Volstead Act provides that there shall be no property rights in illicit liquors, or apparatus for their manufacture, that therefore the property in question does not come within the Fourth and Fifth Amendments. The reason for a return of property in all cases of this character is not based upon property rights so much as the personal security afforded by the Fifth Amendment, which relieves a man from being compelled to be a witness against himself in a criminal case. To permit the government in this case to retain possession of the property described in the motion, and use it in the trial of the case before the jury, would be in legal effect to require this defendant to be a witness against himself in a criminal case, which is clearly prohibited by the Constitution."

Property seized by state officers.—On a prosecution in the federal court for a violation of the federal Act bottles of whisky were declared not to be inadmissible in evidence because seized by state officers without a search warrant. U. S. v. O'Dowd, (N. D. Ohio 1921) 273 Fed. 600; U. S. v. Burnside, (W. D. Wis. 1921) 273 Fed. 603. In the latter case it was said:

"The United States had no part in securing the search warrants in question, nor in executing the same. The proceedings were carried on by the police officers of the city of Superior prior to the time when any proceedings were taken by the United States government, and it appears from the testimony taken in connection with this application that the proceedings by the city officers were entirely independent of the United States government or any of its agents, and that it was some time after the search had been executed and the liquor seized that the police officers of the city of Superior delivered the liquor so seized to the United States attorney for use as evidence in the pending proceeding. While it is well settled that competent evidence tending to prove crime is rendered inadmissible, where it has been secured by federal officers by unlawful search and seizure in violation of the Fourth Amendment, or where its admission is deemed a violation of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution (Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 616, 6 Sup. Ct. 524, 29 L. ed. 746; Adams v. New York, 192 U. S. 585, 24 Sup. Ct. 372, 48 L. ed. 575; Weeks v. U. S., 232 U. S. 383, 34 Sup. Ct. 341, 58 L. ed. 652, L. R. A. 1915B, 834, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 1177), and this rule has recently been applied by the Supreme Court to contraband articles in the case of Amos v. U. S., in an opinion handed down February 28, 1921, 254 U. S. —, 41 Sup. Ct. 266, 65 L. ed. —, I know of no case where such effect has been given to the trespasses of strangers to the government."

Where a warrant is based on information obtained at the time of making an unlawful search, papers seized under the warrant cannot be retained. U. S. v. Kraus, (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 270 Fed. 578.

Seizure made on warrant afterward vacated.—Where a seizure of liquors and books and papers was illegal because made on a search warrant afterward vacated by the commissioner who issued it, a motion to impound the property will be denied. U. S. v. Porazzo, (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 272 Fed. 276.

Property illegally seized held on a second warrant.—Where the original entry into the defendant's home was unlawful, the seizure of property at that time is therefore unlawful and cannot be cured by another warrant issued on information thereby secured, and property so taken will be ordered restored. U. S. v. Mitchell, (N. D. Cal. 1921) 274 Fed. 128.

I. IN GENERAL

Remedy exclusive.—The remedy provided by this Act for the forfeiture of vehicles when transporting liquor is exclusive. The Goodhope, (W. D. Wash. 1920) 268 Fed. 694.

Procedure as jurisdictional.—The procedure provided in this act is not merely directory and cumulative, but is jurisdictional. This statute gives a new power, a power to divest title from the owner of property, and the statute provides means of enforcing such power, which is controlling. U. S. v. Hydes, (W. D. Wash. 1920) 267 Fed. 470; U. S. v. Graham, (W. D. Wash. 1920) 267 Fed. 472.

Effect of section on R. S. sec. 3450.—It has been held that this section repeals section 3450 of the Revised Statutes (4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 311) in respect to the forfeiture of vehicles in which liquor has been illegally transported. U. S. v. One Haynes Automobile, (S. D. Fla. 1920) 268 Fed. 1003, wherein the court said: "The transportation of the liquor is clearly one which, if illegal, would violate the Volstead Act, and would subject the vehicle to forfeiture according to the provision of that act. It is not, therefore, to be assumed that Congress intended to provide for the forfeiture of vehicles under section 26 of the Volstead Act, with its provisions for preserving the rights of third persons, and still leave them subject to be forfeited under the more drastic provisions of Revised Statutes, § 3450."

In another case, however, it has been said: "Distilled liquors whether produced under permit for lawful purposes or in violation of law, are still 'a commodity in respect whereof a tax is imposed,' in the language of Rev. St. § 3450, and its provisions are applicable to a case within them, unless defeated by inconsistent provisions of the Prohibition Act. The suggestion that repeal was intended because the whole subject of intoxicating liquors was covered is answered by the express language to the contrary in section 35. Section 26 is not only reconcilable with Rev. St. § 3450, but applies to a substantially different subject-matter. . . . In terms it applies only when 'a person is discovered in the act of transporting in violation of law.' The officer must 'at once proceed against the person arrested under the provisions of this title,' and 'the court upon conviction of the person' orders a sale. This section seems to apply only when a person is caught and can be prosecuted. The provision at the end of it as to no claimant appearing is not to the contrary, for the person transporting or possessing the liquor and the claimant of the vehicle need not be the same person. And again only unlawful transportation or possession is the occasion of the forfeiture. Since the person is to be 'prosecuted under the provisions of this title,' it is apparent that transportation or possession in violation of this title is the unlawful transportation and possession meant. By title 2, § 3, transportation and possession are made unlawful, except as authorized in the act. By section 6 transportation without a permit, and by section 10 transportation without making the prescribed records, is condemned. By section 33 possession after February 1, 1920, is prima facie unlawful. But none of these unlawful acts have any reference to the nonpayment of taxes and may occur equally of taxed or untaxed liquor. Rev. St. § 3450 deals only with untaxed liquor, and may extend to cases of deposit and concealment, as well as transportation, and to cases where no person can be connected with the transportation or deposit so as to be prosecuted. The forfeiture arises from no illegality under the Prohibition Act, but wholly under the revenue law. The causes of action are unlike and independent of each other. It is true that an automobile transporting untaxed intoxicating liquors without permit may transgress both statutes at the same time, but that results only in giving the United States an election as to which cause of forfeiture it will pursue. Rev. St. § 3450 still has its place in the law, and the remedy under it may be sustained in this case, if the facts alleged are proven." U. S. v. One Essex Touring Automobile, (N. D. Ga. 1920 266 Fed. 138.

Forfeiture of vessel.—In order that intoxicating liquor may have a legal status as merchandise, it must come into the United States in harmony with the provisions of the Prohibition Act, which requires as a prerequisite a permit from the commissioner. No permit having been issued, it cannot be entered at the custom house; it is contraband the instant it comes into the United States and the vessel carrying it is subject to forfeiture under this section. The Goodhope, (W. D. Wash. 1920) 268 Fed. 694.

"Boat . . . or water craft."—In construing this phrase as not including a vessel of about 2,600 gross tonnage it was said: "The words used as applicable to the means of transportation by water are 'water craft' and 'boat.' Ordinarily the term 'boat' and the term 'craft' are applied to water transporting conveyances of small character. As a rule, the word 'boat' is used somewhat in contradiction to the word 'vessel'—'vessel' being a boat of larger size, generally one fitted to navigate the high seas; while 'boat' as a rule was applied to an undecked, small, open vessel.

"Anterior to the application of propulsion to small boats by means of gasoline, so as to bring them within the class of self-propelled vessels, the word 'boat' was usually applied to small, open vessels only, propelled by oars in the hands of oarsmen; although poetically, and otherwise, the term 'boat' may be sometimes applied to a vessel of any size. The word 'water craft,' or the term 'craft,' as usually used, was applied to small vessels generally engaged in coastwise or domestic navigation. For larger vessels, as used in the present day, especially in the case of large iron steamships, the terms 'steamer,' 'steamship,' or 'vessel' are generally used. Unless, therefore, the generality of the language of the statute be sufficient to embrace vessels used in water transportation, of any size; and of any kind, the words of the statute in this case would not cover a large iron steamship.

"But, more than this, the intention of the statute is to be regarded. The intention of the statute is that the officer shall seize water craft or boat or land means of transportation which are actually engaged in the transportation of intoxicating liquors as its purpose so to say. Where that purpose is merely incidental, and carried on illegally by some one upon the vehicle or water craft, it would not necessarily come within the purport and intention of the law to seize the conveyance. An automobile carrying liquor, and evidently engaged in it for that purpose, for the occasion, at least, would clearly be within the terms of the law. But a railway train, upon which liquor may be found, which is being illegally transported by some employee or passenger, would not be liable to summary seizure, as would be an automobile. So, a small or comparatively small boat or sailing boat, or gasoline- or steam-propelled small vessel, which at the time it is used for that purpose, at the time, as the main purpose of its then employment, would be subject to seizure under the statute. But if a large vessel of 10,000 tons, engaged in general commerce, such as the transportation of general merchandise, as its purpose and object, had liquor aboard only incidentally, through the unlawful act of some member of the crew, it would not necessarily be subject to seizure. The ancient and immemorial maxim of the law is that ships were made to plow the seas, and should be released, as far as possible, from all detention that would prevent them from accomplishing that main and primary purpose." The Saxon, (E. D. S. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 639.

Transportation and removal from warehouse distinguished.—"Failure to pay the tax on the liquor before removing it from the bonded warehouse, or to remove it during the absence of the storekeeper or without his knowledge, which are denounced by the earlier act, are a different class of offenses from those of transporting liquor without a permit, or without complying with the other requirements of the Enforcement Act, relative to transportation. And a conviction or acquittal of any or all of one class would not exempt the defendant from prosecution or conviction of any or all of the other class." U. S. v. Freidericks, (D. C. N. J. 1921) 273 Fed. 188.

II. EXTENT OF RIGHT OF SEIZURE

Vehicle actually engaged in illegal transportation.—"The highest degree of evidence, viz, that an officer of the law perceive some person in the act of illegal transportation, is necessary. Seizure of the vehicle can only be made when liquor is seized. The law does not forfeit all vehicles at some time used for illegal transportation of liquor, but only those taken in the act. One may be convicted of illegal transportation, yet the vehicle will not be forfeited, unless seized at the time. . . . The seizing officer is to have the vehicle in possession on the day of the trial of the person arrested, to abide the judgment in the same proceeding. Should the defendant be acquitted, the automobile must be released, for it is only upon conviction that its sale may be ordered." U. S. v. Slusser, (S. D. Ohio 1921) 270 Fed. 818.

Seizure after transportation has ended.—Under the provision in this section as to the taking of the vehicle while in the act of illegal transportation the taking of a vehicle subsequent to transportation and without process is without warrant of law. U. S. v. Hydes, (W. D. Wash. 1920) 267 Fed. 470; U. S. v. Graham, (W. D. Wash. 1920) 267 Fed. 472.

Automobile in garage.—In the case of an automobile with liquor in it seized while in a garage where there was no evidence to show that the liquor had been transported or was in the automobile for the purpose of transportation it was held that there could not be a forfeiture of the automobile. U. S. v. Slusser, (S. D. Ohio 1921) 270 Fed. 818. The court said:

"In the present case the automobile was standing in the garage with liquor in it. The defendant was in his house, eating his breakfast. The government does not claim that the defendant had theretofore been seen using it for the illegal transportation charged. The evidence might perhaps justify an inference that the liquor had been transported in the automobile to the garage, or that the liquor was loaded with intent to transport it from the garage, or that it was temporarily halted in the progress of transportation. But this is not the degree of proof required to warrant seizure. The evidence does not show that any one was discovered in the act of transporting. It is not necessary that the vehicle should be discovered while actually in motion, but it is necessary that some one should be discovered performing some act in furtherance of transportation and the government's own evidence here shows that no one was caught in such an act at the time the seizure was made."

III. FORFEITURE AND SALE

Essential elements.—"The forfeiture of an automobile, under the twenty-sixth section of the Volstead Law, must be in strict pursuance to the terms thereof. United States v. Hydes, (D. C.) 267 Fed. 471; The Goodhope, 268 Fed. 694. The following elements are essential:

(1) That an officer of the law discover some person in the act of illegally transporting liquor in a vehicle.

(2) The seizure of the liquor so transported or possessed.

(3) The seizure of the vehicle and arrest of the person.

(4) That the officer proceed against the person and retain the vehicle, unless re-delivered to the owner, upon giving bond to return it to the custody of the officer on the day of trial to abide the judgment of the court.

(5) Conviction of the person and order of sale of the vehicle.

(6) Distribution of the proceeds." U. S. v. Slusser, (S. D. Ohio 1921) 270 Fed. 818.

"The intent of the Congress as disclosed in section 26 is clearly expressed. The conclusions respecting its interpretation are:

First—The seizure, forfeiture, and sale of vehicles is not absolute, as under section 3450 of the Revised Statutes, [4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 311] but is subject to the order of court after it has heard all the facts of each case.

Second—An owner who transports intoxicating liquor illegally forfeits the intoxicating liquor and the vehicle and suffers a penalty.

Third—A conditional vendor or a mortgagee, who allows the vehicle to be used for such unlawful purpose with his knowledge, or who gives his consent to the illicit transportation, shall also forfeit all interest in or his lien upon the vehicle.

Fourth—A bona fide vendor or mortgagee, without having any notice that the vehicle was being used or was to be used for the illegal transportation of intoxicating liquor, shall be protected to the amount of his bona fide lien, as far as possible.

Fifth—The owner of a vehicle, who loaned it to another, who, in turn, transported intoxicating liquor therein, is entitled to a return of the vehicle, where he had no knowledge of the purpose of the borrower, and no facts are shown which should have aroused his suspicion.

Sixth—In the second and third instances, the vehicle shall be sold by the United States marshal at public auction, and after the costs are paid, as provided by law, then the balance of the proceeds of the sale shall be turned into the treasury of the United States.

Seventh—In the fourth instance, after the bona fide lien and lack of notice or knowledge have been established, the vehicle shall be sold at public auction, and after the costs, as provided by law, have been paid, the United States marshal shall then pay, if possible, the amount of the bona fide lien in full to the proper person, and the balance, if any, shall be turned into the treasury of the United States." U. S. v. Sylvester, (D. C. Conn. 1921) 273 Fed. 253.

Libel or information ancillary to the criminal cause as proper procedure.—It is not necessary that the forfeiture be declared in the criminal cause. The proceeding to procure the condemnation and sale of the vehicle in which the liquor was being transported may be by libel or information which is not an original proceeding but merely ancillary to the criminal cause. U. S. v. One Stephens Automobile, (D. C. Ore. 1921) 272 Fed. 188.

Conviction of person arrested as prerequisite to sale of property seized.—This section contemplates and requires, as a prerequisite to the sale of the property seized, a judicial determination that such property has been used in violation of the law. The statute requires as a jurisdictional basis for the sale a conviction of the person so arrested, and until such conviction the court cannot order sale by virtue of any authority conferred by this section. U. S. v. One Cadillac Touring Car, (E. D. Mich. 1921) 274 Fed. 470.

Court may subsequently vacate order confiscating automobile.—U. S. v. Brockley, (M. D. Pa. 1920) 266 Fed. 1001.

IV. GROUNDS FOR RELIEF FROM FORFEITURE

"Good cause to the contrary."—"Good cause" is a term that cannot be reduced to legal certainty, and vests discretion in the court when it has statutory authority to do a thing on good cause shown. See Kerchner v. Singletary, 15 S. C. 535; Kendall v. Brilly, 86 N. C. 56; People v. Sessions, 62 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 415. What is good cause, to relieve the owner from forfeiture of the vehicle, depends upon the circumstances, including the owner's conduct before, during, and in respect to the case. See Harnett v. Vise, 5 Ex. D. 307.

"If the circumstances do not reasonably inspire belief that justice will be better served by refusal to impose or enforce the statutory order of forfeiture and sale, prima facie due or made, good cause has not been shown. See Jones v. Curling, 13 Q. B. D. 272; Huxley v. Company, 14 App. Cas. 26; Whitcher v. Benton, 50 N. H. 25. Each case will depend upon its own facts and circumstances, and no more definite rule can be declared in advance. The burden of proof to relieve from forfeiture is upon those seeking relief. The statute is definite in respect to what shall be proven by a lienor; indefinite in respect to an owner. This difference in statutory phraseology, and the greater accountability of an owner, indicates that the 'good cause' that must be proven by an owner is something other and more than the lack of notice at a particular time that must be proven by a lienor.

"An owner may assert that he is free from complicity in the illegal use, and had no notice such use was contemplated, and yet, by reason of neglect, indifference, consent, or acquiescence manifested in advance, or condonation or ratification afterward, or other fault or inequitable conduct, he may fail to show good cause against forfeiture and sale." U. S. v. Kane, (D. C. Mont. 1921) 273 Fed. 275, wherein the court further said:

"In the case at bar, intervener sold the car to a stranger association, one of whom was of a vocation notoriously often a cloak for illicit liquor traffic. It made no inquiries into the vendees' purpose or repute, and does not disclose whether they were bad or known to it. Its attitude is it was not interested, nor obliged to inquire. It was indifferent to illegal use of the car and to its conversion or confiscation (which, for all that appears, it may have manifested to vendees), for it was insured against loss. Indeed, it blandly declared that, had it known illegal use was contemplated, the 'chances are' it would have made the sale, being insured.

"It contemporaneously learns of the conversion and seizure of the car, and no doubt of the car's redelivery to the defendant; but it does not invoke forfeiture and retake possession of the car, as it had engaged to do. It accepts one deferred payment about the time of or subsequent to seizure, invokes no forfeiture for default in all others, and did not seek to collect the latter, so far as appears. It did not make known its ownership to plaintiff until more than eight months after seizure, and after defendant by misrepresentations of ownership had escaped with a small fine. All these facts and circumstances, however it might be were they not thus in combination, suffice to the conclusion that good cause against sale of the car has not been shown by intervener, the owner.

"Its conduct throughout manifests a degree of indifference, if not of consent, that its property be devoted to illegal uses, that is reprehensible, at least. It may have disclosed its attitude to the vendees then, as it has to the public now. Why not? Business would be stimulated, and the car confiscated; deferred payments would be made by a responsible insurer, avoiding hazard of loss by the default of a stranger association of unknown repute and responsibility. Failure to resume possession of the car for defendant's conversion, offense, and defaults, failure to collect deferred payments, failure to disclose its ownership as aforesaid, all unexplained, and the disingenuity of its petition, which implies but recent knowledge of the offense, savor of condonation and ratification of defendant's offense, of collusion and strategy in his interest and to plaintiff's prejudice, and constitute inequitable conduct. To remit forfeiture of the car seems less consistent with justice than does to enforce it."

As to what would amount to good cause to the contrary, it is said:

"Good cause to the contrary would certainly be that the owner of the method of transportation, whether it be by vehicle or watercraft, was wholly ignorant and innocent of the illegal use of his property. For instance, if a man left his automobile in the street, and it was unwarrantably taken possession of by an evil-doer, who transported liquor in it, it would not be sold. So if a vessel was at anchor, and was seized and taken possession of by an evil-doer, who then proceeded to subject it to the unlawful uses of transporting liquor, good cause to the contrary would be shown in the innocence of the owner, and the property would not be sold. It would likewise follow that a large iron steamship, in the employment and use of which likewise a large crew of officers and men is required, would not be subject to sale and forfeiture, because one or more of the crew, without the knowledge or assent of the owners and in dereliction of their duties, were to seek to use the vessel to carry out for their own individual purposes the illegal transportation of intoxicating liquors." The Saxon, (E. D. S. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 639.

In order to show good cause against the sale of a vehicle seized under the Volstead law, and shown to be an instrument of illegal transportation of liquor, the owner must show the absence of guilty knowledge. U. S. v. Burns, (S. D. Ohio 1921) 270 Fed. 681.

Circumstances justifying cancellation of bond for production of vessel.—The cancellation of a bond given for the production of a vessel which had been seized because of intoxicating liquor being found on board has been held proper where the liquor was found in the possession of some of the officers and crew of the vessel who had been arrested and bound over for trial and it was not shown that the owners had any knowledge that the liquor was on board. The Saxon, (E. D. S. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 639. The court said:

"The officers and members of the crew, in whose possession was found this liquor, have been arrested and bound over for trial. There is no charge or evidence that the owners of the vessel were aware the liquor was on board. To allow the vessel to remain tied up and not performing the purpose for which she is created until these parties are tried, when they are mere employees, and not the owners, of the vessel, and when their conviction would in no wise necessarily lead to the forfeiture or sale of the vessel, would seem to be wholly useless. If the vessel, under the circumstances of this case, would not be held, then no bond should have been required for its production, and any bond given to procure its release was improperly required, and should be canceled. If the circumstances should show that through the improper use of the vessel it should be forfeited to the United States, then it can be libeled wherever found in the United States, and by proper proceedings, in which the owners can appear and defend their rights, an adjudication can be had."

Proof of permit.—It has been declared that in a prosecution for transporting liquor without a permit the government would not have to prove the want of the permit in order to make out a prima facie case. But if the defendant should introduce any substantial evidence tending to show that the transportation had been authorized by a permit, the government would then have to introduce evidence that no permit was issued, or that it was obtained by fraud, or that it did not apply to the act of transportation charged. U. S. v. Turner, (W D. Va. 1920) 266 Fed. 248.

Establishment of lien on vehicle.—The lien which is referred to in this section must be established by competent evidence. The mere assertion of a bona fide lien does not prove the fact that the lien is such. U. S. v. Masters, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 264 Fed. 250.

Vehicle purchased on conditional sale.—As to the rights of a conditional vendor of a vehicle used in violation of this act for the transportation of liquors it is declared:

"It is apparent that just such cases were in mind when the law was framed, and that the Congress realized that vehicles would be used for the illegal transportation of intoxicating liquor by persons who would purchase the same on conditional bills of sale, and that such vehicles would be used for such unlawful purpose without the knowledge or consent of the conditional vendor or his assignee. In order, therefore, to protect a person retaining title under a valid conditional bill of sale, or one who holds a valid chattel mortgage, such person must satisfy the court that he holds a bona fide lien and lacked the knowledge or information of the illegal purpose for which the vehicle was used or was to be used. Having done this, he is entitled to receive from the proceeds of the sale the amount of the lien, established by intervention or otherwise, after the costs as provided by law, are paid. Section 26 of the act seems so clear that there can be no possible doubt but that it was the intention of the Congress to protect innocent vendors or mortgagees, as far as possible." U. S. v. Sylvester, (D. C. Conn. 1921) 273 Fed. 253, wherein the court further said:

"When a defendant is arrested for transporting intoxicating liquor, and the vehicle is seized, what is to be done with it depends upon what interest the defendant has in it. If he had no interest—that is, if he had stolen it, or had borrowed it from its real owner, who neither knew nor could be presumed to have knowledge of the illegal purpose for which it was to be used—manifestly the wrongdoer had no interest to forfeit, and it logically follows, under the provisions of the act, that the vehicle should be returned to its rightful owner, by order of court. If, on the other hand, the wrongdoer had an interest in the vehicle, his interest should be confiscated and the vehicle ordered sold."

Automobile used without owner's knowledge.—An automobile used by the owner's chauffeur in illegally transporting liquor may be subject to forfeiture even though the owner did not participate in or know of the illegal use. Lewis v. McCarthy, (D. C. Mass. 1921) 274 Fed. 496.

Forfeiture of borrowed automobile.—In a case where the automobile which it was sought to confiscate was borrowed it was said:

"The admitted facts in the present case show ownership and want of knowledge on the part of the vehicle's owners as to the purpose for which the vehicle was to be employed. Without any other attending circumstances, this is sufficient to warrant the court to order its return. It might be otherwise if, from the reputation of the person intrusted with the vehicle or other circumstances attending his occupation or employment, the inference would arise that the owners had reason to suspect that their property might be used for the purposes it was employed.

"The construction contended for by the learned representative of the government would admit of no reason or cause for the return of property used in connection with a violation of the provisions of this statute, if such was intrusted to the violator of the same and used in connection therewith. This would work greater hardship upon innocent owners of such property than was contemplated by the legislators; otherwise they would not have provided for the return on good cause shown." U. S. v. Brockley, (M. D. Pa. 1920) 266 Fed. 1001, wherein the court further said:

"Whether the property seized shall be confiscated and sold depends upon the facts appearing, and whether the facts presented constitute good cause or reason to the contrary is a question addressed to the judicial sense and judgment of the court. This provision in the act is not analogous, as was contended for by the government's attorney, to that found in section 3450 of the Revised Statutes, under which it has been held that the ignorance of the owner of a vehicle used by a third person for the removal of goods with the intent to defraud the United States will not save his property from confiscation. Logan v. United States, and Wisdom & Strickland v. United States (C. C. A.) 260 Fed. 746; United States v. Stowell, 133 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 244, 33 L. ed. 555. From these cases, as well as from the general provisions of the revenue laws therein construed, it is conclusive that personal property voluntarily committed by the owner to the possession of a third person, for use by him, becomes subject to forfeiture absolutely, whether or not good cause appears to the contrary."

A third party who intervenes claiming to be the owner of an automobile in which liquor was being illegally transported has the burden of proof to show good cause in law why the vehicle shall not be condemned and forfeited. U. S. v. One W. W. Shaw Automobile Taxi, etc., (N. D. Ohio 1921) 272 Fed. 491.

Condemnation and sale of taxicab.—In U. S. v. One W. W. Shaw Automobile Taxi, etc. (N. D. Ohio 1921) 272 Fed. 491, an order of condemnation and sale of a taxicab was entered though it appeared that the owners had instructed their drivers not to engage in the illegal transportation of intoxicating liquors. The court said:

"Upon these facts I am of opinion that good cause is not shown to exonerate the automobile from condemnation and forfeiture. The driver in a way represented the owner at the time he devoted its car to this illegal service. It is true that his authority and powers were restricted as compared with the authority and power of a manager or superintendent, but within that limited scope he had power and authority to act for the owner, which, being a corporation, must of necessity always act by agents. He was so far within the scope of his authority that the owner during the entire period would have been liable for his negligence in operating the car and for repairs and supplies ordered during the trip. If he had negligently injured some one en route, the owner would have been liable in damages. I do not hold that an automobile livery is to be held liable in all cases, if a driver, contrary to instructions, devotes one of its cars to the illegal transportation of intoxicating liquor. It should, no doubt, depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. In the instant case, the facts and circumstances are that the owner's dispatcher or superintendent sent its driver to premises used for saloon purposes; that he permitted the driver, after being informed that the car was destined for Cleveland, to engage in that enterprise without inquiry or investigation; that full authority was conferred on the driver to engage or refuse to engage in the enterprise, using his own judgment as to whether the transaction was legal or illegal; and that no precautions were taken at any time to ascertain whether or not the transaction was legal or illegal. The distance to be traveled each way is approximately 150 miles. The expense of a round trip, at 40 cents a mile, would be approximately $120. It is difficult to believe that this is a simple, ordinary transaction in the usual course of business. It was then a matter of public notoriety that whisky was being transported, not only in suit cases and trunks upon railway trains, but upon the public highways in automobiles and trucks. To exonerate the owner on a showing merely that instructions had been given to its drivers not to engage in the illegal transportation of intoxicating liquors, notwithstanding the drivers were intrusted with full authority to decide whether the transaction was legal or illegal, would open wide the door to collusion and evasion of the law. Upon the facts and under these circumstances, I am of opinion that the owner has not shown good cause for the return of its car."

V. RETURN OF VEHICLE

Giving of bond.—By the provisions of this section, the vehicle after seizure may be instantly returned to the owner, upon execution by him of a bond to produce the property at the criminal trial, and disposition must be decreed upon the trial of the criminal case. Forfeiture by original seizure depends upon the statute. Congress may declare the forfeiture absolute upon seizure, or make the forfeiture depend upon conditions. The Congress may provide for the seizure of the vehicle at any time, for having offended, but before any forfeiture can be decreed, the jurisdictional facts as outlined by the statute must be present, and the statutory provision must be in harmony with the taking or detention. U. S. v. Hydes, (W. D. Wash. 1920) 267 Fed. 470; U. S. v. Graham, (W. D. Wash. 1920) 267 Fed. 472.

Property seized without process.—In the case of the seizure without process of an automobile in which whisky was being transported it is declared that "The auto and whisky, by virtue of the National Prohibition Act (41 Stat. 305), were forfeited, and thereby transferred to the United States, the moment defendants embarked upon the unlawful transportation. The United States was then vested with the right of property and possession. Even as any other owner of property in like circumstances at common law, the United States without process could recover possession by force. And however, if at all, irregularly the officers proceeded, the defendants have no right to return of the property, nor to object to its use in evidence, whatever other, if any, right or remedy they may have." U. S. v. Fenton, (D. C. Mont. 1920) 268 Fed. 221.

Where the seizure of a vehicle subsequent to the act of transportation was without warrant of law it has been held that an order decreeing the return of the vehicle and exonerating the owner's bond may be presented. U. S. v. Hydes, (W. D. Wash. 1920) 267 Fed. 470; U. S. v. Graham, (W. D. Wash. 1920) 267 Fed. 472.

Return of vehicle to lienor.—It has been held that a lienor or mortgagor is not entitled to have a vehicle which has been seized for a violation of this act returned to him and thus permit him to profit by the transaction but that he must look for reimbursement to the extent of his lien from the proceeds of the sale. U. S. v. Sylvester, (D. C. Conn. 1921) 273 Fed. 253, wherein the court said:

"Cases may arise where the application of this rule would result in realizing an insufficient amount at the sale to pay the full amount of the bona fide lien; but where a substantial amount has already been paid, as here, on a new truck, undoubtedly the full amount of the balance due, plus the costs, will be realized, so that the lienor will be fully protected. Where, however, the amount paid by the purchaser is small in proportion to the purchase price, so that a large amount will have to be realized by the United States marshal at the sale, and where the highest bid is insufficient to meet the costs and the amount of the bona fide lien, the United States marshal shall then abandon the sale and report the facts to the court for further instructions. In such event further hearing will be had before the court to determine then whether the lienor has shown 'good cause' why the vehicle should not be sold."

Power of federal court in summary proceedings to order return of automobile.—In Lewis v. McCarthy, (D. C. Mass. 1921) 274 Fed. 496, the facts as stated by the court together with its holding were as follows:

"This is a petition for the return of an automobile, the property of the petitioner, which is held by the respondents as prohibition enforcement officers. They have moved to dismiss. The case stated in the petition is as follows: The petitioner is the owner of the automobile. On the occasion in question it was taken and used without her knowledge or consent by her chauffeur. He was arrested by a Boston police officer for operating it while under the influence of liquor, and a complaint for that offense is pending against him in the state court. While the petition does not so allege, I infer that there was liquor in the automobile, which was being illegally transported by the chauffeur, because the petition recites that he got liquor and was arraigned before a United States commissioner on the charge of illegal transportation. No proceedings have been instituted for the forfeiture of the automobile; but the case is still pending against the chauffeur for violation of the Volstead Act (41 Stat. 305).

"Under the circumstances, the court has no power, in summary proceedings such as these, to order the return of the automobile. Such power exists only over officers of the court, which the defendants are not. In re Chin K Shue, (D. C. Mass.) 199 Fed. 282; U. S. v. Hee, (D. C.) 219 Fed. 1019. Moreover, under Grant v. U. S., 254 U. S. 505, 41 Supp. Ct. 189, 65 L. ed. —, if the chauffeur shall be convicted the automobile may be subject to forfeiture, even though the owner of it did not participate in or know of the illegal use. Compare The Little Charles, 1 Brock. 347, at 354, Fed. Cas. No. 15,612, an interesting case of forfeiture under an embargo act."

Releasing automobile and canceling bond.—Where an automobile seized while illegally transporting liquor has been returned to the owner on his giving the required bond, there is said to be no authority which would justify the court in releasing the automobile and canceling the bond of the claimant before the trial or during the period within which the trial of the person arrested in connection with the seizure can be had. U. S. v. One Cadillac Touring Car, (E. D. Mich. 1921) 274 Fed. 470.

1919 Supp., p. 215, sec. 28.

Powers conferred by section.—This section "of the National Prohibition Act confers on the Internal Revenue Commissioner and subordinate officers, for the enforcement of the National Prohibition Act, the powers which are conferred by law for the enforcement of existing laws relating to the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. Section 28, therefore, simply gives to the Commissioner and subordinate officers the same powers of enforcement in reference to the National Prohibition Act as they had under existing laws relating to the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor. Those powers include the enforcement by distraint in cases of special taxes and certain penalties annexed to them under the internal revenue laws. But if, as we have seen, the exactions under section 35 of the National Prohibition Act are none of them taxes, but all of them penalties, so far as they relate to the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes, then it follows that section 28 gives no power to collect these penalties by distraint.

"It may be further observed that the preliminary steps provided in section 3172, R. S. [3 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1002], and leading up to the notice and demand in section 3184, R. S. [3 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1012], all relating to assessment and collection of internal revenue taxes proper, to wit: The canvassing by the collector; the returns by parties liable to the taxes; the call for such returns; the summons by the collector for examination; and, upon refusal, the making of a return by the collector—were never intended and are not suitable as procedure for collection of penalties such as are prescribed in section 35 of the National Prohibition Act. Nor, indeed, was the procedure under the sections above mentioned followed in the instant cases. Further, that a civil suit is a proper remedy for the collection of these exactions provided for in section 35 of the National Prohibition Act is recognized by the Internal Revenue Department, but the attitude of that department is shown by the following extracts from Regulation No. 12, revised October 1, 1920, issued by the department. On page 42 is the following:

"In making reports in prohibition cases, a tax and assessable penalty imposed by section 35 of title 2 of the National Prohibition Act should not be overlooked. It will often prove more effective to suppress violations of the law than the actual criminal liabilities imposed."

"And again, on page 19, is the following:

"Legal proceedings will not generally be commenced until after the remedy by distraint is exhausted." Thome v. Lynch, (D. C. Minn. 1921) 269 Fed. 995.

Removal of action against officer.—Cases against officers under the National Prohibition Act are removable from state to federal courts under the provision of the act for the protection of revenue officers. In re Higgins, (D. C. N. H. 1921) 273 Fed. 832.

Effect of conviction in state court.—A conviction in a state court for conduct which is in violation of the National Prohibition Act is held to be a bar to a prosecution in the federal courts, it being declared to be manifest that it was not the intent that a person should be punished by the state and federal law for the same offense. But a conviction for a violation of a municipal ordinance pursuant to grant of power given by a state is not a bar to a prosecution in the federal court for a violation of the National Prohibition Act. U. S. v. Peterson, (W. D. Wash. 1920) 268 Fed. 864. So it has been held that the previous conviction of a defendant in the state court for importing, transporting, and having intoxicating liquor in his possession in violation of the state law cannot be availed of to prevent his prosecution in a federal court for violating the Volstead Act by importing, transporting, and having intoxicating liquor in his possession. U. S. v. Holt, (D. C. N. D. 1921) 270 Fed. 639. The court, however, declared in this case:

"In the case at bar I have seen the young man charged, and have heard the circumstances of his arrest. If he shall be advised to plead guilty to the charge, the circumstance of his previous punishment will be given consideration, a record made of his conviction, to protect the government in case of a repetition of such acts, and a nominal penalty will be imposed."

Imprisonment.—A jail sentence may be imposed on the first conviction of one for a violation of sections 3 and 6 of this act. Dusold v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 574.

1919 Supp., p. 216, sec. 33.

Power of Congress with reference to possession of liquor.—Under the police power delegated by the Eighteenth Amendment Congress has the right to prohibit any transportation of liquors and in order to reduce the necessity for transportation to a minimum it has the power to legislate as to the places where liquor may lawfully be possessed. Street v. Lincoln Safe Deposit Co., (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 267 Fed. 706, wherein the court said that since the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment Congress can deal not only with interstate, but also with intrastate, transportation of liquor, and that the limitations in this section as to the places of possession were not arbitrary or unreasonable.

"Congress in the exercise of its power has determined that it is essential and appropriate to the enforcement of this constitutional amendment to restrict the possession of intoxicating liquors to those having permits to keep and possess the same and to private homes when intended for the sole use of the owner and his family and their bona fide guests. The possession of intoxicating liquors is the first essential to its barter and sale as a beverage. Intoxicating liquors, stored in the same building in which the owner or occupant of the building is conducting a business with the public generally, not only furnishes opportunities for the violation of the provisions of this constitutional amendment, but would also tend to hinder, delay, and prevent the detection of unlawful traffic therein. It would therefore appear that this provision of the National Prohibition Act has a substantial relation to the enforcement of national prohibition, and that Congress has not in this respect transcended its power or abused the discretion conferred upon it by the second section of the Eighteenth Amendment." Rose v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 245.

Possession in private dwelling by wife of saloon keeper.—The wife of a saloon keeper may have lawful possession of liquors on premises occupied by her as a dwelling although such premises are in part used by the husband for the purpose of conducting a saloon. U. S. v. Crossen, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 264 Fed. 459, wherein the court said:

"Section 33 makes it lawful to possess liquors in one's private dwelling while the same is occupied and used by him as his dwelling only and such liquors need not be reported, subject to the provisions concerning the use of the liquor and the burden of proof. The exception to unlawful possession applies, therefore, to the one possessing in one's private dwelling while the same is occupied and used by that one as that one's dwelling only; but any other person, while the dwelling is used and occupied by him not as his dwelling only, but for other purposes, is not included in the exception, and liquor possessed by him in his dwelling is unlawfully possessed and must be reported to the commissioner. I think that is the plain effect of the words 'used by him as his dwelling only.' A comparison of the paragraph of section 25 prohibiting search warrants to search private dwellings lends weight to that conclusion. It is there provided that no search warrant shall issue to search any private dwelling occupied as such unless it is being used for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor, or unless it is in part used for some business purpose, such as a store, shop, saloon, restaurant, hotel, or boarding house. It is significant that the language of section 33 applies to the person occupying and using a private dwelling as a dwelling only, while the search warrant provision in section 25 applies to the dwelling occupied as a private dwelling, and exempts such dwelling from search unless it is being used for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, or unless 'it is in part used for some business purpose,' etc., so that any private dwelling which is used in part for some business purpose is subject to search. If it were intended that it should be unlawful for any one to possess liquors in one's private dwelling, which is in part used for some business purpose, Congress would not, in expressing that intent, have made use of the personal pronoun in the language 'occupied and used by him as his dwelling only,' and the intent would have been clearly expressed by using the language 'while the same is occupied and used as a dwelling only.' The conclusion is, in my judgment, unavoidable, therefore, that the clear effect of the words 'by him' and 'his' is to make possession in a private dwelling lawful as to any one except the person who is occupying and using the dwelling for other purposes than as a dwelling."

Storage in warehouse.—This section does not permit the storage of liquors in a warehouse for the personal use of the owner for beverage purposes. Street v. Lincoln Safe Deposit Co., (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 267 Fed. 706.

Duty of officers making seizure.—"If the officer proceeds by search warrant to seize articles in which a citizen may or may not have property, the intent of the act must necessarily be that he shall take such other appropriate proceedings as in due course of law follow seizure; and that is clearly indicated throughout the entire act. It is not necessary for the purposes of the present question to examine other sections than section 25, under which the seizure was had, and section 33, under which the respondent claims property in the liquor seized. Section 25 provides that the liquor so seized shall be subject to such disposition as the court may make thereof, and, if it is found to be unlawfully held or possessed or used, it shall be destroyed, unless the court shall otherwise order, and, under section 33, the burden of proof is placed upon the possessor in any action to prove that the liquor was lawfully acquired, possessed, and used. It is plain, therefore, that the intent of Congress as expressed in the act is that the officer making seizure shall cause appropriate proceedings to be brought in a court having jurisdiction, in order that claimants may have their day in court for the hearing and determination of the property rights in the liquor seized. If it appears to the officer, through the claim of a citizen or otherwise, that a judgment affecting the liquor seized might be rendered and that a citizen has claimed property in such liquor, a summons must be issued and served requiring such person to appear as claimant." U. S. v. Crossen, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 264 Fed. 459.

1919 Supp., p. 216, sec. 34.

Right limited to inspection.—The right to inspect books and papers does not give the right to seize them. U. S. v. Kraus, (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 270 Fed. 578.

I. IN GENERAL

Constitutionality.—The tax imposed by this section in addition to the penalty does not deprive a person of his property without due process of law. Ketterer v. Lederer, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 269 Fed. 153.

On a subsequent consideration of the above case the court again said:

"The basis of the cause of action which the plaintiff asserts is that a punishment is being inflicted upon him under the guise of the collection of a tax, and that this subjects him to the exercise of an unlawful power, and that it is none the less unlawful, although sanctioned by the language of the Volstead Act (41 Stat. 305), because this provision of that act is unconstitutional, in that it is prohibited by the 'due process of law' provisions of the Constitution. We adhere to the views already expressed, which may be summarized as follows:

"The act of Congress authorized and directed the defendant to make the assessment against the plaintiff, which was made upon the finding of facts as made. Congress has called this a tax, and directed it to be assessed and collected as such. If Congress had the power to impose this tax, it had the power to declare the occasion for the levy of the tax, and the mode of levy, and upon what fact conditions it should be levied. The bill of complaint calls upon us to make the finding that what Congress has solemnly declared it authorized to be done was not what it authorized to be done but something entirely different. In other and plain words, that although Congress declared it was levying and collecting a tax, it was in fact not levying a tax, but punishing the one who was called a taxpayer for an act which he had committed and which Congress had pronounced to be criminal. We decline to make this finding." Ketterer v. Lederer, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 269 Fed. 1010.

It seems that a tax in one sum may be imposed upon one dealing in intoxicating liquors through sales for limited purposes, and another additional tax be imposed upon him if he exceeds such limit. Ketterer v. Lederer, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 269 Fed. 153.

Word "traffic" construed.—The word "traffic," as used in this section, must be given its larger significance. It is a generalization of the more specific terms used in the other parts of the act, such as "sell," "purchase," "barter," "storage," "transport," "import," "export," "prescribe," "deliver," and "furnish" (see sections 3, 6, 7, 10, 13, 14, 26, 33, and 37), and includes every step taken in the commerce in liquor from the manufacturer to its ultimate destination. U. S. v. Freidericks, (D. C. N. J. 1921) 273 Fed. 188.

Word "penalty" construed.—"The word 'penalty,' as used in the act, would seem to have been used by Congress in the usual and ordinary legal meaning of this word, which meaning is fairly well-settled law. A penalty is a sum of money which the law exacts by way of punishment for the doing of some act which the law forbids, or for the failure to do some act, which the law requires to be done. It is true, as the definition foreshadows, that sometimes the word 'penalty' is undoubtedly used as a synonym of the word 'fine'; but as used in the Volstead Act it cannot fairly be so construed, because by another provision of the act a fine as such is clearly provided for. Moreover, no authority can be conferred by Congress upon the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to impose a fine in the strict sense of that word (Wong Wing v. United States, 163 U. S. loc. cit. 237, 16 Sup. Ct. 977, 41 L. ed. 140); or a fortiori, without a trial, or any sort of hearing theretofore had, as here." Kausch v. Moore, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 668.

As to whether the sums named in this section are penalties or taxes it has also been said: "A tax has been defined as:

'An enforced contribution for the payment of public expenses.' Houck v. Little River Drainage District, 239 U. S. 254, 265, 36 Sup. St. 58, 61 (60 L. ed. 266).

"And again:

'Generally speaking, a tax is a pecuniary burden laid upon individuals or property for the purpose of supporting the government.' New Jersey v. Anderson, 203 U. S. 483, 492, 27 Sup. Ct. 137, 140 (51 L. ed. 284).

"A penalty involves the idea of punishment. U. S. v. Reisinger, 128 U. S. 398, 402, 9 Sup. Ct. 99, 32 L. ed. 480; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 667, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 36 L. ed. 1123. And its character is not changed by the mode in which it is inflicted, whether by suit or criminal prosecution. U. S. v. Chouteau, 102 U. S. 603, 611, 26 L. ed. 246.

"In view of the foregoing tests, and from a careful reading of section 35 of the National Prohibition Act, in connection with the other provisions of that act, it would seem clear that the $500 and the $1,000 items mentioned in that section, and one of which is included among the items in the several notices, are clearly penalties, and not taxes. First, they are so named, but this is not conclusive; second, they are for the purpose of punishment, and not for the purpose of revenue; third, they are embodied in a statute which in its most important features is highly penal in nature." Thome v. Lynch, (D. C. Minn. 1921) 269 Fed. 995.

The court further said in this case:

"Though some of the exactions under section 35 of the National Prohibition Act are to be measured by double the amounts which were formerly special taxes under section 3244, R. S., and section 1001, Act Feb. 24, 1919, yet these exactions under section 35, by reason of their new character and status under the Eighteenth Amendment, are no longer taxes, but penalties. As persuasive to this conclusion, note the present character and status of the so-called taxes in section 35.

"First. They are no longer exactions for revenue purposes. The whole meaning and aim of the Eighteenth Amendment forbids such construction; and intention to derive revenue from taxes on crime must not be imputed to Congress, if it can be avoided. As was said in the License Tax Cases, supra:

"It is not necessary to decide whether or not Congress may, in any case, draw revenue by law from taxes on crime. There are, undoubtedly, fundamental principles of morality and justice which no Legislature is at liberty to disregard; but it is equally undoubted that no court except in the clearest cases can properly impute the disregard of those principles to the Legislature."

"Second. The character of these special taxes is vitally changed in another respect; they no longer imply 'that the licensee shall be subject to no penalties under national law, if he pays.' In fact, the contrary is expressly provided by the language of section 35 of the National Prohibition Act.

"Third. These so-called special taxes are now in section 35, classed with the penalties of $500 and $1,000, and appear to partake of the character of these items. Indeed, the $500 and $1,000 penalties are called in section 35 'additional' penalties.

"Fourth. These special taxes are to be collected with the $500 and $1,000 penalties.

"Fifth. The 'double the amount' feature provided in section 35 as to these special taxes smacks of penalties.

"There is nothing in section 35, except the name 'taxes,' which indicates any difference in character or purpose between the so-called taxes and the penalties. Names are not controlling. While it may not always be easy to distinguish a tax from a penalty, yet where an exaction is made by governmental authority upon an occupation which is expressly prohibited as criminal by the same governmental authority, and where the exaction is not clearly shown to be made for revenue purposes, it would seem that such exaction must be classed as a penalty, if classification is to have any real meaning."

Judicial notice of internal revenue regulations.—The court will take judicial notice of instructions issued by the Internal Revenue Department to officers of that department in regard to suits for the collection of the taxes and penalties provided for in this section. Accardo v. Fontenot, (E. D. La. 1920) 269 Fed. 447.

II. RECOVERY OF TAXES AND PENALTY

Method of recovering of penalty.—It is held that the recovery of the penalty imposed by this section cannot be had by distraint, it being said that to allow a person's property to be thus taken and sold would be to take it and sell it without due process of law. Kausch v. Moore, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 668; Thome v. Lynch, (D. C. Minn. 1921) 269 Fed. 995.

Congress has not placed in the hands of the collector of revenue the power to collect, by distress and sale, the penalties provided for in this section of the National Prohibition Act. Collection must be by suit in the District Court. Kelly v. Lewellyn, (W. D. Pa. 1921) 274 Fed. 112.

The collection of taxes claimed to be assessed under this act cannot be made by distraint, it being declared that under the provisions of this section taxes cannot be assessed or collected; that the double tax provided for in the act, and the penalties prescribed, are nothing more nor less than punishment for the commission of criminal offenses and that these penalties must be collected by civil actions, or pronounced as judgments in criminal cases. Ledbetter v. Bailey, (W. D. N. C. 1921) 274 Fed. 375.

In Thome v. Lynch, (D. C. Minn. 1921) 269 Fed. 995, the court, after declaring that the usual method of collecting a penalty is by suit, said:

"Not only is this method expressly authorized and provided by statute (section 3213, R. S.), but the method of procedure by suit is also specifically recognized by the same section 35 of the National Prohibition Act. Furthermore, under section 3187, R. S. the collector of internal revenue, though authorized to collect taxes by distraint, was not authorized to collect penalties in general by that method, but only certain specified penalties, viz., the 5 per cent penalty added under section 3184, and by express provision in section 3176 the penalty therein provided; both of these penalties being added to taxes properly so called—that is, exactions for revenue for government use."

Restraining collection of taxes and penalties.—There is authority that the collection of taxes and penalties under this section will not be enjoined, Regal Drug Corp. v. Wardell, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 182; and other authority which holds that as to a tax injunction will not lie. Ketterer v. Lederer, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 269 Fed. 153; Kausch v. Moore, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 668.

There is authority, however, that section 3224 of the Revised Statutes (3 Fed. Stat. Ann. 2d ed. p. 1032) providing that no suit for the purpose of restraining the assessment or collection of any tax shall be maintained in any court, does not apply to a proceeding for the enforcement of a penalty by distraint for a violation of the Volstead Act. Kausch v. Moore, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 668, wherein the court said:

"Upon the motion to dismiss the bill, it is urged that injunction will not lie to restrain the collection of a tax. This contention, so far as it is applicable to the facts, is well taken and must needs be sustained. Dodge v. Osborn, 240 U. S. 118, 38 Sup. Ct. 275, 60 L. ed. 557. But this rule applies, in my opinion, only to so much of the amount threatened to be exacted as in fact constitutes a tax; it ought not to apply to a penalty even though such penalty could be paid under protest; and thereupon, if such payment be not warranted by law, be recovered back by an action at law directly against the collector. So much the more so, should injunction be not refused, when, as here, the payment thereof would be impossible without ruining plaintiff in business and property. If, then, the exaction of the penalty claimed should be held to be at this time, and in the mode threatened, unlawful, injunction ought to lie as against so much of the threatened exaction, if any, as is unlawful. As stated, injunction will not lie to prevent the collection of a tax, or even to prevent the collection of such tax, when, as here, the amount thereof is doubled upon the contingency of the violation of the law, by the forbidden sale, or manufacture of liquor. In such case section 3224, R. S. applies and forbids an injunction against the collector. Dodge v. Osborn, supra. But it would seem to be fairly clear that a statute which merely forbids injunction as against a tax ought not to be so extended as to include injunction against the enforcement of a penalty. Certainly, this ought not to be done in a case wherein the manner of the collection, as here, is not warranted by law. In reaching this conclusion, I start with the assumption that the imposition of the penalty is clearly within the power of Congress under the provisions of the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution. So much being conceded, the question arises whether the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has the authority, merely upon reports of investigators to the effect that plaintiff has unlawfully sold liquor at retail, to assess such penalty, and without notice to the plaintiff, and without an opportunity anywhere given him to be heard, to empower the defendant collector to distrain plaintiff's property to pay the penalty so assessed?" To the same effect see Thome v. Lynch (D. C. Minn. 1921) 269 Fed. 995, wherein the court said:

"As to the third question, whether the cases at bar call for preliminary injunctions: If the foregoing conclusion as to the nature of the exactions be correct, then section 3224 is not a bar to the relief sought. And for the same reasons the remedies provided in sections 3225 and 3226, R. S., have no application to the instant cases. Nor is it an adequate remedy at law for the plaintiffs to pay the exactions demanded, and sue for recovery. In some cases it is alleged that it is impossible for plaintiffs to pay the amounts demanded, sums running as high as $6,500, and that seizure and sale would ruin plaintiffs' business and means of livelihood. The equities in favor of plaintiffs are strong and persuasive." See further to the same effect Connelly v. Gardner, (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 272 Fed. 911; Kelly v. Lewellyn, (W. D. Pa. 1921) 274 Fed. 108.

In Accardo v. Fontenot, (E. D. La. 1920) 269 Fed. 447, the collection of taxes and penalties was enjoined against the plaintiffs where there was no charge at all against one plaintiff; another was charged only with unlawful possession, which carries no penalty under this section, an acquittal therein being shown; and the other was charged with selling unlawfully, an ample bond having been given to secure payment of the assessment, but no trial having been had. The court said:

"Acquittal in all of these cases would be a bar to the collection of the penalties in a civil suit. If an ex parte report of a revenue or prohibition officer is all the evidence required of illegal sale or manufacture, which is very doubtful, there is a strong presumption in these cases that the prohibition officers were not in possession of sufficient evidence of even probable cause on which to base such report.

"Yet payment is demanded in each case, and collection is sought to be enforced by the drastic procedure of distraint. No doubt the Commissioner of Internal Revenue considered himself amply justified in making the assessment, and the collector of internal revenue should not be criticised or censured for attempting to make collection. His duties are purely ministerial, and he is vested with no discretion, once the assessment is placed in his hands. But the system is all wrong, and tends to work great hardship and injustice to the individual, however desirable from an administrative viewpoint it may be.

"I think the bills teem with equity, and present such extraordinary facts as to warrant the issuance of preliminary injunctions."

III. ACT AS REPEALING OTHER LAWS

1. In General

Act as repeal of other acts.—"The National Prohibition Act expressly (1) repealed all inconsistent existing law, and (2) provided that the act is but an addition to all other existing law. This renders inapplicable all rules of implied repeal." Violette v. Walsh, (D. C. Mont. 1921) 272 Fed. 1014.

This provision is only declaratory of the general law. U. S. v. Stafoff, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 417.

The Alaska Bone Dry Law (1918 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. 2d ed. p. 48, et seq.) was not repealed by the National Prohibition Act. Koppitz v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 96.

Wartime Prohibition Act not repealed.—This act did not repeal the provisions of the Wartime Prohibition Act (1919 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. 2d ed. p. 199). Vincenti v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 114.

Under the terms of this provision a person is not relieved from liability for sales of intoxicating liquors in violation of the Wartime Prohibition Act of Nov. 21, 1918. Ford v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 269 Fed. 609.

2. Revenue Laws

a. Prior Offenses

In the case of a violation of the revenue laws occurring before the National Prohibition Act went into effect, such offense was punishable by the law then in force. Alexander v. Thurmond, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 474.

Provisions of the revenue laws were not repealed by the National Prohibition Act so far as relates to punishment for offenses committed previous to the taking effect of that act. Tisch v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 208.

Where the National Prohibition Act does not expressly repeal the internal revenue laws relating to distilling liquors, there is no implied repeal thereof, so far as relates to violations already committed. Consequently an indictment and conviction may be had under those laws though the indictment is found after the taking effect of the Prohibition Act. Howard v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 301.

b. "Provisions of Law That Are Inconsistent"

This section only repealed revenue laws which are inconsistent with this act. Es p. Lawrence, (D. C. Mont. 1921) 273 Fed. 876, distinguishing Yuginovich Case, 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 551, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, and holding that under the facts of the case sections 3258, 3281 and 3286 of the Revised Statutes [4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 24, 41, 46] were not repealed, the offense charged not involving distillation for beverage purposes.

"The word 'inconsistent' has a broad meaning. Speaking generally, a law which has for its primary purpose the absolute prohibition of the manufacture and sale of spirituous liquors is manifestly inconsistent with the whole body of legislation which found no fault with the business of the manufacture and sale of spirituous liquors, but only sought to derive a revenue for the support of the government from such manufacture and sale by the imposition of taxes, and to prevent persons engaged in such business from defrauding the government out of the taxes imposed. In view, however, of the large volume of legislation enacted for the purpose of revenue collection, and the language of the above-quoted section, it would seem unwise to discuss the question of repeal, except as is necessarily required in disposing of the question before us. No general rule or declaration of law with reference to all revenue legislation could safely be declared, but each case should be decided on its own facts and law." Ketchum v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 416.

"This section expressly continued the revenue laws in force and is not contrary to the Eighteenth Amendment. That amendment does not prohibit the manufacture, transportation, and sale of intoxicating liquors for any purpose whatever, but only for beverage purposes. Such liquors may still be made, carried about, and sold for medicinal, sacramental, scientific, and some commercial purposes. The restraints applicable to liquors for such uses do not arise from the amendment, but are justified as reasonable safeguards to prevent the abuse of liberty as to them, and to attain enforcement of the prohibition for beverage purposes. Evidently there is much field left by the amendment for the operation of the revenue laws, which are preserved by section 35. Since that section expressly provides that taxation of illegal acts shall not be had in advance, and that the exaction of the tax afterwards shall not legalize them, there is no contravention, even in spirit, of the prohibitory amendment. The tax operates only as an additional penalty, and tends rather to the enforcement than the defeat of the prohibition scheme." U. S. v. One Essex Touring Automobile, (N. D. Ga. 1920) 266 Fed. 138.

As to the effect of this act on provisions of the Internal Revenue Law, it has been said: "It goes without saying that this amendment and the act passed by its authority effected a radical change in the legislative policy and attitude of the country respecting alcoholic beverages. Instead of encouraging, or at least recognizing as legitimate, the production and use of such beverages, and deriving a very large revenue therefrom, the manufacture and sale of any sort of beverage containing one-half of 1 per centum of alcohol or more is now wholly and strictly forbidden. This being so, it would seem necessarily to follow, under the most familiar rules of statutory construction, that if the Volstead Act is inconsistent with the provisions of section 3296 and also covers the same subject-matter, it supersedes and by implication repeals that section. And to our minds the Volstead Act, in its entire scope and purpose, is plainly inconsistent with the scheme of revenue protection embodied in the Revised Statutes and in the section under review." Reed v. Thurmond, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 252.

c. Enumeration of Revenue Laws Held Repealed

In general.—So far as intoxicating liquors intended for beverage purposes are concerned, the provisions of U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 3257, 3279, 3281, and 3282 [4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 40, 41, 44], making it a criminal offense to defraud or attempt to defraud the United States of a tax upon spirits distilled by one carrying on the business of a distillery, or to fail to keep the sign "registered distillery" on the outside of a place of business used as a distillery, or to carry on the business of a distillery without bond, or to make or permit mash to be made in any building other than a distillery authorized by law, must be regarded as repealed, although this section, which repeals all prior laws only to the extent of their inconsistency with it, provides that the act shall not relieve any person from any liability, civil or criminal, theretofore or thereafter incurred under existing laws. U. S. v. Yuginovich, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 551, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said:

"It is, of course, settled that repeals by implication are not favored. It is equally well settled that a later statute repeals former ones when clearly inconsistent with the earlier enactments. United States v. Tynen, 11 Wall. 88, 20 L. ed. 153. In construing penal statutes, it is the rule that later enactments repeal former ones practically covering the same acts, but fixing a lesser penalty. The concluding phrase of § 35, by itself considered, is strongly indicative of an intention to retain the old laws. But this section must be interpreted in view of the constitutional provision contained in the 18th Amendment, and in view of the provisions of the Volstead Act intended to make that Amendment effective.

"Having in mind these principles, and considering now the first count of the indictment, charging an attempt to defraud and actually defrauding the government of the revenue tax, we do not believe that the general language used at the close of § 35 evidences the intention of Congress to inflict for such an offense the punishment provided in § 3257 [4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 23], with the resulting forfeiture, fine, and imprisonment, and at the same time to authorize prosecution and punishment under § 35, enacting lesser and special penalties for failing to pay such taxes by imposing a tax in double the amount provided by law, with an additional penalty of $500 on retailers and $1,000 on manufacturers. Moreover, the concluding words of the first paragraph of § 35, as to all the offenses charged, must be read in the light of established legal principles governing the interpretation of statutes, and in view of the provisions of the Volstead Act itself, making it unlawful to possess intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes, or property designed for the manufacture of such liquor, and providing for its destruction. We agree with the court below that while Congress manifested an intention to tax liquors illegally as well as those legally produced, which was within its constitutional power, it did not intend to preserve the old penalties prescribed in § 3257 [4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 23] in addition to the specific provision for punishment made in the Volstead Act.

"We have less difficulty with the other sections of the prior revenue legislation under which the charges, already set forth, are made. We think it was not intended to keep on foot the requirement as to displaying the words 'Registered Distillery' in a place intended for the production of liquor for beverage purposes which could no longer be lawfully conducted; nor to require a bond for the control of such production; nor to penalize the making of mash in a distillery which could not be authorized by law."

This decision was distinguished in Ex p. Lawrence, (D. C. Mont. 1921) 273 Fed. 876, holding sections, 3258, 3281 and 3286 of the Revised Statutes were not repealed under the facts of the case.

Sections 3242, 3257, 3258, 3260 and 3279 of the Revised Statutes [3 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1044; 4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 23, 24, 26, 40] and embodied in the revenue laws are repealed by this act. Ketchum v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 416.

This act repealed sections 923 and 3062 of the Revised Statutes [3 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 324; 2 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1161] in so far as they relate to intoxicating liquors imported into the United States. U. S. v. One Hudson Touring Car, (E. D. Mich. 1921) 274 Fed. 473.

Section 3244 of the Revised Statutes [3 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1045] has been repealed by implication. Ravitz v. Hamilton, (W. D. Ky. 1921) 272 Fed. 721.

Sections 3258 and 3282 of the Revised Statutes [4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 24, 44] are repealed. U. S. v. Stafoff, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 417.

Sections 3258, 3279, 3281 of the Revised Statutes are repealed. Sanford v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 369.

"Taking the new statute as a whole, its provisions would appear to cover and provide for the punishment of every act which could be punished under the former provisions of the Revised Statutes with regard to the manufacture and sale of liquors for beverage purposes. To hold that the old law is continued would therefore be to hold that two inconsistent sets of statutory provisions, punishing the same substantial act, and with differing penalties, were of force, and that a person could be prosecuted and punished under section 3 and section 6 of the new statute for transporting any liquor at all, without the required permit, and at the same time prosecuted and punished under the provisions of section 3296 [4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 56] for transporting liquor without having previously paid the tax that he is forbidden by law to pay.

"Giving to the repealing clause of the last statute that construction which it would be assumed the legislative department intended—that is, that it should be construed in harmony with existing rules of law and the existing rules of statutory construction—it appears to the court that the sections referred to have been repealed by the last statute, and the indictment will be accordingly quashed." U. S. v. Windham, (E. D. S. C. 1920) 264 Fed. 376.

This act repealed section 3450 [4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 311] of the Revised Statutes in so far as the latter section provides for the forfeiture of vehicles. U. S. v. One Haynes Automobile, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 926.

It has been held that this Act repeals by implication section 16 of the Act of Feb. 8, 1875 [3 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) p. 1053] relating to the carrying on of the liquor business without paying special tax or with intent to defraud. Farley v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 269 Fed. 721.

Provisions as to penalties in prior revenue laws are held to be repealed by the provisions in this Act. U. S. v. Puhac, (W. D. Pa. 1920) 268 Fed. 392; U. S. v. Fortman, (W. D. Okla. 1920) 268 Fed. 873.

Distilled spirits for use as beverage.—"In the main the federal courts are taking the view that the laws, so far as distilled spirits for use as a beverage are concerned, are defunct, having been superseded by the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution and the legislation enacted by Congress in aid of its enforcement." Ledbetter v. Bailey, (W. D. N. C. 1921) 274 Fed. 375.

Operation of distilleries.—It is said that this act operates as a repeal of the previous internal revenue acts governing the operation of distilleries. U. S. v. Yugini, (D. C. Ore. 1920) 266 Fed. 746.

d. Enumeration of Revenue Laws Held Not Repealed

The provisions of this act do not operate as a general repeal of the revenue laws. U. S. v. Sacein Rouhana Farhat, (S. D. Ohio 1920) 269 Fed. 33, wherein the court said:

"The Volstead Act was designedly made drastic in its provisions. The contention that the revenue laws relating to the manufacture and sale of liquors are repealed does not consist with the provisions of the act that its regulations for the manufacture of intoxicating liquors shall be construed to be in addition to existing laws, that the tax imposed by the revenue laws shall be continued, and that the laws relating to the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors shall be enforced. Section 9, title 3, by exempting industrial alcohol plants and bonded warehouses from the requirements of given sections, necessarily implies that manufacturers operating other kinds of liquor producing plants are not thus exempt. If the act repealed the revenue laws as an entirety, that section is superfluous. Such a conclusion is not permissible, if a construction can be legitimately found which will give force to and preserve all the language of the statute." In this case it was held that sections 3258, 3260 and 3279, were not inconsistent with the provisions of the Prohibition Act.

This section did not by implication repeal the provisions of the internal revenue act relative to the taxing of alcoholic liquors or the penalties denounced for violating them. U. S. v. Freidericks, (D. C. N. J. 1921) 273 Fed. 188, holding that this act did not repeal section 3296 R. S. [4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 56] nor section 51 of the Act of August 27, 1894, [4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 107] nor sections 600 and 604 [1919 Supp. 140, 143] of the Act of Feb. 24, 1919. The court said:

"Manifestly this act was not intended to prescribe the only rules which should govern the manufacture of and traffic in intoxicating liquor. Neither in title nor provision is there warrant for the contention that this act was to supplant in toto the earlier laws dealing with the general subject of manufacture of and traffic in intoxicating liquor. True, it was a prohibitory enactment; but the prohibitions did not go beyond those ordained by the Eighteenth Amendment, which were limited to the manufacture of and traffic in intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes. On the contrary, the act (sections 3, 6, and 12, title 2) contemplates the manufacture of and traffic in alcoholic liquors for nonbeverage purposes. In section 3 it is declared that all the provisions of the act were to 'be liberally construed to the end that the use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage may be prevented.' And section 35 of the same title . . . gives legislative emphasis and sanction to the well-supported canon of interpretation of statutes, viz. repeals by implication are not favored, and may be inferred only if the later statute is so repugnant to or inconsistent with the earlier one that it is clear that the legislative body must have so intended."

This act did not repeal section 3250 [4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 19] of the Revised Statutes making it an offense to remove intoxicating liquor with an intent to deprive the government of the tax thereon. U. S. v. One Cole Aero Eight Automobile, (D. C. Mont. 1921) 273 Fed. 934.

This section did not repeal section 3251 of the Revised Statutes [4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 19] imposing a tax on the manufacturer of distilled spirits. Violette v. Walsh, (D. C. Mont. 1921) 272 Fed. 1014.

In U. S. v. Sohm, (D. C. Mont. 1920) 265 Fed. 910, the defendants, indicted for alleged violations of R. S. sections 3258, 3260 and 3282 [4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 24, 26, 44] regarding the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, demurred and moved to quash the indictment on the ground that it charged no offense by reason of the repeal of such sections by this act. Answering this contention, the court said:

"Before the Eighteenth Amendment, prohibiting manufacture of and traffic in 'intoxicating liquors . . . for beverage purposes,' is an elaborate 'code' of federal law governing manufacture of and traffic in distilled spirits and other intoxicating liquors for beverage and other purposes, in the main to provide public revenue. In so far as provisions of this Code apply to and sanction spirits and liquors for beverage purposes only, they are rendered obsolete or repealed by the amendment.

"Subsequent to the amendment is the National Prohibition Act, to effectuate the amendment and also to govern manufacture and traffic in such spirits and liquors for nonbeverage purposes; this latter not only as incidental to prohibition, but also to provide public revenue.

"In title 2, § 35, the act expressly provides that 'all provisions of law that are inconsistent with this act are repealed only to the extent of such inconsistency, and the regulations herein provided for the manufacture or traffic in intoxicating liquor shall be construed as in addition to existing laws,' and in section 9, title 3, the act recognizes the continued existence of many enumerated sections of the Codes, including sections 3258, 3260, and provides these sections shall not apply to industrial alcohol plants only, though the commissioner may so apply them by regulations made by him.

"This express repeal in the act renders all rules of implied repeal inapplicable, demonstrates no implied repeal is intended. 'Expressio unius,' etc. See cases cited in 36 Cyc. 1081, and annual annotations.

"It follows that save for clear and unavoidable inconsistencies, both said Code and the act, wherein their terms are applicable to spirits and liquors for nonbeverage purposes, are present law, the latter cumulative to the former, however cumbersome and confused the result may be.

"It may be observed that, if the act more lightly penalizes an offense identical as in the Code, the latter is repealed for inconsistency.

"In the act is nothing forbidding, as does section 3282 of the Code, making a mash fit for the production of spirits on premises other than a duly authorized distillery. Hence there is no inconsistency, section 3282 is not repealed, and the first count of the indictment, based thereon, states a public offense.

"It hardly needs be pointed out that, subject to the act, distilleries will continue to exist and mashes to be made, and now, as before, it is essential the latter be made only at the former duly authorized. The object of the act requires this as much as did the object of the Code.

"Section 3, title 2, of the act provides that intoxicating liquor for nonbeverage purposes may be manufactured, etc., 'only as herein provided.' But 'only as herein provided,' by virtue of section 35, includes the provisions of all consistent existing law, to which the act is but an addition.

"So, while said section 3 provides for permits from the Commissioner and in form by him prescribed, and for bonds in his discretion and in form by him prescribed, section 3258 of the Code, requiring registration in statutory form with the collector of stills set up and possessed (upon which section is based the second count of the indictment), and section 3260 of the Code, requiring a bond in statutory form (upon which section is based the third count of the indictment), are not inconsistent with the act, are not repealed, and the said counts state public offenses."

Sections 3258, 3281, and 3282 of the Revised Statutes are not repealed by this act. U. S. v. Phillips, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 270 Fed. 281 [4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 24, 41, 44].

Section 3258 of the Revised Statutes [4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 24] relating to the registry of stills and section 3282 of the Revised Statutes [4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 44] were not repealed by this act. U. S. v. De Large, (D. C. Neb. 1921) 269 Fed. 820. The court said: "Notwithstanding the fact that the greater number of cases cited have held that these portions of the Revised Statutes are no longer in force, as applied to one who seeks to manufacture distilled liquor contrary to the Volstead Act, the conclusions reached in the case of United States v. Sohm appear to be the proper interpretation. The intent of Congress is the essential thing, and that intent is not left to conjecture. . . . It is obvious from a reading of the section that the prior internal revenue laws, so far as they provided for paying taxes or charges imposed on the manufacture or traffic in intoxicating liquor, were not entirely superseded, because it is expressly provided that a tax shall be assessed and collected from the person responsible for the illegal manufacture or sale in double the amount previously provided by law, but the payment of such a tax cannot be made in advance; nor does the payment give any right to manufacture or sell such liquor. It is also provided that all provisions of law that are inconsistent with the Volstead Act are repealed only to the extent of such inconsistency. There doubtless may be features of the prior revenue laws that are inconsistent with the Volstead Act, but there is no inconsistency in making it unlawful (section 25, tit. 2, Volstead Act) for one to possess property designed for the manufacture of liquor intended for use in violating that act and in also requiring the one possessing a still or distilling apparatus set up to file a statement seeking registration with the collector (section 3258, Rev. Stats.), or making it unlawful to make or ferment mash in any other premises than an authorized distillery (section 3282, Rev. Stats.).

"If the two offenses were combined in a single section, providing that it should be unlawful to possess property designed for the unlawful manufacture of intoxicating liquor and providing a penalty, and also providing that if one should so possess such property and should also fail to register a distilling apparatus with the collector, or should also possess the mash fit for distillation elsewhere than in an authorized distillery, he should be punished more severely, it would seem quite illogical to say that the two acts were contradictory, mutually destructive, or inconsistent."

Section 3296 of the Revised Statutes (4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 79) was not repealed by this act. U. S. v. Turner, (W. D. Va. 1920) 266 Fed. 248.

JUDGMENTS

Vol. IV, p. 604, sec. 966. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 2.]

Interest in creditors' suit.—Interest in a creditors' suit brought by the United States on a judgment for a penalty recovered in a proceeding begun by criminal indictment is allowable only from the time when judgment was entered in the creditors' suit, since the original judgment does not fall within the terms of the only applicable federal statute, viz., this section, providing that interest shall be allowed on all judgments in civil causes. Pierce v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 398, 41 S. Ct. 365, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, modifying and affirming (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 514, 171 C. C. A. 1.

Judgment for excess charges.—Interest is allowable on a judgment against a carrier for excess charges. Wabash R. Co. v. Koenig, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 909.

Vol. IV, p. 608, sec. 1. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 5.]

Effect of state statute.—Where a state statute provides that a judgment or decree of the United States District Court or of the state Supreme Court or chancery court or any state court of a different county shall not be a lien on defendant's property until enrolled in the office of the clerk of the Circuit Court of the county, it has been held that a judgment rendered in a federal court in that state is not a lien until so enrolled. In re Jackson Light, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 223.

Effect of repeal.—Regarding the effect of this repeal as necessitating the docketing of federal court judgments in the clerk's office of the state court of the county where the judgment was rendered, the court, in In re Jackson Light, etc., Co., (S. D. Miss. 1919) 265 Fed. 389, said: "This case has been fully covered in the briefs and certificate of the referee, and the only new, or additional, view which presents itself to the court is with reference to the effect of the repeal of section 3 of the act of 1888, as amended by the act of 1895. Section 3 was repealed by the Act of August 23, 1916, the repealing act to become effective on January 1, 1917. 39 Stat. at Large, 531.

"It seems to be conceded by counsel for the judgment creditor that, under the act of 1888, he has no lien on any property outside of the county where the judgment was rendered; but it is claimed that in that county, to wit, Hinds county, the enrollment of the judgment in the office of the clerk of the United States District Court was sufficient to create a lien on all property of the defendant situated within that county. This contention renders meaningless the Act of August 23, 1916, repealing section 3 of the Act of August 1, 1888, as amended by the Act of March 2, 1895. The courts must give effect to section 3, while in force, and attribute to Congress a substantial reason or motive for repealing the same. The said section 3 of the act of 1888 is as follows:

"Nothing herein shall be construed to require the docketing of a judgment or decree of a United States court, or the filing of a transcript thereof, in any state office within the same county or parish in the state of Louisiana in which the judgment * * * is rendered, in order that such judgment or decree may be a lien on any property within such county." 25 Stat. at Large, 357.

"By act approved March 2, 1895 (chapter 180, 28 Stat. at Large, page 813), the said section 3 was amended by an addition thereto which made its effectiveness conditioned upon the clerk of the United States court being required by law to have a permanent office and a judgment record open at all times for public inspection in the county or parish where the judgment or decree was rendered. As amended, section 3 reads as follows:

"That nothing herein shall be construed to require the docketing of a judgment or decree of a United States court, or the filing of a transcript thereof, in any state office within the same county or the same parish in the state of Louisiana in which the judgment or decree is rendered, in order that such judgment or decree may be a lien on any property within such county, if the clerk of the United States court be required by law to have a permanent office and a judgment record open at all times for public inspection in such county or parish." 28 Stat. at Large, 814.

"The Act of August 23, 1916, chapter 397, 39 Stat. at Large, 531, repealing section 3, is as follows:

"Section 1. [Docketing in State Court . . . Repeal of Statute.] That an act approved March second, eighteen hundred and ninety-five, entitled "An act to amend section three of an act entitled 'An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States,' approved August first, eighteen hundred and eighty-eight," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

"Sec. 2. [Act When Effective.] That this act shall take effect on and after January first, nineteen hundred and seventeen."

"It seems very clear that, under section 3 of the act of 1888, it was not necessary to enroll the federal court judgment in the state circuit clerk's office of the county where the judgment was rendered if the clerk of the United States court had a permanent office and a judgment record open at all times for public inspection. Section 3 obviated the necessity of such enrollment, but the repeal of section 3, by the act above quoted, which became effective January 1, 1917, rendered the same procedure as to a federal court judgment necessary in the county where the judgment was rendered as was required in the other counties of the state in order to obtain a lien."

JUDICIAL OFFICERS

Vol. IV, p. 631, sec. 19. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 79.]

Historical.—"While the title of United States commissioner is no older than the act of 1896 (29 Stat. 184), they were then created to 'have the same powers and perform the same duties as are now imposed upon commissioners of the Circuit Courts, * * * and all [existing] acts and parts of acts applicable' to the former Circuit Court commissioners (except as to appointment and fees) were specifically made applicable to United States commissioners.

"Only a year earlier, in 1895, the Supreme Court had reviewed these acts in United States v. Allred, 155 U. S. 591, 15 Sup. Ct. 231, 39 L. Ed. 273, and as it is well known to the older bar that the same men continued to perform the same duties after 1896, the effect of the statute of that year may be said to be no more than a change of title and of fee scale, plus the infusion of a supervisory power on the part of the Attorney General. For the essential nature, scope, and legal relation of the office one must look farther back.

"It does not seem useful to tabulate the numerous statutes giving special duties (e. g., matters of extradition) to commissioners, but their development as examining and committing magistrates is relevant to this motion. Since the Judiciary Act of 1789 (1 Stat. 91) every 'justice and judge of the United States' (in the original phrase) has had the power of ordering arrests and holding the accused to prison or bail. This is the essence of magistracy, and the power to commit implies and includes the power to examine and discharge.

"Considering the extent of country and the fewness of judges, the original act empowered practically every state magistrate, and especially justices of the peace, to act in holding offenders for the United States courts. The substance of this part of the old act became R. S. § 727, and is now Judicial Code, § 270.

"The early files of this court contain many commitments by local justices of the peace of the state of New York, and Sandford v. Nichols, 13 Mass. 286, 7 Am. Dec. 151, shows how that system worked (or did not) in revenue cases where search warrants were needed.

"It did not take long for experience to demonstrate the difficulty and inutility of the borrowed and grudgingly given services of state officials, and in 1793 (1 Stat. 334) the Circuit Courts were authorized to appoint 'discreet persons learned in the law' to take bail in criminal causes.

"So far as I can discover, it was from this seed that 'commissioners' grew; the title was assumed, but was recognized by the act of 1817 (3 Stat. 350), which in enlarging the powers of the 'discreet persons' of 1793, speaks of the 'commissioners who now are or hereafter may be' appointed.

"Next after the original statute of 1789 the most important Judiciary Act of the first century of the republic was the statute of 1842 (5 Stat. 516), which in its first and second sections expressly gives to the commissioners of the Circuit Courts the powers of a justice of the peace in respect of 'arresting, imprisoning or bailing' offenders against laws of the United States, and the substance of this grant is now R. S. § 1014." U. S. v. Maresca, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 266 Fed. 713.

General powers and duties.—The commissioner is an officer of the court, whose services may be availed of or dispensed with at the option of the court itself. There is no legal obligation on the court to send any part of a case to a commissioner. United States Willow Furniture Co. v. La Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 184.

Courts in which commissioners sit.—Regarding the question of the court in which commissioners sit, the court said:

"No statute furnishes a direct reply. Undoubtedly the official when taking testimony in equity or assessing damages in admiralty, is sitting in the District Court. In my opinion, when exercising the power of issuing a warrant in extradition, he is not sitting in or holding any court, and, when considering under a special statute the status of an alleged Chinese laborer, he is holding a court of his own, which is by statute inferior to the District Court.

"Remembering that nothing but an act of Congress can make an inferior court of the United States, that no act makes a commissioner's court, and that by tradition an examining and committing magistrate, especially a justice of the peace, holds a court, I am compelled to the conclusion that, when a commissioner issues criminal process, including a search warrant, he does it in and as part of the proceedings of the District Court. But he does the act, not by virtue of any grant of power to the court as such, but by grant directly to him, and it is the same power which is given by the same statutes, and given personally to Justices of the Supreme Court and Circuit and District Judges, each of whom may sit as magistrates, with the same and no other powers. The view that this entire matter of issuing a search warrant and then directing the return of what was seized thereunder is a District Court proceeding is confirmed by study of the nature and history of the case reported as Veeder v. United States, 252 Fed. 414, 164 C. C. A. 338, certiorari refused 246 U. S. 675, 38 Sup. Ct. 428, 62 L. ed. 933. There a District Judge issued the search warrant, held a hearing after seizure made, and refused to direct return of what was seized. A direct writ of error was then taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals, which reversed, whereupon the United States applied for a certiorari, challenging the right of the Circuit Court of Appeals to review—a proposition in my judgment clearly right, unless that which was reviewed and reversed was a final order or judgment of the District Court; for no grant to the Circuit Court of Appeals can be found giving it power to review orders of District Judges merely as such. They must speak for, in, and on behalf of the District Court, and it is the court's action that is reviewed." U. S. v. Maresca, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 266 Fed. 713.

United States commissioners as justices of the peace, see U. S. v. Maresca, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 266 Fed. 713.

Review of rulings.—A writ of error lies to the Circuit Court of Appeals from a commissioner's order directing the return of property seized under a search warrant. U. S. v. Maresca, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 266 Fed. 713.

Vol. IV, p. 651, sec. 824. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 90.]

"On a trial before a jury."—The word "trial" like the word "hearing" connotes a contest and certainly something more aggressive than the mere execution of a consent and therefore a verdict taken by consent is not a "trial before a jury" and the fee provided by this act for such a trial should not be allowed in the case of a verdict by consent. Warner v. Liquid Carbonic Co., (N. D. Ga. 1921) 270 Fed. 294.

Vol. IV, p. 657, sec. 828. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 95.]

I. General matters.

XIV. Receiving, keeping and paying out money.

I. GENERAL MATTERS (p. 659)

Deposit to secure fees.—The right of the district court to make a rule requiring a deposit to secure the clerk's fees in advance has been recognized and it is not subject to collateral attack on appeal. King v. Weiss, etc., Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 257, wherein the court said:

"Complaint is also made because the trial court enforced against the defendants the existing District Court equity rule, which requires a defendant to make a deposit to secure clerk fees in advance before his papers in defense may be filed. Such a question cannot be collaterally raised, on such an appeal as this, but must be brought to this court, if at all, only by some direct challenge. While the clerk is compelled to collect his fees at the time the services are performed, and while an advance deposit may be the only practicable method by which he can do so, yet, when we consider that the defendant is brought into court and compelled to defend, and that all services rendered generally in a case by the clerk are chargeable, in the first instance, against plaintiff and his cost deposit, it may well be that only a comparatively small deposit should be required from defendant. However, the power to make a rule on this subject rests with the District Court, and it is to be presumed that due weight has been given to all the considerations affecting the requirements embodied in this rule. If interested counsel or parties think otherwise, doubtless the District Court will entertain a direct application to modify the rule, and if this court has any reviewing power, it can then be invoked in some suitable manner."

XIV. RECEIVING, KEEPING AND PAYING OUT MONEY (p. 675)

Liberty bonds.—By virtue of section 1320 of the Revenue Act of 1919 (1919 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. p. 192) giving Liberty Bonds deposited in lieu of surety or sureties the same force and effect as "certified checks, bank drafts, post office money orders or cash" it is held that the clerk is entitled to his fee on bonds so deposited as in other cases for "receiving, keeping and paying out money." McGovern v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 262.

Vol. IV, p. 678, sec. 829. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 107.]

V. Subpoenas.

XI. Keeping boats, vessels or other property.

V. SUBPOENAS (p. 684)

Subpoenas to witnesses not testifying.—There is no abuse of discretion in taxing as costs the fees and expenses of the marshal in serving subpoenas on witnesses who did not in fact testify where they were subpoenaed in good faith, their testimony being deemed material to the issue involved. Kirby v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 391.

XI. KEEPING BOATS, VESSELS OR OTHER PROPERTY (p. 685)

Wharfage.—A marshal cannot include in his bill of costs an item for wharfage which he never paid nor authorized, and an attempt by a navigation company to collect its claim for wharfage by having the marshal include it as a disbursement in his bill of costs is improper and will not be allowed. The St. Paul, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 265.

Vol. IV, p. 774. [Attorney-general, special counsel, etc.] [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 283.]

Power of special assistant.—As to the power of a special assistant, to file an information charging a violation of the Volstead Act it has been said that "the power to bring informations which charge crime and on which warrants of arrest issue is a great power, carrying with it possibilities of serious oppression, if improperly used. It involves the exercise of a quasi judicial discretion and the performance of duties widely different from those of an advocate in submitting a matter to the grand jury. The power is lodged in the United States Attorney (by statute as to certain crimes, R. S. § 1022) 2 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 675), and in the Attorney General. No statute authorizes the delegation of it, except the Act of 1906 which limits the "delegation to such matters as are covered by special direction. Both by the statute, therefore, and by general principles of law, a delegation of this power, if intended, must be made in clear and precise terms, and not left to inference or implication; it is not conferred by authority to conduct grand jury proceedings." For these reasons a special assistant to the attorney general is not authorized to bring such informations, and where they are not submitted to or approved by the attorney general they are not legally brought. U. S. v. Cohen, (D. C. Mass. 1921) 273 Fed. 620.

Presence of stenographer within grand jury room.—A plea in abatement to an indictment on the ground that a stenographer was present in the grand jury room during the taking of the testimony must affirmatively allege in order to raise an issue, that he was not specifically appointed attorney to conduct the proceeding before the grand jury, or to assist therein, for his presence in the grand jury room at such a time does not negative his right to be present, even as a stenographer, since under this Act the Attorney General or any officer in the Department of Justice, or an attorney specially appointed, may, in certain circumstances, conduct any kind of legal proceedings, including grand jury proceedings. U. S. v. Silverthorne, (W. D. N. Y. 1920) 265 Fed. 859.

JUDICIARY

Vol. IV, p. 821, Jud. Code, sec. 9. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 134.]

Power of court over judgments and orders after end of term.—In general.—The federal authorities broadly hold that, after the term expires at which a case is tried and judgment entered, the trial court cannot set aside or alter its judgment, except as permitted by standing rule or provided for by special order. Harley v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 384, holding that there was neither standing rule nor special order, and consequently that an order allowing further time for setting the bill of exceptions did not and could not serve to retain jurisdiction to hear a motion for a new trial.

Vol. IV, p. 832, Jud. Code, sec. 21. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 137.]

v. Hughes, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 572.

Sufficiency of affidavit.—In general.—The provision of this section to the effect that "such affidavit shall state facts and reasons for the belief that such bias or prejudice exists" requires the plaintiff, under oath, at least to assert facts from which a sane and reasonable mind may fairly infer bias or prejudice. Keown v. Hughes, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 572.

Affidavit on information and belief.—An affidavit upon information and belief satisfies the provisions of this section. Berger v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 22, 41 S. Ct. 230, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Affidavit based on prejudice resulting from place of nativity.—An affidavit by defendants charged with violating the Espionage Act of June 15, 1917, which avers upon information and belief that the federal district judge before whom they are to be tried has a personal bias or prejudice against them because of the German nativity of some of such defendants, and that the grounds for such belief are certain hostile and derogatory utterances of such judge concerning the attitude of German-Americans during the progress of the World War, and which is accompanied by a certificate of defendants' counsel that the affidavit is made in good faith, satisfies the requirements of this section. Berger v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 22, 41 S. Ct. 230, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Effect of filing affidavit.—The filing of an affidavit of personal bias or prejudice of the judge who is to preside at the trial, conformably to this section, leaves such judge no duty other than to pass upon the legal sufficiency of the affidavit (subject to appellate review) to show the objectionable inclination or disposition, and, if legally sufficient, compels his retirement from the case without passing upon the truth or falsity of the facts affirmed. Berger v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 22, 41 S. Ct. 230, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said:

"There is no ambiguity in the declaration, and seemingly nothing upon which construction can be exerted,—nothing to qualify or temper its words or effect. It is clear in its permission and direction. It permits an affidavit of personal bias or prejudice to be filed, and upon its filing, if it be accompanied by certificate of counsel, directs an immediate cessation of action by the judge whose bias or prejudice is averred, and, in his stead, the designation of another judge. And there is purpose in the conjunction; its elements are complements of each other. The exclusion of one judge is emphasized by the requirement of the designation of another.

"But it is said that there is modification of the absolutism of the quoted declaration in the succeeding provision that the 'affidavit shall state the facts and reasons for the belief' of the existence of the bias or prejudice. It is urged that the purpose of the requirement is to submit the reality and sufficiency of the facts to the judgment of the judge, and their support of the averment or belief of the affiant. It is in effect urged that the requirement can have no other purpose; that it is idle else, giving an automatism to the affidavit which overrides everything. But this is a misunderstanding of the requirement. It has other and less extensive use, as pointed out by Judge Meek in Henry v. Spear, supra. (120 C. C. A. 207, 201 Fed. 889.) It is a precaution against abuse, removes the averments and belief from the irresponsibility of unsupported opinion, and adds to the certificate of counsel the supplementary aid of the penalties attached to perjury. Nor do we think that this view gives room for frivolous affidavits. Of course, the reasons and facts for the belief the litigant entertains are an essential part of the affidavit, and must give fair support to the charge of a bent of mind that may prevent or impede impartiality of judgment."

I. JURISDICTION IN GENERAL

1. Definition and Nature (p. 845)

Territorial extent.—"As a general proposition a District Court of the United States has jurisdiction throughout and territorially coextensive with its district, and that a mere multiplication of places of holding court, or the creation of divisions, does not affect this, except to the extent that it may be expressly limited, nor that it is to be regarded as one and the same tribunal, whether sitting in one place or division or in another. * * * Nor is there any question that in the practical exercise and administration of that jurisdiction the court or judge may competently do in one division or at one seat things pertaining to the business in another such as making orders, deciding motions, etc., and that it may for proper reasons transfer cases for trial and disposition from one division of the district to another." Gopcevic v. California Packing Corp., (N. D. Cal. 1921) 272 Fed. 994.

3. Limited Jurisdiction of Courts (p. 847)

To the same effect as the second paragraph of the original annotation, see U. S. v. Seneca Nation of New York Indians, (W. D. N. Y. 1921) 274 Fed. 946.

Cases at law and in equity.—The limited or conferred jurisdiction of the district court applies to cases both at law and in equity. Farmers', etc., Bank v. Federal Reserve Bank, (W. D. N. C. 1921) 274 Fed. 235.

In a suit to obtain an injunction against the enforcement of rates fixed by a state public utility commission the power of the federal court is limited to an adjudication as to the right to injunctive relief. St. Joseph R., etc., Co. v. Public Service Commission, (W. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 267.

5. Necessity for Pleading Jurisdiction (p. 847)

To the same effect as the original annotation, see Danks v. Gordon, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 821; Farmers', etc., Bank v. Federal Reserve Bank, (W. D. N. C. 1921) 274 Fed. 235.

The jurisdiction of the federal court is to be determined on the statement by the plaintiff in his complaint. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co. v. Hilton, (D. C. Minn. 1921) 274 Fed. 384.

"It is, of course, essential in federal procedure that the right of a plaintiff to institute an action and the jurisdiction of the court to hear it shall appear on the face of the bill by direct and positive averment. * * * It is equally fundamental that a federal appellate court will of its own motion deny its jurisdiction, and that of the court from which the record comes, unless jurisdiction affirmatively appears, although neither party raise the point in the argument." Garvin v. Kogler, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 442.

8. Effect of State Legislation (p. 848)

In general.—"It is well settled that the pendency of a suit for the same cause of action in a state court furnishes no ground for plea in abatement to a subsequent action brought by the same plaintiff against the same defendant in a court of the United States, sitting in the same state." Central Iron, etc., Co. v. Massey, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 300.

The fact that other courts have concurrent jurisdiction, or if that also be the fact, that the Public Service Commission of a state has a like jurisdiction, affords no grounds for the district court to refuse to grant relief where no other tribunal has exercised its jurisdiction. Carpenter Steel Co. v. Metropolitan Edison Co., (E. D. Pa. 1921) 270 Fed. 255.

II. SUITS OF CIVIL NATURE AT COMMON LAW OR EQUITY

1. In General (p. 849)

While the jurisdiction of the District Court is statutory it extends by express provision of statute to matters at common law and in equity. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Berg, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 534.

4. At Law and Equity

c. "In Equity" (p. 853)

Fraud.—It is within the jurisdiction of the federal courts of equity to grant relief against fraud and an intentional discrimination in taxation is fraudulent. Grammill Lumber Co. v. Rankin County, (S. D. Miss.) 274 Fed. 630.

State legislation.—The blending in a state statute of legal and equitable remedies will not affect the equitable jurisdiction of the federal court. Grammill Lumber Co. v. Rankin County, (S. D. Miss.) 274 Fed. 630.

6. Administration or Probate (p. 856)

Administration.—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original annotation, see City Nat. Bank v. Slocum, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 11.

Jurisdiction as to decedents' estates in general.—"The High Court of Chancery in England, at the time of the passage of the Judiciary Act of 1789 (1 Stat. 73, c. 20), had jurisdiction of the adjudication and enforcement of trusts. The jurisdiction in equity of the courts of the United States, derived from the federal Constitution and statutes, over controversies between citizens of different states which involve the requisite amounts, is like unto that of the High Court of Chancery of England in 1789, and it includes the adjudication and the enforcement of that adjudication of the claims of citizens of other states as heirs, legatees, and as creditors (where the proper diversity of citizenship exists and the requisite amounts are involved) to interests in estates of decedents in the possession of administrators, executors, or other parties engaged in the administration thereof under the legislation of the states establishing courts of probate and giving them jurisdiction of such administration.

"This jurisdiction of the federal courts, it is true, does not include the power to draw to them administration of estates as such, or to take from the proper officials of the probate court, during their administration of the estates in due course, the possession of the property necessary for that administration. But it confers the power and imposes the duty upon the federal courts sitting in equity to hear, determine, adjudge, and to enforce their adjudications of the claims of the citizens of other states, who invoke their jurisdiction by proper suits to interests as heirs, legatees, distributees, or creditors in estates in possession of officers of probate courts of states other than those of the residence of the claimants engaged in the administration thereof, although such officers may have obtained their possession before such suits were commenced in the federal courts." Harrison v. Moncravie, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 776.

Construction of will.—A district court may construe a will but can not determine its contents. City Nat. Bank v. Slocum, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 11.

VII. AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY

1. In General (p. 862)

The formal allegation as to the amount in controversy does not bind the court when the bill or declaration contradicts it. Marcus Brown Holding Co. v. Pollak, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 272 Fed. 137.

3. Cases Requiring Jurisdictional Amount

b. Diverse Citizenship (p. 864)

To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original annotation, see O'Brien v. Lashar, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 326.

c. Federal Question Involved (p. 864)

In general.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Ingrain Day Lumber Co. v. United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corp., (S. D. Miss. 1920) 267 Fed. 283.

4. Necessity of Matter in Dispute Having Pecuniary Value

a. In General (p. 865)

Where the jurisdiction is dependent on the amount in controversy the matter in dispute must be money or some right, the value of which can be calculated or ascertained in money. Farmers', etc., Bank v. Federal Reserve Bank, (W. D. N. C. 1921) 274 Fed. 235.

e. Miscellaneous (p. 865)

Good will.—The substantial value of one's property right in the good will in a brand of goods manufactured by him may be sufficient in amount to give jurisdiction. Royal Baking Powder Co. v. Emerson, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 429.

5. Ascertainment of Value of Matter in Dispute (p. 865)

Injunction—Unfair Competition.—In a suit to enjoin unfair competition, a wrong which affects the petitioner's good will in business, the value of such good will may be looked to in determining the amount involved. Coca-Cola Co. v. Brown, (N. D. Ga. 1921) 274 Fed. 481.

Money demand.—In Dillon v. Lineker, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 688, it appeared that the plaintiff made a loan to the defendant of $2,850 which money she had to borrow from a third person to whom she executed a note and a trust deed of real estate owned by her subject to a life estate in her father. The defendant agreed to cause said debt and interest under the plaintiff's obligation to be paid and discharged and to indemnify and save her harmless from any loss or damage in connection with said note and trust deed, which agreement was not performed and plaintiff sued for damages for breach of such agreement in consequence of which she lost her property. It was held that the required jurisdictional amount was involved.

Quieting title.—The value of the land mortgaged and not the amount of the mortgage is the amount in controversy in a suit to cancel the mortgage and remove a cloud on the title since where the value of the land is over $3000 the federal court has jurisdiction although the amount due under the mortgage is less than the required jurisdictional amount. Frontera Transp. Co. v. Abaunza (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 199.

8. Pleading Amount by Plaintiff

a. Necessity and Sufficiency (p. 877)

Injunction.—An allegation in a bill for a mandatory injunction "that the matter in controversy exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum of three thousand dollars" has been held sufficient. Du Pont de Nemours v. Temple, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 456.

VIII. SUITS ARISING UNDER CONSTITUTION, LAWS OR TREATIES

1. In General

d. Jurisdiction Independent of Merits (p. 884)

Jurisdiction not defeated by ultimate result.—A federal court has jurisdiction if a claim of a right arising under the federal Constitution is made in good faith and is not frivolous even though in the end it may turn out to be erroneous. J. & A. Frieberg Co. v. Dawson, (W. D. Ky. 1920) 274 Fed. 420.

j. Original Cases of Mandamus (p. 887)

"In federal jurisprudence mandamus is not available to establish or complete an individual right, even though the right may arise under the Constitution and laws of the United States. It is regarded as auxiliary or assistant to a jurisdiction already existing; not a jurisdiction in the general sense, but one that is actually afoot and is being exercised. Hence it is that, unless specifically authorized by Congress, a right under the Constitution or laws of the United States may not be enforced by an original action in mandamus. The general conferring of jurisdiction of cases arising under such Constitution and laws is not of itself sufficient." In re Higdon, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 269 Fed. 150.

The Corrupt Practices Acts give no remedy by original action in mandamus to those injured. In re Higdon, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 269 Fed. 150, wherein the court said:

"Enforcement is by indictment and trial in the customary way. No remedy by original action in mandamus is given those injured. The proceeding here is neither an inquiry by a grand jury nor the trial of a criminal case under those acts. Though Congress might provide for federal supervision of all elections, primary, general, and special, relating to nomination and election to office under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and provide for enforcement thereof by mandamus, or any other suitable remedy, it has not done so."

IX. SUITS ARISING UNDER CONSTITUTION.

1. In General (p. 905)

Rule stated.—"It might be thought that, since every one is bound to know the law, a claim of unconstitutionality which was based upon mere application of legal principles to the conceded facts, would not support the federal jurisdiction after the claim had been found to be erroneous; but the cases seem to recognize no distinction between questions of constitutionality dependent on disputed facts and those dependent on mere observation of the state laws." Ohio v. Swift, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 141.

"When the existence of a federal question through a claim of unconstitutionality determines the jurisdiction of the federal court, the same principles must apply * * * whether the jurisdiction is invoked by original pleading or by removal petition. In either case, the prima facie jurisdiction of the state court is to be ousted by that of another tribunal which, for this purpose and to this extent, is dominant. The application of the same principles to both these situations was approved in Missouri Ry. v. Missouri Commissioners, 183 U. S. 53, 59, 22 Sup. Ct. 18, 46 L. ed. 78." Ohio v. Swift, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 141.

5. Violation of Due Process Clause (p. 918)

State taxation in violation of federal Constitution.—A bill to restrain the collection of a tax imposed by a state statute which states a case of rights arising under the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution is within the jurisdiction of a federal court. J. & A. Frieberg Co. v. Dawson, (W. D. Ky. 1920) 274 Fed. 420.

X. SUITS ARISING UNDER LAWS OF UNITED STATES

1. General Rules

a. Substantial Controversy Necessary (p. 922)

Rule stated.—"It is, of course, well settled that, if the result of a suit depends upon the construction and effect of a federal statute, such a suit arises under the laws of the United States, within the meaning of the constitutional provision conferring jurisdiction upon the federal courts in such cases. . . . It is equally well settled that, where the plaintiff in a case plants a claim for relief upon a federal law, and such claim is apparently made in good faith, is based upon real and substantial grounds, and is not so unreasonable and wholly destitute of merit as to be merely frivolous and colorable, such a case presents a federal question within the general jurisdiction of the federal court, irrespective of the presence or absence of diversity of citizenship." Lucking v. Detroit, etc., Nav. Co., (E. D. Mich. 1921) 273 Fed. 577.

"A suit arises under a law of the United States whenever its correct solution depends on the construction of that law, and the right set up by a party may be defeated by one construction or sustained by the other." Accardo v. Fontenot, (E. D. La. 1920) 269 Fed. 447.

Insufficient allegations in bill.—Federal jurisdiction of a cause as presenting a federal question is not supported by allegations in a bill that are much too casual and meager to give serious color to the claim that the cause of action is one arising under the laws of the United States, and where the contention is plainly an afterthought, not in the mind of the author of the bill.

Niles-Bennet-Pond Co. v. Iron Moulders' Union, etc., (1920) 254 U. S. 77, 41 S. Ct. 39, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1918) 258 Fed. 408, 169 C. C. A. 424.

4. Suit by or Against Federal Corporation c. Other Federal Corporations (p. 925)

The Emergency Fleet Corporation being created under the Code of District of Columbia and being regarded as a separate entity notwithstanding all its stock is owned by the United States, a suit against it for more than the jurisdictional amount may be brought in the district court as one arising under the laws of the United States. American Cotton Oil Co. v. U. S. Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corp., (E. D. La. 1921) 270 Fed. 296.

Federal reserve bank.—A suit against a corporation incorporated under the laws of the United States, to wit, a federal reserve bank, is one arising under those laws, within the meaning of this section, defining the original jurisdiction of the federal district courts. American Bank, etc., Co. v. Federal Reserve Bank, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 499, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing on other grounds (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 4.

28. Laws Relating to Commerce (p. 939)

Suit to restrain discontinuance of service.—A suit to restrain a carrier from discontinuing the operation of steamers over a certain route on the ground that the proposed discontinuance by the defendant of the operation of its steamers over the route referred to would be a violation of the Interstate Commerce Act, presents a case arising under the laws of the United States. Lucking v. Detroit, etc., Nav. Co., (E. D. Mich. 1921) 273 Fed. 577. The court said:

"Considering, then, these provisions of the statute in connection with the allegations in the bill of complaint to the effect that in the conduct of its business as a common carrier the defendant 'has, by arrangement with other common carriers by railroad, been engaged in the continuous transportation of passengers and property, partly by railroad and partly by water, from various ports and points on the routes reached by defendant's steamers to and from various points on the railroads of said other carriers,' and in view of the allegations in the bill as to the interstate character of the commerce carried by the defendant over its various routes, I cannot avoid the conclusion that plaintiff has stated a claim for relief based upon a federal law, and that such claim is not so unsubstantial and unreasonable as to be frivolous and merely colorable. The bill raises, in my opinion, a real and substantial federal question, which it is the duty of this court to consider and decide. It follows that the objection based upon the supposed lack of jurisdiction of the court to entertain this suit must be overruled."

A suit in equity against a railroad company and the Director General of Railroads to restrain the threatened action of the defendants to discontinue service to and from the siding at the plant of the plaintiffs, used almost entirely in shipping products of the plaintiff in interstate commerce, is within the jurisdiction of the District Court and the plaintiffs are not required to apply to the Interstate Commerce Commission inasmuch as that body does not have jurisdiction over the subject-matter involved in the controversy. Hines v. Henaghan, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 831. To same effect, see Hines v. Atlantic Refining Co., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 839.

31. Federal Employer's Liability Act (p. 940)

Applicability of act.—The question whether the Federal Employer's Liability Act is applicable to railroads in Porto Rico and excludes the application of the local Workmen's Compensation Act is one arising under the laws of the United States. Camunas v. Porto Rico R., etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 924.

35. Suit Involving Federal Farm Loan Bonds [new]

A bill filed by a stockholder to enjoin the corporation from investing the funds of such corporation in farm loan bonds issued under the authority of the Federal Farm Loan Act of July 17, 1916, as amended by the Act of January 18, 1918, on the ground that these acts were beyond the constitutional power of Congress, and that the securities issued thereunder were consequently of no validity, sets forth a cause of action arising under the federal Constitution or laws of which a federal district court has jurisdiction under Judicial Code, § 24, without diversity of citizenship, and from the decree of the district court dismissing the bill a direct appeal lies to the Federal Supreme Court. Smith v. Kansas City Title, etc., Co., (1921) 255 U. S. 180, 41 S. Ct. 243, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

XII. DIVERSE CITIZENSHIP

1. In General (p. 942)

"A controversy is not between citizens of different states so as to give jurisdiction to the federal courts unless all the persons on one side of it are citizens of different states from all the persons on the other side. Gage v. Garraher, 154 U. S. 656, 14 Sup. Ct. 1190, 25 L. ed. 989; Wilson v. Oswego Township, 151 U. S. 56, 14 Sup. Ct. 259, 30 L. ed. 70. Where one or more of the complainants and one or more of the respondents are citizens of the same state, this is fatal to the jurisdiction of the court if the jurisdiction rests simply on the ground of diversity of citizenship." Danks v. Gordon, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 821.

3. State as Citizen (p. 944)

A state cannot be made a party defendant to a suit in a court of the United States by a private litigant. U. S. Mortg., etc., Co. v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 458.

4. Citizenship of Corporation (p. 945)

Doing business, etc., in another state.—Foreign corporation held to be "doing business" within the state and subject to service of process, see Cutler v. Cutler-Hammer Mfg. Co., (D. C. Mass. 1920) 266 Fed. 388.

11. Several Parties Plaintiff or Defendant (p. 952)

To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original annotation, see Chipman v. West United Verde Copper Co., (D. C. Del. 1920) 271 Fed. 91; Hodgman v. Atlantic Refining Co., (D. C. Del. 1921) 274 Fed. 104.

Class suits.—The jurisdiction of the federal courts over the subject-matter of class suits, is limited to cases wherein the parties are purely interstate. Supreme Tribe of Ben Hur v. Cauble, (D. C. Ind. 1920) 264 Fed. 247.

12. Arrangement of Parties as to Adverse Interest (p. 954)

In general.—Where the jurisdiction of the court is founded only on the fact that the suit is between citizens of different states and both defendants are alleged to have engaged in the challenged transaction, and one of them takes of record a position antagonistic to that of the plaintiffs, the latter may not, for jurisdictional purposes, be realigned, or regarded otherwise than as a defendant. Hodgman v. Atlantic Refining Co., (D. C. Del. 1921) 274 Fed. 104.

The mere fact that a corporation of one state has the same vice-president as a corporation of another state does not show of itself such an identity of interest between the two corporations as will defeat jurisdiction of a cross-bill filed by one against the other, such jurisdiction being based on diversity of citizenship. Quinlivan v. Dail-Overland Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 56.

In Gable v. Vonnegut Machinery Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 86, the Vonnegut Machinery Company, which was an Indiana corporation, doing business in that state, claiming to have contracts with a tool company, an Ohio corporation, for the manufacture and sale of a large amount of machinery, whose manufacture and delivery were interfered with by the tool company's strike, filed its bill in equity in the court below. The bill alleges that plaintiff "for many years has been and is now the agent of the defendant Tool Company in that part of the state of Indiana above described, and it has built up and now has and enjoys a large and extensive business in buying, selling, and dealing in machines and machinery, and particularly a large and profitable business in buying, selling, and dealing in presses, tools and equipment manufactured by the Tool Company." The court held that there was an identity of interest requiring an alignment of both corporations as plaintiffs for purposes of jurisdiction.

14. Real and Nominal Parties (p. 958)

Stockholders' suits.—Stockholders of a corporation in whose behalf a bill against the corporation is filed by other stockholders, but who do not join in exhibiting the bill are not parties within the contemplation of equity rule 25, and the jurisdiction of the court is dependent on the citizenship of the parties actually suing and not on that of the other members of the class in whose behalf the suit is brought. Doan v. Consolidated-Progressive Oil Corp., (D. C. Del. 1920) 271 Fed. 12.

15. Indispensable Parties (p. 960)

In general.—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original annotation, see Jennings v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 399.

Persons who not only have an interest in the controversy, but an interest of such a nature that a final decree cannot be made without either affecting that interest, or leaving the controversy in such a condition that its final termination may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience are regarded as indispensable parties. Consolidated Textile Corp. v. Dicky, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 269 Fed. 942.

Indispensable parties are "persons who not only have an interest in the controversy, but an interest of such a nature that a final decree cannot be made without either affecting that interest or leaving the controversy in such a condition that its final termination may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience." Shields v. Barrow, (1855) 17 How. 130, 15 U. S. (L. ed.) 158; Commonwealth Trust Co. v. Smith, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 1.

It is only the absence of indispensable parties which defeats the jurisdiction of a United States court in equity. U. S. Mortg., etc., Co. v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 458.

The test of indispensability is not whether the decree is bound to injuriously affect the rights of the absent party; it is enough that such absence may "leave the controversy in such a situation that the final determination may be inconsistent with equity and good conscience." Rogers v. Penobscot Min. Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1907) 154 Fed. 606; Davis v. Henry, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 261.

A corporation completely controlled by another corporation through stock ownership and common officers is an indispensable party to a suit by the dominant corporation to enjoin striking former employees of the subsidiary corporation from molesting workmen employed by the latter corporation to take the places of the strikers, upon the ground that the petitioning corporation had contracts with such subsidiary corporation, the performance of which was delayed by such interference; and the identity of interest of the two corporations requires that the subsidiary corporation be aligned on the side of the petitioner, where its interest lies, with the result that if the subsidiary corporation and the individual defendants are citizens of the same state, jurisdictional diversity of citizenship disappears. Niles-Bement-Pond Co. v. Iron Moulders' Union, etc., (1920) 254 U. S. 77, 41 S. Ct. 39, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1918) 258 Fed. 408, 169 C. C. A. 424), wherein the court said:

"There is no prescribed formula for determining in every case whether a person or corporation is an indispensable party or not, but a rule early announced and often applied by this court is sharply applicable to the case at bar. In Shields v. Barrow, 17 How. 130, 139, 15 L. ed. 158, 160, this language—quoted with approval in Barney v. Baltimore, 6 Wall. 280, 284, 18 L. ed. 925, 826, and again in Waterman v. Canal-Louisiana Bank & T. Co., 215 U. S. 33, 48, 54 L. ed. 80, 86, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10—was used to describe parties so indispensable that a court of equity will not proceed to final decision without them, viz:

"Persons who not only have an interest in the controversy, but an interest of such a nature that a final decree cannot be made without either affecting that interest, or leaving the controversy in such a condition that its final termination may be wholly inconsistent, with equity and good conscience."

"The case we are considering is essentially one on the part of the petitioner to protect from interference by striking former employees of the Tool Company, the contract which that company had with the men employed by it to take their places. Petitioner's claim of right, the validity of which we are not called upon to determine, is rested wholly upon the contract of the Tool Company with its employees, and the character and construction of that contract of employment must inevitably be passed upon in any decision of the case; and, obviously, if the petitioner should fail in such a suit as this, with the Tool Company not a party, any decree rendered would not prevent a relitigating of the same questions in the same or in any other proper court, and it would settle nothing."

"Thus, if the Tool Company be considered as having any corporate existence whatever separate from that of the petitioner, it must have an interest in the controversy, involved in such a case as we have here, of a nature such that a final decree could not be made without affecting that interest, and perhaps not without leaving the controversy in a condition wholly inconsistent with that equity which seeks to put an end to litigation by doing complete and final justice; and therefore it must be concluded that it was an indispensable party, within the quoted long established rule."

Receiver.—Where an attempt is made to take property out of the receiver's possession, then he is a proper party to litigation, and where relief is sought against his acts as such receiver he is the proper party litigant. But where the litigation affects the rights of parties in property not in his hands, or asserts rights in such property without disturbing his possession thereof, he is not a proper party, much less an indispensable party, to such litigation. U. S. Mortg., etc., Co. v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 266 Fed. 497.

Suit to cancel pooling agreement.—Where it is alleged that the purpose of a voting pool consisting of a majority of the stockholders of a corporation was the appointment of one of them as sales agent of the corporation; in a suit to cancel the agreement and enjoin the appointment, it has been held that such person is an indispensable party. Consolidated Textile Corp. v. Dickey, (N. D. Ga. 1920) 266 Fed. 587.

Suit to cancel railroad leases.—In a suit to cancel railroad leases a state is not an indispensable party on the ground that if the same are abrogated, in a suit between the parties thereto, these parties become liable to a suit by the state under her laws governing the relations between railroad corporations and the state. Nor is a receiver of another company which is the holder of bonds of the lessor company an indispensable party on the ground that a part of the contract between the lessor and lessee is that the lessee shall pay the interest on said bonds, the payment to be made directly to the bondholders, who are made appointees to receive the same. U. S. Mortg., etc., Co. v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 458.

Suit by grantee of oil, gas and mineral rights.—A grantor of his oil, gas and mineral rights in certain lands who has an interest in the profits made and a right of re-entry on condition broken is an indispensable party plaintiff to a suit by the grantee to enjoin third parties from resisting or contesting the complainant's right of entry and use of certain of the premises conveyed. Associated Oil Co. v. Miller, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 16.

Dismissal as to dispensable parties.—In the determination of the jurisdiction of the national courts indispensable parties only should be considered, because all others may be dismissed or disregarded, if their presence would oust the jurisdiction of the court or restrict the right of the plaintiff. Where the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties, the bill may be dismissed as to any defendant who is not an indispensable party to the suit and retained as to other defendants. Jennings v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 399.

If there is any part of the relief sought as to which a person who resides in another state is not an indispensable party the bill will be retained for that purpose. Consolidated Textile Corp., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 269 Fed. 942.

17. Representative Parties (p. 962)

Rule stated.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see New York Evening Post Co. v. Chaloner, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 204; petition for certiorari dismissed, (1920) 252 U. S. 591, 40 S. Ct. 396, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) 731. See also (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 260 Fed. 335.

18. Interveners and Substituted Parties (p. 963)

Intervention of resident parties.—The jurisdiction of a federal district court of a suit against a fraternal benefit association and its officers, all residents and citizens of the state, brought and prosecuted by a large number, all nonresidents, of a class of benefit certificate holders, for the benefit of all the members of the class, could not have been defeated by the intervention as plaintiffs of other members of the class, who were citizens of the same state as were defendants. Supreme Tribe of Ben-Hur v. Cauble, (1921) 255 U. S. 356, 41 Sup. Ct. 338, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (D. C. Ind. 1920) 264 Fed. 247.

XIII. SUITS BETWEEN CITIZENS OF STATE AND FOREIGN STATE, CITIZEN OR SUBJECT

1. Citizen of State and Citizen or Subject of Foreign State

a. In General (p. 971)

A United States court is not deprived of its jurisdiction of a suit to annul a mortgage brought by a citizen of a state against a citizen of a foreign country found in the state, because of the fact that the land subject to the mortgage is located in the foreign country. Frontera Transp. Co. v. Abaunza, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 199.

XVI. SUITS BY ASSIGNEES

7. Applicability

b. Application with Regard to Persons (p. 982)

Notes payable to broker.—Where notes issued by a county were made payable to one who was employed as a mere broker and agent to sell the notes and who never advanced any money or credit on them or became at any time a creditor of the county, one who purchased such notes from the broker, though in form an assignee, is in substance an original creditor and as such can maintain a suit against the county. Commercial Trust Co. v. Laurens County, (S. D. Ga. 1920) 267 Fed. 901.

8. Matters Relating to Jurisdiction (p. 984)

Actual relation of parties controls.—In Commercial Trust Co. v. Laurens County, (S. D. Ga. 1920) 267 Fed. 897, a bank executed under its corporate seal a paper as follows:

"The county of Laurens, Georgia, having duly executed its notes aggregating in the sum of seventy-five thousand dollars, under and by virtue of a resolution adopted by the board of commissioners of roads and revenues of said county at regular meeting on January 10, 1918, said notes being executed by the treasurer and commissioners of Laurens county, Georgia, and bearing date of January 10, 1918, and payable to the order of Frank Scarboro Company on December 31, 1918, we hereby agree to honor and charge only warrants of the county of Laurens, Georgia, as drawn by the proper officer of said county, against the proceeds of these notes, and hold all of said warrants, uncanceled, subject to the order of Frank Scarboro Company, or the holder or holders of said notes, until the notes as above mentioned and referred to are fully paid and satisfied, after which, on presentation to us of the notes bearing evidence of due and proper cancellation, we will then cancel and turn over to the proper officer all of said warrants."

The plaintiff purchased of the Scarboro Company $30,000 of the notes which were accompanied with copies of the above agreement, relying on the faith thereof, and the proceeds of the notes were deposited in the bank and were used as agreed in taking up warrants of the county. It was held that a federal court of equity had jurisdiction of a suit against the county to enforce its liability on the warrants. The court said:

"The plaintiff is suing only in respect of the county warrants, which were never in the name of, nor owned by, Scarboro Company. Its claim is a direct one against the county. The undertaking of the bank as to the payment of the money was not addressed to Scarboro Company, more than to any other holder of the notes, and was never transferred to plaintiff, nor is it the basis of the suit. It is only evidence in the case to define the relation between plaintiff and the bank, and to show the intent with which the warrants were taken up. It is likewise immaterial that this undertaking was never entered on the minutes of the county commissioners as a contract of the county, and that it does not purport to bind the county. Like immateriality exists as to the failure to allege that the arrangement with Scarboro Company to sell the notes was entered on the minutes, so as to bind the county. Such failure might affect the right of the Scarboro Company to collect compensation, but touches no right of plaintiff. The bill seeks substantially to enforce liabilities against the county, represented by its warrants, which the county owed independently of any dealings with or through Scarboro Company, and the equity of the plaintiff, so far from being destroyed by, arises out of, the invalidity of the proceedings with and through the Scarboro Company."

XVIII. ANCILLARY PROCEEDINGS

2. Jurisdiction in General (p. 989)

When ancillary relief may be had generally.—Sometimes by means of an ancillary bill or an intervening petition a federal court hears and determines a nonfederal controversy between citizens of the same state; but that occurs only in those cases in which the federal court is already properly in possession of a res and the determination of the intrastate nonfederal controversy is necessary to a just administration of the res. Supreme Tribe of Ben Hur v. Cauble, (D. C. Ind. 1920) 264 Fed. 247.

3. Particular Proceedings and Matters

d. Enforcement of Liens (p. 993)

Establishment of lien against property judicially sold.—A bill filed by the grantee of the purchaser of real property at a sale under a federal court decree, which seeks to restrain the enforcement of a judgment of a state court establishing a superior title in another, or any interference with complainant's possession, is not ancillary (so as to be justifiable in the federal courts without diversity of citizenship) to the original suit in the federal court, which was one for the sale of land which a municipal corporation held as trustee to secure the payment of certain drainage warrants, to which suit neither defendant nor any predecessor in interest was a party. New Orleans Land Co. v. Leader Realty Co., (1921) 255 U. S. 266, 41 Sup. Ct. 259, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

j. Receivers (p. 997)

An application for an injunction to restrain interference with the operations of a receiver may be brought as ancillary to the action in which the receiver was appointed. Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co. v. Richmond Light, etc., Co., (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 267 Fed. 493.

Pleading.—Ancillary proceedings to restrain the doing of acts interfering with one as receiver do not require the employment of pleadings such as would be necessary in the institution of an action. Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co. v. Richmond Light, etc., Co., (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 267 Fed. 493.

Vol. IV, p. 999, Jud. Code, sec. 24, par. second. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 139.]

Jurisdiction not divested by stay of execution of sentence pending trial in state court.—An order staying execution of a sentence in a federal court and permitting the accused while in the custody of the United States marshal to be tried in the state court for a violation of a state law, does not divest the federal court of jurisdiction. Ex p. Sichofsky, (S. D. Cal. 1921) 273 Fed. 694, holding, however, that an order would be entered recalling the commitment and decreeing its amendment, to the effect that the term of imprisonment heretofore adjudged upon petitioner would begin to run as from the date of pronouncement of the aforementioned judgment herein.

II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF JURISDICTION

1. In General (p. 1006)

In admiralty a decree awarding affirmative relief in favor of a claimant or respondent, as the case may be, cannot be made in the original action. The answer can go only so far as may reduce or completely set off the award in favor of libellant. The Jane Palmer, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 270 Fed. 609.

III. JURISDICTION OF STATE COURTS

1. Generally (p. 1007)

A suit for personal injury which was sustained while maritime services were being performed may be maintained in the state court. Ross v. Pacific Steamship Co., (D. C. Ore. 1921) 272 Fed. 538.

IV. SAVING OF COMMON-LAW REMEDY (p. 1008)

To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original annotation, see Crane v. Pacific Steamship Co., (D. C. Ore. 1921) 272 Fed. 204. Ross v. Pacific Steamship Co., (D. C. Ore. 1921) 272 Fed. 538.

The jurisdiction conferred by this section gives the district courts, within the limitations expressed, jurisdiction, where the state courts would have jurisdiction, so that causes arising out of maritime rights may be brought in the federal courts in all cases where they may be brought in the state courts, subject to diversity of citizenship and jurisdictional amount, but the rights of the plaintiff may be enforced only according to maritime law. Berg v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (E. D. Pa. 1920) 266 Fed. 591.

One injured by a maritime tort can maintain an action in personam against his employer therefor in a common law court. Crane v. Pacific Steamship Co., (D. C. Ore. 1921) 272 Fed. 204.

V. CONCURRENT JURISDICTION (p. 1010)

To the same effect as the original annotation, see Proctor v. Dillon, (1920) 235 Mass. 538, 129 N. E. 265.

Power of equity to enjoin suit.—As to the power of a court of equity to enjoin a suit in the admiralty court it is said:

"It is a well-settled rule of law that, where a lien or claim upon the thing is given by the maritime law, admiralty alone has jurisdiction to enforce it by a proceeding in rem; but this does not deprive a court of equity in a proper case of the power of maintaining the status quo. It makes no difference that the res is beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the tribunal, the parties being before the court, since the defendant may nevertheless be compelled to do all the things required by the lex loci rei sitæ." Hyañill v. Buffalo Marine Constr. Co., (W. D. N. Y. 1919) 266 Fed. 553.

VIII. CONTRACTS WITHIN ADMIRALTY JURISDICTION

1. Shipbuilding Contracts (p. 1014)

A contract to build a vessel is nonmaritime. The Susquehanna, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 811.

Furnishing materials, etc., to launched vessel.—A contract to furnish the materials, work, and labor for the completion of a vessel, made after such vessel was launched, but while not yet sufficiently advanced to discharge the functions for which she was intended, is not within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. Thames Towboat Co. v. The Schooner Francis McDonald, (1920) 254 U. S. 242, 41 S. Ct. 65, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said:

"Under decisions of this court the settled rule is that a contract for the complete construction of a ship, or supplying materials therefor, is nonmaritime, and not within the admiralty jurisdiction. People's Ferry Co. v. Beers, 20 How. 393, 15 L. ed. 961; Roach v. Chapman, 22 How. 129, 16 L. ed. 294; Edwards v. Elliott, 21 Wall. 532, 22 L. ed. 487; The Winnebago, 205 U. S. 354, 363, 51 L. ed. 836, 841, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 509; North Pacific S. S. Co. v. Hall Bros. Marine R. & Shipbuilding Co., 249 U. S. 119, 125, 63 L. ed. 510, 512, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 221.

"But counsel for appellant insist that there is a broad distinction between such a contract and one for work and material to finish a vessel after she has been launched and is water-borne. In support of this position they rely upon The Eliza Ladd (1875) 3 Sawy. 519, Fed. Cas. No. 4,364; The Revenue Cutter (1877) 4 Sawy. 143, Fed. Cas. No. 11,714,—both by Judge Deady, in the United States district court for Oregon; The Manhattan, district court for Washington (1891) 46 Fed. 797, which followed the district court for Oregon; and Tucker v. Alexandroff, 183 U. S. 424, 438, 46 L. ed. 264, 270, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195. The first three cases are directly in point, but are opposed by many of no less authority. Tucker v. Alexandroff must be read in the light of the particular matter under consideration,—detention of a foreign seaman,—and the conclusion announced that after the vessel was launched 'she was a ship within the meaning of the treaty.' The court had no immediate concern with contracts for ship construction, and there was no purpose to lay down any definite rule applicable to them. On the other side, the following cases are cited, and they are entitled to the greater weight: The Isosco, 1 Brown, Adm. 495, Fed. Cas. No. 7,060; The Pacific, 5 Hughes, 257, 9 Fed. 120; The Count de Lesseps, 17 Fed. 460; The Glenmont, 32 Fed. 703 and 34 Fed. 403; The Paradox, 61 Fed. 860; McMaster v. One Dredge, 95 Fed. 832; The United Shores, 193 Fed. 552; The Dredge A, 217 Fed. 617; The Winnebago, 205 U. S. 354, 363, 51 L. ed. 836, 841, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 509; North Pacific S. S. Co. v. Hall Bros. Marine R. & Shipbuilding Co., 249 U. S. 119, 125, 63 L. ed. 510, 512, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 221.

"Notwithstanding possible and once not inappropriate criticism, the doctrine is now firmly established that contracts to construct entirely new ships are nonmaritime because not nearly enough related to any rights and duties pertaining to commerce and navigation. It is said that in no proper sense can they be regarded as directly and immediately connected with navigation or commerce by water. Edwards v. Elliott, 21 Wall. 532, 554, 555, 22 L. ed. 487, 491, 492; The William Windom, 73 Fed. 496; Pacific Surety Co. v. Leatham & S. Towing & Wrecking Co., 80 C. C. A. 670, 151 Fed. 440. And we think the same reasons which exclude such contracts from admiralty jurisdiction likewise apply to agreements made after the hull is in the water, for the work and material necessary to consummate a partial construction and bring the vessel into condition to function as intended."

A contract to reconstruct a vessel, such for instance as a contract to lengthen a vessel which has long been employed in navigation is maritime in character. The Susquehanna, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 811.

13. Affreightment and Charter-Parties (p. 1017)

An informal charter is a contract over which admiralty has jurisdiction. American Hawaiian Steamship Co. v. Willfuehr, (D. C. Md. 1921) 274 Fed. 214.

IX. FOREIGN PERSONS OR PROPERTY (p. 1019)

"A sovereign friendly power has no more right to oust the court of jurisdiction than has a private party. If such a sovereign power seeks our courts, it must comply with our substantive law and our procedure and it is protected only to the extent of the immunity discussed in Kingdom of Roumania v. Guaranty Trust Co., 250 Fed. 341, 162 C. C. A. 411. It must, for instance, give security for costs. Honduras v. Soto, 112 N. Y. 310, 19 N. E. 845, 2 L. R. A. 642, 8 Am. St. Rep. 744. It could not raise the point against a set-off, otherwise appropriate, which might be pleaded against it, and therefore the arbitration clause cannot be availed of by or against it to oust our courts of jurisdiction." The Jane Palmer, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 270 Fed. 609.

Vessel belonging to foreign government—manner of making objection.—The objection that a vessel libeled was owned by a foreign government, and, at the time of arrest, was in the possession of such government, should come through official channels of the United States, and not by way of a direct suggestion of the Ambassador of such foreign government, and an accompanying certificate of the Secretary of State that such Ambassador is the duly accredited representative of such foreign government gives no sanction to such suggestion. The Pesaro, (1921) 255 U. S. 216, 41 S. Ct. 308, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Vessel under requisition by foreign nation.—In an action in personam against the owner of a vessel for salvage services, such vessel may be attached though she be at the time under charter to a foreign government and in the actual possession of that government. Maru Nav. Co. v. Societa Commerciale, etc., (D. C. Md. 1921) 271 Fed. 97.

XIII. MARITIME CONTRACT (p. 1022)

Storage contract.—As a corollary to the rule that an action will not lie in admiralty for breach of a contract leading to the execution of a maritime contract, an admiralty court has no jurisdiction over a contract to procure permanent storage for all or a part of a cargo after it has been unloaded. Gowanus Storage Co. v. U. S. Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corp., (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 271 Fed. 528.

XV. MIXED CONTRACT (p. 1024)

Where a contract is separable a court of admiralty has jurisdiction over that part of it which is of a maritime nature, though it would not have such jurisdiction unless the cause of action were separable. Gowanus Storage Co. v. U. S. Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corp., (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 271 Fed. 528.

XX. TORTS

1. In General (p. 1026)

To the same effect as first paragraph of original annotation, see White v. John W. Cowper Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 423.

When a right to recover for a maritime tort has been created by a state law, the admiralty courts of the United States may enforce it. Earles v. Howard, (D. C. Me. 1920) 268 Fed. 94, so holding where a state law gave a right to recover for instantaneous death while employed on a steamship.

Actions arising out of a maritime tort and giving rise to a maritime lien are not subject to the rules of the common law courts or to the statutes of a state. The Lafayette, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 917.

Enforcement of claim based on statute both penal and compensatory.—Although it is declared to be doubtful whether courts of admiralty will enforce a claim bottomed on a mere penal statute yet it has been said that they will assume jurisdiction where a statute is both penal and compensatory, as for instance, where it is penal up to the minimum amount of recovery and compensatory thereafter up to the maximum amount of recovery permitted. In re St. Louis, etc., River Packet Co., (E. D. Mo. 1920) 266 Fed. 919.

State Workmen's Compensation Law has no application to an injury to a longshoreman injured while unloading a vessel, the amendment of 1917 (Fed. Stat. Ann. 1918 Supp. p. 414) having been held to be invalid. Lawson v. New York, etc., Steamship Co., (1921) 148 La. 290, 86 So. 815.

2. Locality of Injury Complained of (p. 1027)

In general.—In case of an injury to a seaman arising out of a tort which is maritime, an admiralty court has jurisdiction and the lex loci delicti applies. The Hanna Nielsen, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 171, modifying (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 267 Fed. 729.

Assaults.—A court of admiralty has jurisdiction of an action to recover damages for an assault committed on board a vessel by the master while the boat was being unloaded. The Whisper, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 464.

6. Right of Action for Death (p. 1031)

Rule stated.—While a suit in admiralty cannot be maintained to recover damages for death by wrongful act or negligence on the high seas or navigable waters in the absence of a federal or state statute giving a right of action therefor, where a state statute gives such a right of action it is enforceable in the admiralty courts if the facts are such as would bring the case within the maritime jurisdiction if death had not resulted. White v. John W. Cowper Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 423.

Vol. IV, p. 1034, Jud. Code, sec. 24, par. fifth. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 139.]

Jurisdiction—In general.—Under this section the court has jurisdiction of all suits arising under the revenue laws, regardless of amount. Accardo v. Fontenot, (E. D. La. 1920) 269 Fed. 447.

Vol. IV, p. 1036, Jud. Code, sec. 24, par. sixth. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 139.]

Amount involved.—The question of the amount involved is not important in determining the jurisdiction of the federal court. Griffith v. W. S. Vick Grocery Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 246.

Injunction against postal authorities.—“It is the duty of the Post Office Department to deliver mail in so far as it is possible to the individual, firm, or corporation for whom it is intended. This is undoubtedly an important, and in some instances a difficult and delicate, duty to perform, and for that reason a court ought not lightly to interfere with the judgment and discretion of the postal authorities, and a court will not do so, unless the party seeking the injunction demonstrates by the evidence that he has a clear right to receive such mail, and that the failure of the postal authorities to deliver it to him impairs a substantial right.” Griffith v. W. S. Vick Grocery Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 246, so declaring in granting an injunction relating to the delivery of mail similarly addressed to a competing firm.

Pleading.—“The mere allegation that ‘the matter in controversy arises under the postal laws’ is but a conclusion of law. If the facts pleaded are sufficient to show that the controversy does arise under the postal laws, then it follows that it is not necessary to aver, in addition thereto, the pleaders’ conclusion of law. It also follows that, if the facts stated in the bill of complaint show that the controversy does not arise under the postal laws of the United States, the averment of the legal conclusion that it does so arise would necessarily be wholly disregarded in determining the jurisdiction of the court.” Griffith v. W. S. Vick Grocery Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 246.

Vol. IV, p. 1037, Jud. Code, sec. 24, par. seventh. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 139.]

- I. Suits arising under patent laws.
- II. Suits arising under copyright laws.
- III. Suits arising under trademark laws.

I. SUITS ARISING UNDER PATENT LAWS (p. 1037)

Suit involving title to patent.—“It has been settled that, where the title to a patent or any claim of infringement thereof is the subject of the suit in any form, the federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction, regardless of the citizenship of the parties, for the reason that such cases arise under the patent laws.” Lowry v. Hert, (W. D. Ky. 1921) 273 Fed. 698.

Suits on contracts relating to patents.—Where a contract had been made respecting a patent, and out of which contract a suit arose, or where frauds were perpetrated by the parties to the contract, and one of these parties seeks relief on that ground, the state courts have exclusive jurisdiction, except where there is diverse citizenship and a claim exceeding $3,000. Lowry v. Hert, (W. D. Ky. 1921) 273 Fed. 698.

II. SUITS ARISING UNDER COPYRIGHT LAWS (p. 1045)

Suit involving contract.—If the suit is one brought to enforce a right based upon a contract which relates to a copyrighted production, the suit is one which arises out of the contract and is not one arising under the copyright statute, and the federal courts are without jurisdiction. In line with this rule it is held that a suit to compel a defendant to pay over royalties claimed to be due under a contract is not one arising under the copyright laws of which the federal court has jurisdiction. Danks v. Gordon, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 821.

III. SUITS ARISING UNDER TRADEMARK LAWS (p. 1047)

Where the parties are corporations of different states, and the value of the thing in controversy exceeds three thousand dollars, the courts of the United States may enforce the common-law rights in a trade-mark as well as against unfair competition. Coca-

Cola Co. v. Old Dominion Beverage Corp., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 600.

Vol. IV, p. 1047, Jud. Code, sec. 24, par. eighth. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 139.]

Suit against Emergency Fleet Corporation.

— Since the purpose of the Shipping Board Act (Act of Sept. 7, 1916, ch. 451, 1918 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. 785) was to promote the commerce of the United States and since it applies only to interstate commerce, a suit against the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, which was organized under section 11 of such Act, is one arising under a law regulating commerce and within the jurisdiction of a federal court. Ingram Day Lumber Co. v. United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corp., (S. D. Miss. 1920) 267 Fed. 283.

Vol. IV, p. 1048, Jud. Code, sec. 24, par. ninth. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 139.]

Penalties under National Prohibition Act.

— Penalties assessed under the terms of the National Prohibition Act must be collected by a suit in the district court as authorized by this section. Kelly v. Lewellyn, (W. D. Pa. 1921) 274 Fed. 112.

Vol. IV, p. 1051, Jud. Code, sec. 24, par. fourteenth. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 140.]

Right under state law.— This section is inapplicable to a suit in equity by a landlord against his tenant and district attorney of New York county to test the constitutionality of the "Emergency Legislation" of 1920 passed in New York to remedy the housing situation arising during that year. Marcus Brown Holding Co. v. Pollak, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 272 Fed. 137.

Right to practice law.— The federal courts have no power to review the action of a state court in refusing to license an applicant to practice law. Keeley v. Evans, (D. C. Ore. 1921) 271 Fed. 520, wherein it was said:

"It is beyond question that this, a federal court, has no power or authority to review, re-examine, or reverse the action of the state Supreme Court in denying a license to practice law in the state. The United States Supreme Court has so declared as to its own authority to re-examine or reverse, as a reviewing body, the action of a state court in disbarring a member of the bar of its own court. Selling v. Radford, 243 U. S. 46, 50, 37 Sup. Ct. 377, 61 L. ed. 585, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 569. If that court has no such authority, it follows, by a much stronger reason, that this court possesses none.

"Nor can this court interpose to give complainant affirmative relief, such as to require the Supreme Court of the state to issue him a license to practice law in the state. This follows by reason of the distinct organization of the two courts, one being national and the other state, between which there is no jurisdictional co-ordination as it respects the administration of state polity. A federal court will administer the laws of the state in controversies in which it is given jurisdiction, but it will not interpose to direct or review the administration of state affairs."

Vol. IV, p. 1054, Jud. Code, sec. 24, par. sixteenth. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 140.]

Federal reserve bank as "national banking association."— The federal reserve banks created after the Judicial Code was enacted are not "national banking associations" but for jurisdictional purposes, such associations are to be deemed citizens of the states in which they are respectively located. American Bank, etc., Co. v. Federal Reserve Bank, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 Sup. Ct. 499, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing on other grounds (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 4.

Vol. IV, p. 1059, Jud. Code, sec. 24, par. twentieth. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 140.]

Concurrent jurisdiction of court of claims and district courts.— In every cause of which the court of claims has jurisdiction the district courts have a like jurisdiction, limited only in respect to the sum involved or in controversy, and, of course, the amount of the judgment which can be rendered. Sochis v. U. S., (E. D. Pa. 1920) 266 Fed. 446.

The fact that the court of claims is given jurisdiction over a particular class of claims does not prevent concurrent jurisdiction being exercised by the district courts. Benedict v. U. S., (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 271 Fed. 714.

Collector of port of New York.— Under this section it is held that a suit may be brought in the district court against the collector of the port of New York as an individual to recover money wrongfully exacted while acting under color of office. Gilmour v. Newton, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 270 Fed. 332, wherein it was held that in such an action the complaint must show either that the Constitution and laws of the United States are involved or contain an allegation of diverse citizenship.

The "fees, salary or compensation."— In Reynolds v. U. S., (E. D. Pa. 1921) 273 Fed. 534, the statement of claim was held to be insufficient to enable the court to determine whether the claim of the plaintiff was one "to recover fees, salary or compensation for official services" as an officer of the United States. The court said:

"The statement of claim carefully avoids, so far as possible, the averment of any facts from which a finding could be made from the statement of claim alone. The plaintiff is averred to have been 'employed'—not to have held an office; the defendant calls him an officer. We do not rule that, by stating the facts as they have been stated, the plaintiff cannot be found to be an officer within the meaning of the act of Congress with which we are now concerned. We rule only that the facts upon which any ruling made must be based do not appear with sufficient certainty to justify summary judgment in favor of the defendant.

"The facts probably are that the plaintiff performed services in a position to which he was appointed by the Secretary of War by authority of an act of Congress conferring power to make such appointments. If the plaintiff is willing to meet now on his own statement of the facts the question which at the trial he must meet, leave is granted him to amend his statement of claim, so as to present the facts fully, and the defendant may then meet it by a motion to dismiss for want of jurisdiction."

Failure to transmit cable message.—In Hiel v. U. S., (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 273 Fed. 729, it was held that a suit for failure to transmit a cable message after the President had taken over the cables could be maintained against the United States. The court said:

"Of course, the Tucker Act is not to be interpreted verbally; nor should I think the fact in any sense determinative that the sender of a cable message might sue the telegraph company ex contractu. The reason why it seems to me that the act applies here is that, if the United States had not the immunity of a sovereign, there would for the foregoing reasons have been no breach of positive duty ('subtraction'), and there would have been a breach of contract. That is precisely the situation which the act was drawn to meet. Congress meant to assume liability for the acts of such of its agents as had the power in the discharge of their duties to assume or refuse engagements on the faith of which other citizens should rely. It did not mean to assume liability for the proper discharge of duties which it imposed upon those agents by virtue only of positive law.

"It was urged at the bar that this result might expose the United States to serious loss and impede it in the discharge of its governmental functions. This is, of course, an irrelevant consideration, when the purpose of the act is clear; but here it is out of place in any event. Whatever be the justification in policy of the sovereign's immunity, the first consideration ought to be this: That in the performance of its voluntary engagements with its citizens it should conform to the same standard of honorable conduct as it exacts of them touching their conduct with each other. Any policy which would exempt the United States from the scrupulous performance of its obligations is base and mean; it serves in the end to bring the United States into contempt, to prejudice it in its dealings when it enters into the common fields of human intercourse, and to arouse the indignation of honorable men. Congress by the Tucker Act meant to avoid such consequences."

Suits to recover for property taken for war purposes.—In the different war measures enacted by Congress power was conferred to take possession of the property of individual citizens for public purposes, and the right to institute proceedings against the United States for compensation for the property taken was also given, Congress thereby gave its consent to such proceedings being instituted in those tribunals which Congress had already provided for the purpose, and had intrusted with power to determine the rights of the claimants and of the United States. This meant that proceedings might be instituted in the Court of Claims, and also that they might be instituted in any District Court of the United States, provided the sum involved did not exceed the limitation above named. Sochis v. U. S., (E. D. Pa. 1920) 266 Fed. 446.

The jurisdiction conferred by section 10 of the Act of Congress of August 10, 1917, to recover compensation for land requisitioned by the government for war purposes was not affected or restricted by the limitation as to amount contained in this section. U. S. v. McGrane, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 761.

Suits against Emergency Fleet Corporation.—A state court has no jurisdiction of a suit against the Emergency Fleet Corporation. The corporation is a governmental agency and suit against it can only be brought in a federal court. Southern Bridge Co. v. U. S. Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corp., (S. D. Ala. 1920) 266 Fed. 747.

A suit against the Emergency Fleet Corporation for a claim in excess of $10,000 cannot be maintained in the district court. Sloan Shipyards Corp. v. U. S. Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corp., (W. D. Wash. 1921) 272 Fed. 132.

Vol. IV, p. 1062, Jud. Code, sec. 24, par. twenty-fourth. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 141.]

This section is limited to allotments of land by the government to the Indians and does not refer to a controversy relating to land which has come to one by a division in severalty among the Seneca Indians of New York from the whole tribe. U. S. v. Seneca Nation of New York Indians, (W. D. N. Y. 1921) 274 Fed. 946.

CONSTRUCTION OF REMOVAL ACTS

1. In General (p. 27)

Effect of removal.—The removal of a case from the state court does not recreate it, or give any more life to the original complaint which was filed in the state court, than it then had. It merely removes what, if any suit was pending in the state court, and, if that court had no jurisdiction of the suit which was removed, then it would be the duty of the federal court to so declare on the question being properly raised, even though such a suit might have been brought in the federal court in the first instance. Southern Bridge Co. v. U. S. Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corp., (S. D. Ala. 1920) 266 Fed. 747.

III. RIGHT OF REMOVAL IN GENERAL

1. Entirely Statutory (p. 31)

Dependent on Act of Congress.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Gopcevic v. California Packing Corp., (N. D. Cal. 1921) 272 Fed. 994; Hall v. Payne, (D. C. Mont. 1921) 274 Fed. 237.

Statute must be substantially complied with.—Gopcevic v. California Packing Corp., (N. D. Cal. 1921) 272 Fed. 994.

4. Waiver of Right of Removal

a. In General (p. 38)

Failure to raise objection in state court.—"The failure of plaintiff to appear in the state court and interpose his objection there did not waive his rights in the premises. A motion to remand is the proper and usual method of testing the sufficiency and regularity of removal proceedings. Indeed, had plaintiff appeared in the state court in response to the notice of intended removal, that court would not have been bound to recognize him, since objections to the formality of removal proceedings are usually for the federal court. It is only where the lack of showing is so wanting in substantive merit as to clearly disclose on the face of the application that the order should not be granted that a state court is at liberty to deny it." Gopcevic v. California Packing Corp., (N. D. Cal. 1921) 272 Fed. 994.

IV. REMOVABLE "SUITS"

2. "Suit" (p. 43)

A proceeding under a state road law to fix and collect an assessment of benefits against a property owner is a "suit" within the meaning of this section and is removable where the requisite elements of removability exist. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Road Imp. Dist. No. 2, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920)

265 Fed. 524. Regarding this question, the court said:

"As to the ruling of the trial court in refusing to remand the case to the county court, we are of the opinion that the trial court did not err in this regard. The proceeding under the Alexander Road Law, up to the time that the board of Commissioners certified and filed the assessment of the board of assessors in the county court was an ex parte proceeding; but, of course, before the defendant could be compelled to pay the amount of the assessment, it was entitled to defend against its liability therefor, and this right is given by the requirement of the law that the county court shall fix a date, of which public notice shall be given, on which the owner of property may appear and defend. The assessment by the board of assessors, duly certified by the commissioners to the county court, stands in the place of a complaint, and the public notice required by law of the time when the county court will hear objections and exceptions to the assessment is in the nature of process. The exceptions to the defendant, which the law requires to be in writing, take the place of an answer. We are clearly of the opinion that after the filing of the assessment of the board of assessors in the county court the proceeding was a suit, within the meaning of the law regulating the removal of suits from state to federal courts. Section 14 of the Alexander Road Law (Acts 1915, No. 338) reads as follows:

"At the hearing provided for in the preceding section and after the county court shall have considered the assessment of benefits, it shall enter its findings thereon, either confirming the assessment of benefits against said property, increasing or diminishing same, and the order made by the county court shall have all the force and effect of a judgment against all real property in said district, and it shall be deemed final, conclusive, binding and incontestable except by direct attack on appeal."

"The county court in this very case, not recognizing the removal of the cause to the United States District Court, on June 28, 1918, rendered the following judgment:

"It is further considered, ordered, and adjudged by the court that the assessment of benefits made against the St. Louis Southwestern Railway Company and against the Louisiana & Arkansas Railway Company as to the line of railroads of said respective companies in said district by the assessors for said district, be approved and confirmed by the court, and the clerk of this court is hereby instructed and directed to spread same upon the records as a permanent assessment roll for said district."

"We are of the opinion that a proceeding which might result in a judgment against the defendant for the payment of money is a suit at law, and that the assessment of benefits in such a proceeding is an assessment, in the same way that a jury assesses damages in a civil action at law upon breach of contract or any other contested liability, and not a mere fixing of the value of property for the purpose of taxation."

10. Within Original "Jurisdiction by This Title"

a. In General (p. 52)

Unless the suit could have originally been brought in the district it is not removable. Kansas Gas, etc., Co. v. Wichita Natural Gas Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 614.

The facts that there is a controversy between citizens of different states and that the requisite amount is involved do not of themselves give jurisdiction on removal. Nickels v. Pullman Co., (W. D. Va. 1920) 268 Fed. 610, wherein the court said:

"The only court to which removal can be made is that of the district of the plaintiff's citizenship and residence, and removal to that court can be validly made only if the defendant could in that district have been validly served with the process of the federal court in an original action. In other words, original jurisdiction of what I have called the subject-matter and an in invitum jurisdiction over the person of the defendant are essential to removal, except when the plaintiff consents or waives objection to the removal."

Doubt as to jurisdiction.—Where after trial in the federal court of a case removed from the state court but before final argument and decision, the defendant presented a verified motion to remand to the state court for the reason that the alleged diversity of citizenship on which it had effected the removal did not in fact exist, it was held that as the jurisdiction of the court appeared so doubtful on the verified motion and the unverified response it should have inquired into the matter fully. St. Louis Smelting, etc., Co. v. Nix, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 977.

d. Proceedings for Mandamus (p. 54)

Effect of asking ancillary relief.—A proceeding in mandamus is not rendered removable by the fact that an application for a temporary injunction as an ancillary remedy is made therein. "The application for the restraining order was made in this cause and is merely ancillary, incidental, and auxiliary to the original suit. Its purpose was to maintain the existing status until the legal and statutory rights of the parties could be determined. The action is still a proceeding for a writ of mandamus." North Carolina Public Service Co. v. Southern Power Co., (1921) 181 N. C. 356, 107 S. E. 226.

V. REMOVAL FROM AND TO WHAT COURT

1. From What Court (p. 60)

A state court having no jurisdiction of the remedy given by section 16 of the Clayton Act, jurisdiction cannot be given to the federal court by removal. General Invest. Co. v. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 235.

2. To What Court (p. 61)

Where both plaintiff and defendant non-residents.—To the same effect as original annotation, see Coalmont Moshannon Coal Co. v. Matthew Addy Steamship, etc., Corp., (E. D. Va. 1921) 271 Fed. 114.

Where an action, brought in the court of a state of which neither party is a citizen, is removed by the defendant to the federal court for that district on the ground of diverse citizenship, a motion by the plaintiff to remand it should be denied. Earles v. Germain Co., (S. D. Ala. 1920) 265 Fed. 715. In passing upon this question, the court said: "Some of the courts have discussed the right of the plaintiff, who brought the suit in the state court, to object to the removal to the federal courts, and have held that such right of objection exists. I feel that this condition grows out of a confusion of the venue statutes and the removal statutes. Bearing in mind that the whole question is one of statutory regulation, both as to venue and as to removal, and that the parties have just such rights in each of these questions as the statutes give, and no more, and that it is not necessary that the rights given as to venue by the statute shall conform to the rights as to removal, or vice versa, we can easily see that the Congress may give the defendant a right to remove a suit to a federal court in which the plaintiff could not bring it in the first instance. The question then is: Has the statute done so?"

"Coming back, now to the question of confusion between these two statutes, we see that section 51 of the Judicial Code fixes the venue, where jurisdiction of the federal court is based on varying citizenship, in the following words:

"No civil suit shall be brought in any District Court against any person by any original process or proceeding in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant; but where the jurisdiction is founded only on the fact that the action is between citizens of different states suit shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either the plaintiff or the defendant." (Italics mine.)

"It is therefore manifest, from the mere reading of the statute, that the defendant is given the unqualified right to object, where he is sued in a place other than that required by the statute, even though the court in which the suit is brought has jurisdiction to try the case. The right to object is given, not because of want of jurisdiction in the court, but because Congress, in its wisdom, saw fit to give it, after considering the reasons why the place of bringing suit by original process should be limited to certain of the courts having jurisdiction to try the case.

"Here the plaintiff has the right in the first instance to elect to sue either in the state court or in such federal court as Congress has given him the right to file original process in. Should he, however, sue in another federal court, having jurisdiction, but not venue, defendant may, because of the provisions of the venue statute, object, and have the suit dismissed, or he may appear generally, and so waive the right to object. Now, referring to section 28 of the Judicial Code:

"Any other suit of a civil nature, at law or in equity, of which the District Courts of the United States are given jurisdiction by this title, and which are now pending or which may hereafter be brought, in any state court, may be removed into the District Court of the United States for the proper district by the defendant or defendants therein, being nonresidents of that state." (Italics mine.)

"The words 'any other suit' and 'any state court' are about as broad and general and unlimited in their application as could have been used. We have here a right of removal given to the defendants, being non-residents of that state. There are only two things required by this statute: First, the court to which removal is sought must have jurisdiction; and, second, the defendants seeking the removal must be nonresidents of the state in which the suit is brought. There is no more right given to the plaintiff to object to the removal than there was given by the venue statute to the defendant to object if the suit was brought in the federal court in the state of the plaintiff's residence.

"The plaintiff here has no right not given by the statute, if it be conceded that the right of removal is statutory, as to which there can be no doubt. Insurance Co. v. Pechner, 95 U. S. 185, 24 L. Ed. 427. The venue statute gives plaintiff the right to sue by original process in certain courts, while the removal statute gives the defendant the right to remove the suit from certain state courts to certain federal courts.

"If we concede the power of Congress to legislate on the subject, how can we question rights so plainly and unequivocally given? How can we construe a statute giving a defendant certain rights, so as to find the right in the plaintiff to negative those given to the defendant by the statute, when such statute neither qualified the right given to defendant nor grants any such right to the plaintiff? When courts do this, they cease to construe, and begin to legislate."

VI. AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY

1. Same as for Original Jurisdiction (p. 67)

Original jurisdiction by this title.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see

Ross v. Pacific Steamship Co., (D. C. Ore. 1921) 272 Fed. 538.

4. Amount in Dispute, How Shown

a. In General (p. 68)

In determining whether the jurisdictional requirement as to the sum or value of the matter in controversy is met, there should not be taken into consideration the value of a thing about which, under the issues in the suit, the court is not called on to concern itself in any way. Wetsel v. Empire Gas, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 865.

Allegation as to value.—An allegation in a petition for removal that "the value of the land and the amount in controversy" exceed the sum of $3,000 has been held to be insufficient to show the required jurisdictional sum. "What was alleged to exceed, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum of $3,000, was 'the value of the land and the amount in controversy.' The right to remove the suit was dependent upon the matter in controversy exceeding, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value of three thousand dollars. Judicial Code, sections 24, 28. Neither the above-quoted averment of the removal petition, nor the quoted clause of the agreed statement of facts, showed that the matter in controversy exceeded exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value of $3,000, unless all beneficial interest in the land, or exceeding $3,000 in amount of the value of it, was in controversy in the suit. Nothing less than 'the value of the land and the amount in controversy' was alleged to exceed, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum of $3,000." Wetsel v. Empire Gas, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 865.

c. In Suits for Equitable Relief (p. 73)

Suit to cancel lease.—In Wetsel v. Empire Gas, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 865, it was held that there was not sufficient to show jurisdiction where the value of the matter brought into controversy by the suit could not properly be regarded as more than the amount of the difference between the value of the land subject to the lease and its value free of the lease, and there was nothing to show that the value of the land was or could be diminished or increased to the extent of $3,000 by the existence and enforcement of the instrument.

VII. SUITS UNDER CONSTITUTION, LAWS OR TREATIES

1. General Rules as to Removability (p. 77)

Where the case as formulated in the state court was one arising under the laws of the United States, the removal of the case whether on that ground or not brings into the federal court a case the jurisdiction of which continues for all purposes. General Invest. Co. v. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 235.

2. Citizenship Immaterial

To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original annotation, see Stark v. Payne, (D. C. Mont. 1921) 271 Fed. 477.

5. Nonfederal United with Federal Question (p. 79)

If one of several causes of action set up by the plaintiffs in their pleading arises under the Constitution or laws of the United States the jurisdiction of the federal court is not affected by the fact that the others do not so arise. Lowry v. Hert, (W. D. Ky. 1921) 273 Fed. 698.

10. Federal Question Must Appear in Plaintiff's Pleading (p. 79)

The rule stated.—"It is well settled that the entry of a federal question into a case by way of defense, although it may present the controlling or the only disputed question, does not justify removal under section 28 of the Judicial Code." Ohio v. Swift, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 141.

11. Removable Cases

i. Suit by or Against Federal Corporation (p. 86)

Federal reserve bank.—A suit in which the principal defendant, to wit, a federal reserve bank, was incorporated under the laws of the United States is removable from a state to a federal district court. American Bank, etc., Co. v. Federal Reserve Bank, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 499, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing on other grounds (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 4.

The United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation is a corporation of the United States and a suit against such a corporation is a suit arising under the laws of the United States and as such is removable from a state to a federal court. Rosenberg v. U. S. Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corp., (D. C. Ore. 1920) 271 Fed. 956.

Corporation acting as agent of United States.—A suit against a corporation is not removable on the ground that the defendant was acting as agent of the United States in the transaction which forms the subject matter of the suit and in which it is sought to hold the defendant personally liable. Ingram Day Lumber Co. v. United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corp., (S. D. Miss. 1920) 267 Fed. 283, wherein it was said: "The right of removal is purely statutory, and I fail to find in the removal statutes any provision permitting the agent or delegate of the United States to remove to the District Court a suit in which it is sought to hold such agent or delegate personally liable on any act or transaction arising out of such agency (where the requisite amount is not involved). Of course, if the agent who is sued can show that he was not acting, or pretending to act for himself, and did not bind himself personally, but bound only his principal, such facts would constitute a legal defense to the suit.

"Section 33 of the Judicial Code permits any officer appointed under or acting by authority of any revenue law of the United States when sued or prosecuted on account of any act done under color of his office, or of any such law (or any officer of either House of Congress), to remove such civil suit or criminal prosecution to the United States District Court; but there is no right of removal in a case not otherwise cognizable in the District Court, where a suit is brought against an agent instead of against the principal, on the ground that the principal, if sued, would have to be sued in the federal court. Therefore, of and by itself, the mere allegation that the defendant in this case was acting in the transaction out of which the suit arose as the agent of the United States, and that the suit ought to be against the United States, is not sufficient to remove to the federal court on that ground alone a case (of the amount here involved) in which it is sought to hold that agent personally liable on a contract."

j. Miscellaneous Cases (p. 88)

An action brought to have a contract of sale of letters patent made by an administrator set aside on the ground of fraud and asking that the plaintiffs be adjudged to be the owners of said letters patent and the patents granted upon the applications therefor, and that they also be adjudged to recover of the defendant a sum which will reasonably compensate them for the loss of the use of the said patents, is removable to the federal court. In this case the court said: "It is so well settled as to be elementary, that, when the United States grants a patent for a new invention in the arts, it confers upon the patentee an 'exclusive' property in the patented invention, which property nobody can appropriate without the patentee's consent. The inventor's right and title thereto are thus altogether based upon the Constitution and laws of the United States, and, as we have intimated, it would seem to follow, as of course, that any right to any judgment that the plaintiffs (who are the heirs of the patentee) are the owners of the patents or any judgment in their favor for the recovery of money for any infringement of or encroachment upon such exclusive right must be based upon a claim of title in the patents themselves.

"It would seem, therefore, that any action at law or in equity which seeks to remedy such a situation inevitably and necessarily grows out of and is based upon a right created by and claimed under the patents, and therefore upon a right which arises under the patent laws of the United States. And as has been intimated, if one part of the relief demanded is based upon a claim of title to the patents, it is sufficient notwithstanding other claims are based upon other grounds." Lowry v. Hert, (W. D. Ky. 1921) 273 Fed. 698.

VIII. PROVISIO EXCLUDING CASES ARISING UNDER FEDERAL EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT (p. 92)

Amendment after removal.—Where an action for negligence was brought in a state court on the ground of diverse citizenship, the plaintiff cannot amend his complaint in the federal court by adding counts alleged that he was engaged in interstate commerce at the time of the injury and praying for judgment under the Federal Employers' Liability Act. In disallowing the amendment the court said that it was obvious that under this section if the amendment had been a part of the original complaint in the state court, the cause would not have been removable to the federal court, and hence it could not be converted after removal into a new and nonremovable cause of action. Newberry v. Central of Georgia R. Co., (M. D. Ala. 1921) 271 Fed. 117.

IX. CITIZENSHIP AS JURISDICTIONAL ELEMENT

4. State as Citizen (p. 96)

To the same effect as the third paragraph in the original annotation, see Ohio v. Swift, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 141; People v. St. Louis, (1921) 297 Ill. 199, 130 N. E. 366.

A person who brings a suit on behalf of the state is regarded as the plaintiff for the purposes of removal on the ground of citizenship. Ohio v. Swift, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 141.

"A suit by an agent of the state as a nominal party in behalf of the state presents a controversy to which the state is a party, and cannot be removed to the United States court as a controversy between citizens. . . . A state is not a citizen, and a suit in which she is a party to the controversy is not removable on the ground of diverse citizenship." Robertson v. Jordan River Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 269 Fed. 606, so holding in the case of a suit by a revenue agent of state.

State as real party in interest.—The interest which the state of Washington has in the result of a suit by the Port of Seattle—a municipal corporation—to quiet the title of the state to tide-lands as against a foreign corporation claiming, as grantee from the state, the right to wharf out to the navigable channel, does not prevent the removal of the cause to a federal district court for diverse citizenship, since the port had both the power and the duty to bring suit to protect the interests involved, and had an independent direct financial interest in the result, a statute providing for the payment by abutting owners, in the nature of a rental, for a permit to use parts of the waterway in the erection of wharves, docks, or other structures, and requiring that a specified portion of such rental be paid to the county for the use of the port. Seattle v. Oregon, etc., R. Co., (1921) 255 U. S. 56, 41 S. Ct. 237, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

State a real or merely nominal party.—The state as the holder of the legal title of lands held in trust for a class of beneficiaries is not a merely nominal party to a suit by an agent of the state as trustee for the use and benefit of the inhabitants of certain designated townships and the suit is not removable. Robertson v. Jordan River Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 269 Fed. 606.

7. Corporation (p. 98)

Where the plaintiff and defendant are both corporations and neither one a corporation existing under the laws of the state in which the suit is brought the case is not removable on the ground of diversity of citizenship. Kansas Gas, etc., Co. v. Wichita Natural Gas Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 614.

Counties have been recognized as corporations and, being such as citizens for the purposes of suits based on diverse citizenship in the federal courts. Pearl River County v. Wyatt Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 28, so holding in an action brought by a county to construe certain timber deeds made by the supervisors of that county to the defendants.

X. DIVERSE CITIZENSHIP, ALIENAGE OR FOREIGN STATE AS GROUND FOR REMOVAL

1. Same as for Original Jurisdiction (p. 102)

An action cannot as a general rule be removed to a district in which it could not originally have been brought. Centaur Motor Co. v. Eccleston, (W. D. N. Y. 1920) 264 Fed. 852.

Where neither party is a citizen of the state in which a suit is brought it is not removable unless the parties waive the question of venue. Perrette v. Illinois Commercial Men's Ass'n, (W. D. Ky. 1920) 267 Fed. 583.

An action against the Director General of Railroads by a citizen of one state arising out of the alleged negligence of a railroad which was a citizen of another state was held to be removable to the federal court. Hall v. Payne, (D. C. Mont. 1921) 274 Fed. 237.

3. Several Parties Plaintiff or Defendant

a. In General (p. 103)

A suit based on negligence brought by a resident of the state against a foreign corporation and resident employees of the corporation, but in which the company only is served, is one against such company which may be removed to a federal court. Galehouse v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (N. D. Ohio 1921) 274 Fed. 370.

4. Fraudulent Joinder of Defendants

a. As Ground for Removal in General (p. 113)

In Gulledge v. Director General of Railroads, (W. D. N. C. 1921) 270 Fed. 276, the facts were held not to show a fraudulent joinder for the purpose of preventing jurisdiction of the federal court.

XI. SEPARABLE CONTROVERSY AS GROUND OF REMOVAL

3. Tests of Separability

a. In General (p. 123)

In order to justify such removal, on the ground of a separable controversy.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Winfield v. Wichita Natural Gas Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 47; Atlanta v. Wichita Natural Gas Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 60; Morrell v. Lalonde, (D. C. R. I. 1921) 271 Fed. 19.

5. Proper or Indispensable Codefendant (p. 130)

Indispensable party.—To same effect as second paragraph of original annotation, see Winfield v. Wichita Natural Gas Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 47, wherein it was held that a company supplying natural gas to a distributing company, which in turn supplied it to a city, was not an indispensable party to a controversy between the latter company and the city as to whether such company had assumed the obligation of its predecessor under an ordinance contract to supply natural gas to the city and its inhabitants at a certain rate; and that the distributing company was not an indispensable party to a controversy between the company furnishing the gas and the city as to whether such company had assumed the obligations of the grantee of the ordinance contract and its successors, by alleged agreements of assumption separate and distinct from the alleged agreement of assumption by the distributing company. To same effect, see Atlanta v. Wichita Natural Gas Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 60.

10. Misjoinder or Multifariousness (p. 131)

Misjoinder.—Where under the laws of a state a railroad company and its employees can not be joined as defendants in a negligence action where an action is commenced by a resident plaintiff against a foreign railroad and resident employees, the latter are improperly joined and the controversy is separable as to the company and its employees and is removable to the federal court. Galehouse v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (N. D. Ohio 1921) 274 Fed. 370.

41. Action against Principal and Surety (p. 161)

In an action for personal injury against a tortfeasor and a guaranty company under a state statute allowing a judgment against both in one action, there is no such separable controversy as will justify the removal of the cause on the ground of the nonresidence of the guaranty company. Morrell v. Lalande, (D. C. R. I. 1921) 271 Fed. 19, wherein it was said:

"The substance of the matter is that the liability of the insurance company to pay to the plaintiff must be worked out in favor of the plaintiff through the direct liability of the insured. I am unable to read the statute as permitting a direct suit against the insurance company alone, without joinder of the insured, until after judgment against the insured. If the statute seeks to convert an agreement to indemnify against liability of a certain person into a direct obligation to pay damages, it might result that the absence of the tort-feasor would deprive the insurance company of the ability to defend, and expose it to the danger of paying damages for which judgment could not be obtained against the insured. The statute may reasonably be regarded as designed to give to a plaintiff incidental relief against an indemnitor; to extend it farther would be to disregard the substantial rights of the insurer and the nature of its agreement with the insured. * * * As the liability of the insurance company to the plaintiff must always be incidental to its liability to the tort-feasor, it is obvious that the controversy between the plaintiff and the insurance company as to its liability to pay directly to the plaintiff cannot be fully determined until there is also determined the primary controversy between the plaintiff and the insured."

XIII. WHO MAY REMOVE A SUIT

4. For Federal Question

a. In General (p. 207)

The "project manager" of a United States reclamation project, when sued in a state court for damages on account of his alleged negligence in operating a project canal, can remove the cause to a federal court. The court said:

"In view of the relation of the government to such a project and the administrative status of the manager, a federal question is presumed to be involved; and after all that is the ultimate inquiry, for upon that ground alone defendant predicates his claim of a right to remove. * * * But whether the manager is an 'officer' is not the controlling question. Admittedly he is the governmental representative, through whom the project is managed and carried on, and it is not highly material whether his status be that of an officer or a responsible agent. He is engaged in the administration of a federal law, and he has the right to bring into the federal courts controversies, to which he is made a party, touching the validity or propriety of acts done by him in his representative ca-capacity." Whiffin v. Cole, (D. C. Idaho 1919) 264 Fed. 252.

XIV. FEDERAL JURISDICTION TO BE SHOWN IN RECORD ON REMOVAL

1. In General (p. 213)

Necessity of showing.—In Buena Vista County v. Title Guaranty, etc., Co., (N. D. Ia. 1920) 267 Fed. 477, the court said:

"Neither the petition for removal nor the record in the cause shows any grounds for the removal of this cause from the state court to this court, or that this court has any jurisdiction of this controversy, and the exceptions in the state court to the petition for removal are well taken, and should have been sustained."

Facts pleaded as determining separability.—"It is the controversies, the facts pleaded in the complaint portray, not the legal conclusions the pleader alleges result from those facts, nor his averments of joint liability or joint action, nor his prayer for relief, that determine whether or not the controversies disclosed by the complaint are separable." Winfield v. Wichita Natural Gas Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 47. To same effect, see Atlanta v. Wichita Natural Gas Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 60.

XVI. ORDER OF REMAND NOT REVIEWABLE

2. Indirect Review Forbidden

c. Mandamus to Take Jurisdiction (p. 233)

Mandamus denied.—Mandamus to vacate an order which improperly remanded a cause removed from a state court is not permitted under this section. Matter of Matthew Addy Steamship, etc., Corp., (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 508, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

II. TIME FOR FILING PETITION AND BOND

2. Necessity of Compliance with Statute
(p. 238)

Under this section a party having the right to remove a cause from a state to a federal court must file the required petition and bond therefor in the state court at the time or any time before the defendant is required by the laws of the state, or the rule of the state court, to answer or plead to the petition or complaint of the plaintiff. Batchelder v. S. C. Quimby Land Co., (N. D. Iowa 1920) 267 Fed. 483.

In Williams v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (M. D. Pa. 1920) 266 Fed. 1003, where it was claimed that the right to removal had been lost by delay the court said: "It may be readily conceded that considerable time has elapsed before the defendant, Williams, filed his petition for removal, yet there is nothing in the statute to deny to him the right of so doing when he came. The Judicial Code (section 29) provides that such petition may be made and filed at 'any time before the defendant is required by the laws of the state or the rule of the state court in which suit is brought, to answer or plead to the declaration' or statement, so that, if the cause should be removed, the validity of any and all of its defenses should be tried and determined in the District Court of the United States. Though tardy, this may all as yet be accomplished in the case before the court.

"The information presented is sufficient to satisfy the court that the cause is within the jurisdiction of the court, and the motion to remand is denied."

7. Time to Plead in Various States

o. In Pennsylvania (p. 241)

A defendant after having its petition for removal allowed has a legal right to delay the bringing of the record into the federal court until the last of the thirty days allowed for that purpose, and he also has a like legal right to withhold an affidavit of defense until the end of the thirty days' limit fixed by this section although the limit for filing such affidavit is fixed at fifteen days by the state law. Anders v. Security Mut. L. Ins. Co., (E. D. Pa. 1920) 268 Fed. 677. The court said: "The effect of the removal statute, therefore, is to extend the time, unless what is meant is to treat the filing of the record as if that were the commencement of the action in this court. In a sense, of course, it is; but to conclude that it is such commencement, in the sense of when the time within which the affidavit must be filed commences to run, is to beg the whole question, because it is the putting of a construction upon section 29 which is decisive of the point involved. If the position of the plaintiff be tenable, it is because a statement of claim, with a rule to answer, was filed when the record was filed in this court. The argument is that, as this court proceeds as a state court would proceed, and as the state court would give judgment after 15 days, this court should give judgment after 15 days, notwithstanding the fact that section 29 gives 30 days before judgment can be entered. This is for the reason that section 29 is to be construed as meaning, not that the defendant may plead within the 30 days, but that he shall plead within 15 days, if the state statute so requires, and in any event within 30 days. Section 29, however, only requires the defendant to plead within 30 days after the filing of the record, and that 'the cause shall then proceed.' If this means, as contended by the defendant, that the cause, after being brought here by removal proceedings, is treated as an action here brought and put at issue, but is not so treated until the time for filing the pleas has expired, the whole argument on behalf of the plaintiff fails.

"The position advanced by the plaintiff, that the cause, when it proceeds, proceeds here in conformity with the state practice, we think is well taken. Section 29, however, undoubtedly gives a defendant 30 days within which to file an affidavit of defense or other plea or answer, which the state practice may require. If it had been intended by Congress not to give a defendant this 30 days' time allowance, when the state practice gave him a less time, this intention could have been expressed in a few words. Not only is there no such expression, but, on the contrary, the expiration of the 30 days is made the beginning of the time when this court can take action."

9. Computation of Time (p. 242)

Where under the laws of the state the defendant must plead within a specified number of days after the declaration has been filed by the plaintiff, a defendant's petition for removal must be filed within the same time and if filed thereafter comes too late. And this view is taken where though the declaration is not filed within the specified number of days after process has been issued it is, in accordance with the recognized state practice, filed as of right before a motion to dismiss has been made. Allen v. Sewanee Fuel, etc., Co., (E. D. Tenn. 1917) 268 Fed. 219.

IV. PETITION FOR REMOVAL

1. Necessity of Petition

a. In General—Mere Motion (p. 273)

This section does not prescribe the contents of the petition, and it will serve if, taken in connection with the complaint in the state court and judicial notice, the allegations and facts of which it need not repeat, it discloses a removable case and prays for removal. Hall v. Payne, (D. C. Mont. 1921) 274 Fed. 237.

Nature of petition.—The petition for removal is in the nature of process to transfer the case to the federal court on due notice to plaintiff. Hall v. Payne, (D. C. Mont. 1921) 274 Fed. 237.

b. Removal by Stipulation and Consent
(p. 274)

Consent of parties cannot confer jurisdiction.—Robertson v. Jordan River Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 269 Fed. 606.

"The jurisdiction of the inferior courts of the United States rests wholly upon the acts of Congress. It cannot be conferred by consent of the parties, or by their omission to contest it, or by estoppel." St. Louis Smelting, etc., Co. v. Nix, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 977.

4. Title of Cause and Address (p. 276)

An indorsement of title to a complaint giving the names of parties who were citizens of different states would not make the case removable if the essential facts do not appear in the complaint. Ohio v. Swift, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 141.

8. Jurisdictional Averments in General.

a. Petition for Removal as a Pleading
(p. 277)

In general.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see People v. St. Louis, (1921) 297 Ill. 199, 130 N. E. 366, wherein it was held that a petition for removal solely on the ground of diverse citizenship did not justify a removal on any other ground.

The petition should state facts which taken in connection with such as already appear entitle the petitioner to the transfer. Nickels v. Pullman Co., (W. D. Va. 1920) 288 Fed. 610.

It is well settled that the right to remove on the ground of diverse citizenship is usually to be determined by the removal petition, but the record may be referred to to supplement the petition, where that is incomplete. Certainly the petition to remove prevails, unless distinctly inconsistent with the record. Ohio v. Swift, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 141.

Amendments.—Parties in a suit for removal may be allowed to amend their pleadings where they do not conform to the requirements of the equity rules of the court and raise issues of which the court has no jurisdiction. Benedict v. Hall, (N. D. Ia. 1920) 267 Fed. 1013.

10. Averments as to Citizenship

a. Individuals (p. 282)

An averment of residence.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Batchel-

f. Corporation (p. 286)

Where there is nothing in the petition for removal to show that a plaintiff board of supervisors of a certain county, or a drainage district of that county, is a citizen or corporation of any other state than the defendant, and there is no diversity of citizenship between any of the parties to the action the federal court has no jurisdiction. Buena Vista County v. Title Guaranty etc., Co., (N. D. Ia. 1920) 267 Fed. 477.

15. Averments as to Federal Question

a. In General (p. 302)

Where removal is sought on the ground that a question arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States is involved, it must appear on the face of the complaint that such a question is in fact involved. Kansas Gas, etc., Co. v. Wichita Natural Gas Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 614.

VIII. STATE COURT'S LOSS OF JURISDICTION

5. Validity of further proceedings

b. Amendment of Pleadings (p. 359)

Amendments to plaintiff's pleadings.—The claim as made and standing on the record of the case at the time the removal is effected is what determines the jurisdiction of the United States court, the other jurisdictional facts existing, and such jurisdiction once acquired cannot be taken away by a subsequent amendment reducing the amount claimed below the jurisdictional amount required. Twin Hills Gasolene Co. v. Bradford Oil Corp., (E. D. Okla. 1919) 264 Fed. 440.

IX. JURISDICTION ACQUIRED BY FEDERAL COURT

1. Simultaneous with Filing of Sufficient Petition and Bond (p. 366)

The state court loses its jurisdiction on filing of the petition and bond for removal and a dismissal of the action by the state court subsequent thereto is void. Ohio v. Swift, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 141.

A formal order for removal is of no effect. "The right of removal is statutory, and is established immediately on the filing of a proper bond and petition, showing on its face that the case is one which the defendant has a right to remove under the provisions of the statute. No issue of fact raised upon the petition or record can be tried in the state court. Duff v. Hildreth, 183 Mass. 440, 67 N. E. 356. Where jurisdictional facts authorizing removal of a cause from a state to a federal court exist and are properly pleaded, and all the requirements of the law are met, the cause is in contemplation of law removed, and further proceedings in the state court are void, for the cause is ipso facto removed. Miller v. Soule, (D. C.) 221 Fed.

493. Under the statute (section 29 of the Judicial Code) it is the duty of the state court to accept the petition and bond when tendered in proper form, and certify the case to the federal District Court, which will determine for itself whether the case was wrongfully or improperly removed thereto." Williams v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (M. D. Pa. 1920) 266 Fed. 1003.

X. TIME TO PLEAD IN FEDERAL COURT AND FURTHER PROCEEDINGS THEREIN (p. 374)

Compliance with statute essential.—The right of removal is purely statutory and one seeking the benefits of the statute must comply with its essential provisions. Wena Lumber Co. v. Continental Lumber Co., (S. D. Miss. 1921) 270 Fed. 795.

Right to plead after thirty days.—"The requirement to plead may not be mandatory or jurisdictional, in the sense that it may not be waived by the parties or extended by the court; but it is an essential step necessary to be taken by the defendant before the cause shall then proceed in the same manner as if it had originally commenced in the said district court. . . . Whether to allow the defendant to plead after the expiration of the 30 days or to remand the cause is a matter that calls for the exercise of a sound legal discretion. Certain it is that the statute may not be disregarded with impunity, and failure to comply with it without any satisfactory excuse renders the cause subject to remand." Wena Lumber Co. v. Continental Lumber Co., (S. D. Miss. 1921) 270 Fed. 795.

1. In General (p. 377)

Pleading.—An allegation to the effect that "certain courts" of the state of Ohio have construed the statutes and laws of Ohio so as to permit the seizure and taking of plaintiff's property without due process of law, whereby "petitioner will be unable to enforce its rights under the laws of the United States," comes far short of the full and exact statement of deprivation of civil rights which would be necessary to show a case authorizing removal under this section. Ohio v. Swift, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 141.

II. CONSTRUCTION

1. In General (p. 362)

Scope and intent of section.—Referring to section 643 of the Revised Statutes which is embodied in this section it is said:

"This section was originally enacted for the protection of federal officers who are engaged in the enforcement of the federal internal revenue laws and persons assisting such officers in the enforcement of such laws. The act was passed in consequence of an attempt by one of the states to make penal the collection by United States officers within such state of duties under the revenue law. Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U. S. 257, 25 L. ed. 648. The scope of this section has since been enlarged, by preventing suits in the state courts, not only against those enforcing the revenue laws, but also officers of either house of Congress in the discharge of their official duties in executing any order of such house, and against any officer of the courts of the United States while engaged in any official act. The purpose of this act is, then, to remove from state courts to the federal courts civil actions or criminal prosecutions against any of these three sets of officers in the performance of their official duties, and against persons assisting the officers in the performance of official acts under the revenue laws. This section was interpreted in Johnson v. Wells Fargo & Co., (C. C.) 98 Fed. 3, 8. The court said:

"The purpose of the statute is to protect the revenue officers of the government in the line of their official duties, and those who are employed to act under them in the performance of such duties; but, further than providing this necessary protection to the administration of its revenues, the federal government has no interest in the business affairs of the people incidentally brought within the range of the tariff system. The statute must be interpreted with reference to its manifest spirit and general purpose, and a word or phrase should not be extended beyond its proper relation to give jurisdiction where jurisdiction does not appear to have been intended. Moreover, where the question of jurisdiction is doubtful, the rule now is to resolve that doubt against the jurisdiction of the federal courts." Application of Shumpka, (N. D. N. Y. 1920) 268 Fed. 686.

"The federal court acquires jurisdiction, on removal from the state court, only after service upon it or its clerk of the appropriate process, whether certiorari or habeas corpus cum causa, by which the clerk is notified of the filing of the petition in the federal court." Oregon v. Wood, (D. C. Ore. 1920) 268 Fed. 975.

2. "Revenue Law" (p. 362)

It is said that "while it may be possible to say that the work of erecting a post office has relation to the revenue of the government, and that the Secretary of the Treasury, by whom the work was ordered, was an officer administering the revenue laws and acting under color of his office, (Ward v. Construction Co., 99 Fed. 605, 606, 39 C. C. A. 669), it does not seem to follow that an appropriation act for the purchase of lands for military purposes can be deemed to be a 'revenue law,' in the sense in which that term is used in section 33 of the Judicial Code." Underwood v. Dismukes, (D. C. R. I. 1920) 266 Fed. 559. The court further said:

"To accept the contention of the United States that the term 'revenue laws' includes all laws appropriating money for the expenditure of the revenue of the United States, and that the question of proprietary rights in lands purchased by the United States through an appropriation of moneys of the United States involves a question of revenue law, would result in a great expansion of the scope of section 33, and a great enlargement of the jurisdiction of the federal courts."

III. RIGHT TO REMOVE

4. Cases Removable (p. 383)

Officer enforcing National Prohibition Act.—Cases against officers appointed under the National Prohibition Act are removable from state to federal courts. In re Higgins, (D. C. N. H. 1921) 273 Fed. 832.

Federal officers who have been indicted for killing a man while enforcing the National Prohibition Act are entitled to the benefit of this provision as to removal. Oregon v. Wood, (D. C. Ore. 1920) 268 Fed. 975.

Although a marshal or deputy marshal is not an officer appointed under a revenue law, yet, when engaged officially in attempts to enforce the revenue law, he is an officer under that law, and entitled to the protection of section 643, and so are persons acting with him for the enforcement of the revenue law. Application of Shumpka, (N. D. N. Y. 1920) 268 Fed. 686.

5. Cases not Removable (p. 384)

The following cases were held not removable—Action to restrain naval officer from interfering with plaintiff's alleged rights to enter on and remove sand from lands purchased by the United States. Underwood v. Dismukes, (D. C. R. I. 1920) 266 Fed. 559.

An indictment for selling liquor.—Where a person who has been indicted for selling a liquid in violation of a state law an instrument issued by the Prohibition Commissioner to the manufacturer of the liquor approving of its sale "in good faith as a medicine" does not bring the case within the provisions of this section entitling the defendant to a trial of the indictment in the federal court, and he is not entitled to have it removed to such court. Application of Shumpka, (N. D. N. Y. 1920) 268 Fed. 686.

IV. PROCEDURE FOR REMOVAL

2. Petition for Removal (p. 385)

Requirements as to petition.—The petition should state facts sufficient to enable the court to decide whether the case is one within the provisions of the Act and it is not enough that it alleges in general terms that the petitioner intends to rely in his defense to the prosecution on the revenue laws of the United States. Oregon v. Wood, (D. C. Ore. 1920) 268 Fed. 975, holding the petition under consideration to be sufficient.

Signing of petition.—A petition in which it is stated that it is presented in behalf of the petitioners, naming them, and which is signed by the United States attorney is held to meet the requirement of the statute. Oregon v. Wood, (D. C. Ore. 1920) 268 Fed. 975.

Verification.—The provision as to verification by affidavit is complied with in the case of several petitioners by an affidavit signed by one of them. Oregon v. Wood, (D. C. Ore. 1920) 268 Fed. 975. The court said:

"The petition is verified by Wood alone. The statute merely requires that it be verified by affidavit. Presumably this means that it shall be verified by the petitioner. Where there are several petitioners, verification is usually made, in common practice, by one of them. Such a verification, I have no doubt, is within the purview of the statute, and is sufficient. While a valid petition, duly verified, is necessary to give jurisdiction to the Federal court on removal, the statute has prescribed no technical form of petition and verification to be observed, and common usage, in legal practice, is probably all that was intended."

5. Certiorari (p. 385)

In Oregon v. Wood, (D. C. Ore. 1920) 268 Fed. 975, it is said:

"The statute comprises capias or other similar form of proceeding by which a personal arrest is ordered. It is obvious that there are two classes of proceedings which dominate the form of the writ. One is when the suit is commenced by summons or like process, except capias, and the other is when commenced by capias or other similar form of proceeding. Certiorari is appropriate in one class, and habeas corpus cum causa in the other; this whether the petitioner is in custody or out on bail. If in custody, then the marshal must take him in his custody, and produce him here; but, if out on bail, the bail answers for his personal appearance in this court. Obviously, however, the writ should be the same in either event. While, by a technical consideration of the two writs, certiorari would be the more appropriate when the defendant is out on bail, it is sufficient that the statute has not so regarded it, but has prescribed the writ of habeas corpus cum causa."

I. DISMISSAL OF SUIT

1. Suit or Controversy not Properly within Federal Jurisdiction

a. In General (p. 400)

Equity rules.—"In the application of equity rule 29 (198 Fed. xxvi, 115 C. C. A. xxvi), abolishing pleas and demurrers, and providing that other defenses in point of law arising on the face of the bill, which previously should have been made by plea or demurrer, shall now be made by motion to dismiss or in answer, the law is settled in numerous adjudged cases that upon the consideration of the motion the court may in its discretion, when promotive of justice, refuse to decide a case on such motion, and that defense by answer may be required. Indeed, he rule goes to the extent that, unless the motion clearly discloses that on the allegations of the bill, which are taken as true, it must be dismissed upon final hearing, the preliminary motion to dismiss must be denied." O'Keefe v. New Orleans, (E. D. La. 1921) 273 Fed. 560.

4. Procedure for Dismissal

a. In General (p. 403)

Quashing service of summons.—In a case properly removed the defendant has the right to quash the service of the summons, if at the time the service was effected defendant was not subject to personal process within the state where the service was made. Centaur Motor Co. v. Eccleston, (W. D. N. Y. 1920) 264 Fed. 852.

II. GROUNDS FOR REMAND

1. Want of Jurisdiction in General (p. 407)

Where the real question at issue is largely one of fact and the court is unable clearly to conclude that the matter involved exceeds the sum of $3,000, it will remand the case to the state court. Farmers', etc., Bank v. Federal Reserve Bank, (W. D. N. C. 1921) 274 Fed. 235.

"It is undoubtedly the law that the federal courts have a right to determine after removal whether jurisdiction was originally acquired by the state court, and to say what constituted a lawful subjection to the jurisdiction of the state tribunal." Centaur Motor Co. v. Eccleston, (W. D. N. Y. 1920) 264 Fed. 852.

If "jurisdiction over the person of the defendant has once been acquired in the state court, within the meaning of the federal decisions, such jurisdiction will remain in the state court if the cause has been improperly removed, or will be transferred to the federal court if the removal was valid." Centaur Motor Co. v. Eccleston, (W. D. N. Y. 1920) 264 Fed. 852.

In determining whether the relief sought is of a nature that a federal district court is competent to administer the federal court will, on a motion to remand to the state court, look to the face of the complaint and, on the facts as there set up, decide what relief should be granted. It cannot be expected to anticipate evidence or amendments which will enlarge the scope of the prayer for general relief. Kellogg v. Schauble, (S. D. Miss. 1921) 273 Fed. 1012.

3. State Court without Jurisdiction of Subject Matter (p. 411)

To the same effect as the original annotation, see Earles v. Germain Co., (S. D. Ala. 1920) 265 Fed. 718.

5. Where Jurisdiction is Doubtful (p. 411)

To the same effect as the second paragraph of the original annotation, see Demer v. Pacific Steamship Co., (W. D. Wash. 1921) 273 Fed. 567.

III. WAIVER OR AMENDMENT OF DEFECTS

1. Waiver of Objection—Estoppel to Object (p. 414)

Where all of the defendants united in a petition to remove the case, on the ground that it arose under the laws of the United States, and the plaintiff asked for a remand, setting up that no federal question in the jurisdictional sense was involved and no objection was made that some of the defendants had been sued in a district in which they did not reside, it was held that an objection on that ground was waived. Burke v. Monumental Division, etc., (D. C. Md. 1919) 273 Fed. 707.

3. Amendment of Petition for Removal

a. In General (p. 417)

To the same effect as the original annotation, see Amerson v. Western Union Tel. Co., (W. D. Ky. 1920) 265 Fed. 909.

The petition for removal may, like any other process or proceeding, be amended whenever consonant with justice. Hall v. Payne, (D. C. Mont. 1921) 274 Fed. 237.

V. PROCEDURE FOR REMAND

1. *Remand on Court's Own Motion*a. For Want of Jurisdiction (p. 429)

To the same effect as fourth paragraph of original annotation, see Morrell v. Lalonde, (D. C. R. I. 1921) 271 Fed. 19.

Vol. V, p. 446, Jud. Code, sec. 38.

[First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 150.]

II. VALIDITY OF SERVICE OF PROCESS IN STATE COURT

1. *Effect of Petition for Removal as Appearance*b. Other Cases (p. 456)

To the same effect as the original annotation, see Hunt v. Pearce, (E. D. Okla. 1921) 27 Fed. 498.

Vol. V, p. 468, Jud. Code, sec. 41.

[First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 151.]

New York Quarantine Station.—A person accused of a crime committed on the high seas who was brought into the United States at the port of New York on a vessel which first stopped at the quarantine station, which is in the Eastern District, but who was not arrested until the vessel reached New York city which is in the Southern District, was both "found" and first brought into the Southern District within the meaning of this section. Pederson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 187.

Vol. V, p. 470, Jud. Code, sec. 42.

II. PARTICULAR OFFENSES (p. 471)

Conspiracy.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Grayson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 553.

Vol. V, p. 478, Jud. Code, sec. 48.

[First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 153.]

II. Jurisdiction.

1. *Generally.*2. Both infringement and place of business necessary.

IV. Service.

II. JURISDICTION

1. Generally (p. 480)

Suit for contributory infringement of patent.—One who manufactures an element of an infringing device with the intent that it shall be united with the other elements of such device, and completed by another person, is guilty of contributory infringement, and is liable for infringement in a suit instituted in the jurisdiction where he committed his part of the infringement and had a regular and established place of business. Dental Co. v. S. S. White Dental Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 524.

2. Both Infringement and Place of Business Necessary (p. 481)

Generally.—Where the defendant is not an inhabitant of the district he must have a regular place of business within the district and have committed at least one act of infringement in the district. I. T. S. Rubber Co. v. Essex Rubber Co., (D. C. Mass. 1920) 270 Fed. 593.

IV. SERVICE (p. 482)

Service on buyer.—Where the evidence shows that the only relation between the parties is that of buyer and seller, service on the buyer is of no effect. Rosenbluth v. Hudson Motor Car Co., (E. D. Pa. 1920) 264 Fed. 353.

Service on agents.—A corporation purchasing automobiles outright from the corporation which manufactures them and having the exclusive right to sell them in a certain territory, is not the agent of the manufacturing corporation within the meaning of this section and service of process upon it in a patent infringement suit will be set aside. Rosenbluth v. Hudson Motor Car Co., (E. D. Pa. 1920) 265 Fed. 680.

Vol. V, p. 482, Jud. Code, sec. 50.

I. Scope.

IV. Parties.

I. SCOPE (p. 482)

This section deals only with judgments and decrees. Friede v. Azovsko Donskoi Kommercheske Bank, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 266 Fed. 131.

IV. PARTIES (p. 483)

An indispensable party.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Jennings v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 399.

Vol. V, p. 486, Jud. Code, sec. 51.

[First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 153.]

IV. Jurisdiction.

5. *Where parties are joined.*c. Defendants.

VI. Waiver.

1. *Generally.*2. *Appearance and pleading to the merits.*b. General appearance.

IV. JURISDICTION

5. *Where Parties Are Joined*c. Defendants (p. 496)

Generally.—The joinder of persons who are residents of the district with one who is not does not give the court jurisdiction of the nonresident. Consolidated Textile Corp. v. Dickey, (N. D. Ga. 1920) 266 Fed. 587.

VI. WAIVER

1. Generally (p. 511)

An objection to the jurisdiction in equity of a federal court on the ground that there is an adequate remedy at law may be waived. American Surety Co. v. American Mills Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 67.

2. *Appearance and Pleading to the Merits*b. General Appearance (p. 514)

When a waiver.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Mankin v. Bartley, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 466.

Vol. V, p. 518, Jud. Code, sec. 52.

[First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 153.]

Applicability.—This section has been held to be applicable in the case of suits for infringement of letters patent. Zell v. Erie Bronze Co., (E. D. Pa. 1921) 273 Fed. 833.

Vol. V, p. 520, Jud. Code, sec. 53.

[First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 154.]

I. Purpose and scope.

II. Jurisdiction.

I. PURPOSE AND SCOPE (p. 521)

The object in the mind of Congress in enacting the removal provision of this section was for the benefit and convenience of litigants by avoiding removal to a remote division, when a nearer was at hand. Gopcevic v. California Packing Corp., (N. D. Cal. 1921) 272 Fed. 994.

II. JURISDICTION (p. 521)

Making objection to jurisdiction.—If a defendant in a timely manner interposes proper objection to being sued in a wrong district, or in a case of removal promptly and timely moves to remand the cause for want of jurisdiction, such action will prevent the jurisdiction of the court from attaching, and the cause must be dismissed or a remand granted, as the case may be. Gopcevic v. California Packing Corp., (N. D. Cal. 1921) 272 Fed. 994.

Vol. V, p. 523, Jud. Code, sec. 54.

Residence in the same state is essential.—Kansas Gas, etc., Co. v. Wichita Natural Gas Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 614.

Vol. V, p. 523, Jud. Code, sec. 55.

[First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 155.]

Property of fixed character.—This section only applies if the action involves property of a fixed character, which lies partly in one district and partly in another district within the same state, in which case the action may be maintained in either district where some of the property is situated. Kansas Gas, etc., Co. v. Wichita Natural Gas Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 614.

Vol. V, p. 525, Jud. Code, sec. 57.

[First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 155.]

- I. Construction and application generally.
- II. Applicability to particular matters, suits and proceedings.

I. CONSTRUCTION AND APPLICATION GENERALLY (p. 525)

Construction generally.—This section necessarily implies that, even though jurisdiction be founded only on the fact that the suit is between citizens of different states, yet if the object of the suit brings it within the class described in this section the court of the district in which the suit is brought may entertain it, notwithstanding none of the parties thereto reside in such district. Hodgman v. Atlantic Refining Co., (D. C. Del. 1921) 274 Fed. 104.

II. APPLICABILITY TO PARTICULAR MATTERS, SUITS AND PROCEEDINGS (p. 529)

Corporate matters.—A bill praying that a voting trust agreement be declared void and surrendered for cancellation and that the members of such agreement be enjoined from performing certain acts thereunder is not a suit to remove a cloud on title under the provisions of this section permitting a joinder of a nonresident. Consolidated Textile Corp. v. Dickey, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 269 Fed. 942.

Shares of stock in a corporation are personal property under the laws of Delaware, and the provisions of this section as to jurisdiction of absent defendants apply in a suit one of the objects of which is to enforce a claim of a Delaware corporation (made by certain of its shareholders) to the shares of its stock held by a Pennsylvania corporation, or to remove a cloud upon the former's title thereto. And the fact that additional relief is sought is immaterial. Hodgman v. Atlantic Refining Co., (D. C. Del. 1921) 274 Fed. 104.

A suit by a corporation to enjoin a breach of contract by another corporation is not one affecting any right, title or interest to any real or personal property in the district. Kansas Gas, etc., Co. v. Wichita Natural Gas Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 614.

Setting aside or cancelling instruments.—A suit to cancel a written instrument creating a pooling agreement for the voting of corporate stock is not a suit "to remove any incumbrance or lien or cloud upon the title to real or personal property." Consolidated Textile Corp. v. Dickey, (N. D. Ga. 1920) 266 Fed. 587,

The court said: "The suggestion that under section 57 jurisdiction may be exercised over him by treating this suit as one 'to remove any incumbrance or lien or cloud upon the title to real or personal property within the district,' is untenable. The judgment in such a case is, by the language of the section, to—'affect only the property which shall have been the subject of the suit and under the jurisdiction of the court therein, within such district.'

"It would be difficult to fix upon any property as the subject of the suit within the district. The title to none is in dispute. None is sought to be recovered. There is no incumbrance or lien or cloud upon the title to any property of the plaintiff in any ordinary acceptance of the term. While it is a suit to cancel a written instrument, that instrument does not purport to convey or affect the title of plaintiff to the shares it owns. The true cause of complaint is the conduct of the defendants in reference to their own property, which is claimed unlawfully and injuriously to affect the property of plaintiff company, a violation of the maxim 'Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas.' The unlawful use of a proxy to vote stock to the injury of another stockholder was treated as a tort in Witham v. Cohen, 100 Ga. 670, 28 S. E. 505, and such seems to be its true legal character. So concluding, the question is decided by Ladew v. Tennessee Copper Co., 218 U. S. 357, 31 Sup. Ct. 81, 54 L. ed. 1069, where it is held that a bill to abate and enjoin a nuisance against inhabitants of the district and one who was an inhabitant of another state could not be maintained as to the latter under the provisions now found in section 57. This court, therefore, has no jurisdiction over Jefferson, and the suit must be dismissed as to him."

Construction.—This section and section 66 have no constricted meaning, but are to be interpreted broadly to effectuate the operation of business carried on by receivers appointed by the federal courts with as much regard for the safety and protection and general observance of the rights of others both in contract and in tort as would be required of the owners of the property of which as receivers they have possession. Sullivan v. Hustis, (Mass. 1921) 130 N. E. 247.

Duty of receiver to comply with state law.

—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Sullivan v. Hustis, (Mass. 1921) 130 N. E. 247.

Priorities.—A receiver appointed by a federal court takes property subject to all liens, priorities, or privileges existing or accruing under the laws of the state. And where the common-law prerogative right of a state to priority over unsecured creditors in payment of all the debts due the state out of the assets of the debtor cannot be enforced by levy and seizure because of the appointment of a receiver by a federal court within the state, an application to that court for payment of the debt due is the appropriate remedy. Marshall v. New York, (1920) 254 U. S. 380, 41 S. Ct. 143, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 727.

I. INTRODUCTORY (p. 609)

The jurisdiction of the Circuit Courts of Appeals is purely appellate and statutory. Grammer v. Fenton, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 943.

II. "APPELLATE JURISDICTION TO REVIEW BY APPEAL OR WRIT OF ERROR" (p. 609)

In general.—The Circuit Court of Appeals must take notice of the fact where it has no jurisdiction. Republic Iron, etc., Co. v. Youngstown Sheet, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 386.

The Circuit Court of Appeals "has power to affirm, modify, or reverse any judgment lawfully brought before it for review, or to direct such judgment to be rendered, or further proceedings to be had, as the justice of the case may require. . . . Whatever may be the rule under the common law, where unmodified by statute, as to the power of a court to grant a new trial in part, or as to a severable sum involved in the suit, we think there is no doubt as to the power of this court to set aside only a part of a judgment, where embracing different items, some of which are not in question." Thorpe v. National City Bank, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 200.

Although nothing is said in the briefs or oral arguments of counsel concerning the jurisdiction of the court to hear the appeal yet since the court must have jurisdiction to hear an appeal or can do nothing except to dismiss the same, it becomes the duty of the court to consider the question of jurisdiction on its own motion. Cleveland Cliffs Iron Co. v. Kinney, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 888.

Mandamus in aid of appellate jurisdiction.—An order of a district judge vacating a former order dismissing a suit for the infringement of a patent in no way affects the appellate jurisdiction of the Circuit Court of Appeals over the cause as one arising under the patent laws. Such being the case the appellate court has neither the need nor the power to grant a writ of mandamus to preserve its appellate jurisdiction by compelling the district judge to vacate his order reinstating the suit. Raritan Copper Works v. Elliott, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 284.

III. FINAL DECISIONS

1. Necessity (p. 611)

To the same effect as the original annotation, see Gas, etc., Securities Co. v. Manhattan, etc., Traction Corp., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 625; U. S. v. Maresca, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 266 Fed. 713; Iglesias v. Banco Territorial, etc., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 479.

Interlocutory orders are not appealable. O'Brien v. Lashar, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 215; U. S. v. Marquette, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 214.

2. Definition and Nature (p. 611)

Generally.—A final decree is not necessarily the last order in the case, as orders sometimes follow merely for the purpose of carrying out or executing the matters which the decree has determined; but when it finally fixes the rights of the parties it is final and may be reviewed. Gas, etc., Securities Co. v. Manhattan, etc., Traction Corp., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 625.

10. Injunction (p. 614)

An order granting a permanent injunction against a city and all of its public officials from passing a proposed resolution forfeiting or affecting a franchise "pending further order in the action" is a final order and appealable. Gas, etc., Securities Co. v. Man- hattan, etc., Traction Corp., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 625. The court said:

"The order enjoined the persons specified therein 'from moving, considering, voting on, amending, adopting, or in any manner passing' the resolution heretofore referred to. The fact that the order was without prejudice to any further application to the court for the enforcement of any of the rights of the city certainly cannot have the effect of converting what is otherwise a final order into an interlocutory one. The injunction meant the end of the matter so far as the particular judge who issued it was concerned, except that it did not include a change of mind on his part. The order goes just as far and lasts just as long as the District Court is possessed of any authority to issue it, and is therefore 'final,' and therefore appealable within the six months' period."

A denial by the trial court of a petition in equity to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment for the reason that it had been satisfied has been held to be a final judgment and appealable. Barnett v. Conklin, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 177. The court said:

"The proceeding which resulted in the order appealed from was in no true sense simply a motion to quash an execution involving the exercise of discretion. The proceeding was equivalent and took the place of a proceeding in equity to enjoin the enforcement of the judgment for the reason that it had been satisfied. The prayer of the petition did ask that the execution then outstanding be quashed; but that was merely incidental to the general relief, which was that the enforcement of the judgment should be enjoined. It was not a matter involving the discretion of the trial court, but a matter in regard to which appellant was entitled to the judgment of the court upon the facts pleaded. The denial of the petition by the trial court finally determined, so far as that court was concerned, the rights of appellant, which were substantial rights, not involving the mere regularity of the execution."

11. Intervention and Interpleader (p. 615)

An order of interpleader which aligns the parties, prescribes the method of procedure, and finally denies to one of the parties the right to assert a contract obligation against another is final within the meaning of the statute and appealable. Taiwan Bank v. Gorgas-Pierrie Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 660.

12. Judicial Sales (p. 615)

To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original annotation, see Felker v. Southern Trust Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 798.

15. Patents (p. 616)

Where in a patent infringement suit involving two patents the court below found that one was valid and infringed and expressed no opinion as to the other and the defendant on appeal insisted that the invalidity of the second patent clearly appeared, and that the bill should have been dismissed as to that patent the court said:

"No such question is open on this appeal. No final decree has been made in that case, and, as to this second patent, the interlocutory decree neither granted nor refused an injunction. Although the objection is not made by either party, we must take notice that we have no jurisdiction of this question." Republic Iron, etc., Co. v. Youngstown Sheet, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 386.

18. Miscellaneous (p. 616)

An order removing defendants to another district is interlocutory and not appealable. Murray v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 522.

Action against several defendants.—Where on the allegations of a bill against several defendants, each defendant is under a separate liability and a separate action at law might have been brought against each, a decree in favor of part of them is a final decree from which an appeal will lie. Curtis v. Connly, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 650.

Judgment for specific sums in action for breach of covenant.—A judgment for specific sums in an action for the alleged breach of a covenant for quiet enjoyment contained in a lease is final notwithstanding the fact that two of these sums were represented by specifically described unsatisfied judgments, with a provision in the decree of the Supreme Court of the territory to the effect that in the event the defendants to the action should file in the lower court "a full release of the plaintiff upon the two last-named unsatisfied judgments," the respective amounts thereof should not be included in the judgment directed, in no respect affected the finality of the latter—the provision regarding the filing of the release calling for and admitting of the exercise of no judgment, or even discretion, and manifestly for no exercise of any judicial function. De Fries v. Scott, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 268 Fed. 952.

Order to return property unlawfully seized.—An order directing the return of liquor which had been unlawfully seized is not appealable where the court below did not assume jurisdiction for the purpose of trying title or right of possession, but merely to prevent the use of the property wrongfully seized as evidence upon the trial of the criminal charge. U. S. v. Marquette, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 214.

Dismissal of bill as to one of items.—

Where in the prayer of the bill it asks that the defendant be enjoined from using certain trade-marks and required to render a full and complete account of all profits derived from the use thereof and of profits derived from unfair trade and competition in connection with such use, and in connection with the use of labels, wrappers, etc., and account for and pay over to the plaintiff all of the damage caused by the infringement complained of and by said unfair trade, the different trade-marks set out as grounds of complaint in the bill are but items entering into the accounting which the plaintiff seeks, and a decree disposing of one of these items is not a final disposition of the controversy between the parties in the sense Grobowski v. John Chmiell Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1919) 264 Fed. 325.

IV. "DISTRICT COURTS," ETC., INCLUDING THOSE OF HAWAII AND PORTO RICO (p. 618)

Decision of Hawaiian Supreme Court.—Where on appeal to the Supreme Court of Hawaii a decree was entered reciting that "pursuant to the opinion" of that court, the decree appealed from was reversed and the cause remanded to the circuit judge "for such further action compatible to the decision as may be necessary" the decree of the Supreme Court was held not to be a final one from which an appeal would lie to the Circuit Court of Appeals. Rumsey v. New York L. Ins. Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 554.

A decree of the Supreme Court of Hawaii directing that a decree appealed from be vacated and set aside, that a permanent injunction be dissolved and that the lower court be instructed to dismiss the complainant's bill is final and appealable to the Circuit Court of Appeals. Hawaiian Pineapple Co. v. Saito, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 749.

A judgment of the Supreme Court of Porto Rico dismissing a suit for want of capacity in the plaintiffs to prosecute it is a final judgment from which an appeal will lie to the Circuit Court of Appeals. Franceschi v. Mercado, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 954.

Jurisdiction of District Court of Porto Rico.—In the case of a suit in equity in the District Court of the United States for the District of Porto Rico by a citizen of Spain domiciled in Porto Rico against a defendant, also resident in Porto Rico, it is said that the Circuit Court of Appeals must on its own motion inquire as to the jurisdiction. Diez v. Green, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 890.

No supervisory jurisdiction in Supreme Court.—The transfer to the appropriate Circuit Court of Appeals of a part of the then existing appellate jurisdiction of the Federal Supreme Court over the United States District Court for Porto Rico, which is made by the Act of January 28, 1915, does not warrant the inference that the Federal Supreme Court may, by virtue of its general jurisdiction over the circuit courts of appeals, review a final decision of such a court, properly appealed to that court from the Porto Rico court. El Banco Popular, etc. v. Wilcox, (1921) 255 U. S. 72, 41 S. Ct. 312, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, dismissing appeal to review (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1918) 255 Fed. 442, 166 C. C. A. 518.

V. CASES REVIEWABLE

1. In General (p. 618)

"On every writ of error or appeal the first and fundamental question is that of jurisdiction, first of this court, and then of the court from which the record comes. This question the court is bound to ask and answer for itself, even when not otherwise suggested, and without respect to the relation of the parties to it." Robertson v. Jordan River Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 269 Fed. 606.

Where the jurisdiction of the district the case was disposed of by a decision of that court was put in issue by the defendant and issue in favor of the defendant, it is held that the action of the court is not subject to be reviewed by the Circuit Court of Appeals. Slayton v. Jourdanton, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 965.

Where a suit is dismissed for want of jurisdiction and the plaintiff in error insists that defendant in error by first pleading to the merits waived its plea to the jurisdiction another question besides jurisdiction is involved and the writ of error is rightly in the Circuit Court of Appeals. Drake v. Tennessee, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 248.

2. ADMIRALTY (p. 618)

Generally.—An appeal does not lie to a federal Circuit Court of Appeals from a decree of a district court in which the jurisdiction of that court as a court of admiralty was in issue, and was decided in favor of the defendant. The Carlo Poma, (1921) 255 U. S. 219, 41 S. Ct. 309, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, [vacating decree in (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 369, 170 C. C. A. 345] applying the rule in a case where a vessel libelled in admiralty was asserted to be immune from seizure because it was the property of a foreign government.

Exclusion of evidence not ground for reversal.—The Circuit Court of Appeals will not reverse a decree because of error in excluding competent testimony in an admiralty case, for that would presuppose that the testimony offered would have actually proved the point sought to the satisfaction of the court. In such a case if counsel felt aggrieved by the exclusion of this testimony, they could have moved before the Circuit Court of Appeals to take such testimony, for in an admiralty suit on appeal, there is a trial de novo. Moran Towing, etc., Co. v. Cranford Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 799.

4. Contempt Cases (p. 619)

An order of commitment for contempt is not appealable where it is merely incidental to a prior order adjudging the person to be in contempt, relief if any being by a review of the prior order. Pennsylvania Cement Co. v. Bradley Contracting Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 923.

5. Criminal Cases (p. 619)

In general.—The general rule is that, if the defendant, after denial of his motion to direct a verdict at the close of the government's testimony, introduces testimony in his own behalf, he thereby waives his motion, and it is his duty to again renew his motion after all the evidence is closed. But, notwithstanding this rule, it has been held that, where a plain error has been committed in the trial of a criminal case, it will be considered by the court, although a motion for a directed verdict was never made. Ayala v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 296.

Scope of review.—The review that is allowed in criminal cases is limited to questions of law arising at the trial, such as sufficiency of pleadings, admissibility of evidence, and instructions to the jurors. It is also well established that the question whether every material allegation of a pleading is supported by evidence may, by proper motions, rulings, and exceptions, be made a question of law arising at the trial. Applebaum v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 43.

9. Patent Cases (p. 622)

A petition to the circuit court of appeals by which defendant in a patent suit seeks, after that court has affirmed a decree below, upholding the patent and directing an accounting, to obtain the benefit of a decree in another circuit as res judicata, should be treated by the circuit court of appeals as an application for leave to file in the district court a petition in the nature of a bill of review, invoking the consideration of the effect of such decree. National Brake, etc., Co. v. Christensen, (1921) 254 U. S. 425, 41 S. Ct. 154, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 880, 169 C. C. A. 600.

VI. CASES WHICH "MAY BE TAKEN DIRECT TO THE SUPREME COURT" (p. 622)

In general.—A direct writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to a district court, would not lie in a suit brought conformably to the Lever Act of August 10, 1917, § 10, (see 1918 Supp. p. 135) by a person dissatisfied with the President's award of compensation for war supplies requisitioned by him under that section. U. S. v. Pitsch, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 569, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said:

"The preliminary question arises whether this court has jurisdiction on direct writ of error. The answer to be given to it depends upon the nature of the jurisdiction conferred upon the district court by § 10 of the Lever Act. If the jurisdiction is to be exercised in the manner provided by § 24, Par. 20, of the Judicial Code, which confers upon the district court jurisdiction concurrent with the court of claims, a direct writ of error lies to this court. J. Homer Fritch v. United States, 248 U. S. 458, 63 L. ed. 359, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 158. If, however, the jurisdiction is the ordinary jurisdiction of the district court, the writ of error should have gone, in the first instance, to the circuit court of appeals under § 128 of the Judicial Code." It was held that the language of this section showed that the jurisdiction granted is the ordinary jurisdiction.

Review of a question of jurisdiction.—Where the question is as to the jurisdiction of the district court as a federal court it should go by writ of error to the Supreme Court. The Circuit Court of Appeals has no jurisdiction. Perrett v. Clara Kimball Young Film Corp., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 613.

The Circuit Court of Appeals has no jurisdiction to review a decree of the district court dismissing a bill for want of jurisdiction, as under section 238 the question of jurisdiction of the district must be certified by that court to the Supreme Court. Cleveland Cliffs Iron Co. v. Kinney, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 888.

If the jurisdiction of the district court as a federal court is the sole question involved, an appeal lies only to the Supreme Court under the very terms of section 238 of the Judicial Code. However, where another question than that of jurisdiction arises, although the question of jurisdiction is also presented, an appeal is properly taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals. Consolidated Textile Corp. v. Dickey, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 269 Fed. 942.

Where the dismissal of a petition in the state court was not based solely on plaintiff's refusal to acknowledge the jurisdiction of the court but was also based on a consideration of the merits on testimony taken by the court after the plaintiff's refusal to proceed, the Circuit Court of Appeals has jurisdiction of an appeal from the district court as the final decree does not involve only a question of jurisdiction. Ohio v. Swift, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 141.

Whether a person is an indispensable party is a question of general jurisdiction, applicable alike to state and federal courts and is reviewable by the Circuit Court of Appeals. Consolidated Textile Corp. v. Dickey, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 269 Fed. 942.

Review of order dismissing habeas corpus.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Grammer v. Fenton, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 943.

V. INJUNCTION

4. "Refusing, Dissolving or Refusing to Dissolve" (p. 634)

Where the action of the court below in refusing to grant an injunction is dependent on controverted facts it is said that it is an extreme case that justifies departure from the rule "that the discretion of the primary court is not to be interfered with." National Picture Theatres v. Foundation Film Corp., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 208.

VI. APPOINTING RECEIVER (p. 635)

An order appointing a receiver in a suit by a dissatisfied stockholder against the corporate officers and directors, seeking accounting and satisfaction for past wrongdoing as such and for the removal of such officers and directors is appealable. Adler v. Seaman, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 828.

IX. TIME OF TAKING APPEAL (p. 637)

Dismissal of bill as to one of items.—Where in the prayer of the bill it asks that the defendant be enjoined from using the trade-marks and required to render a full and complete account of all profits derived from the use thereof and of profits derived from unfair trade and competition in connection with such use, and in connection with the use of labels, wrappers, etc., and account for and pay over to the plaintiff all of the damage caused by the infringement complained of and by said unfair trade, the different trademarks set out as grounds of complaint in the bill are but items entering into the accounting which the plaintiff seeks and a decree disposing of one of these items is not a final disposition of the controversy, and an appeal therefrom must be taken within the time prescribed in this section. Groblewski v. John Chmiell Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1919) 264 Fed. 325.

X. STAY (p. 638)

It is said that a reading of the equity rules, the pertinent sections of the Judicial Code, and the decisions of the federal courts make it clear that the granting of a motion to continue an injunction in force pending an appeal rests in the sound discretion of the court. Corona Coal Co. v. Southern R. Co., (N. D. Ala. 1920) 266 Fed. 726.

6. Claims founded upon contract.
7. Claims sounding in tort.
8. War claims.

II. JURISDICTION

1. Scope (p. 651)

Concurrent jurisdiction of court of claims and district courts.—In every cause of which the Court of Claims has jurisdiction the District Courts have a like jurisdiction, limited only in respect to the sum involved or in controversy, and, of course, the amount of the judgment which can be rendered. Sochis v. U. S., (E. D. Pa. 1920) 266 Fed. 446.

6. Claims Founded upon Contract (p. 655)

Jurisdiction to review decision as to liquidated damages.—Where a contract contains a clause for liquidated damages for delays caused by the contractor and the right to finally determine the cause and extent of such delays is given to the chief engineer, there being no bad faith on the part of such officer, or error so gross as to necessarily imply bad faith, the court has no jurisdiction to review the decision of such officer, whether the United States did or did not suffer actual damages by reason of such delays. Pelton Water Wheel Co. v. U. S., (1919) 55 Ct. Cl. 31.

7. Claims Sounding in Tort (p. 657)

To the same effect as the original annotation, see Keokuk, etc., Bridge Co. v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 480.

Payments made by steamship company to federal officials under duress.—A claim against the United States which rests upon payments for maintenance and medical care of alien immigrants, alleged to have been made by a steamship company under duress because of wrongful and tortious acts of federal officials, without authority of law, in coercing the claimant to pay the sums demanded, is not justifiable in the court of claims under this section, being a claim sounding in tort, within the exception made by that section. U. S. v. Holland-American Line, (1920) 254 U. S. 148, 41 S. Ct. 74, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 522.

8. War Claims (p. 658)

Suits to recover for property taken for war purposes.—When in the different war measures enacted by Congress power was conferred to take possession of the property of individual citizens for public purposes, and the right to institute proceedings against the United States for compensation for the property taken was also given, Congress thereby gave its consent to such proceedings being instituted in those tribunals which Congress had already provided for the purpose, and had intrusted with power to determine the rights of the claimants and of the United States. This meant that proceedings might be instituted in the Court of Claims, and also that they might be instituted in any District Court of the United States, provided the sum involved did not exceed the limitation above named. Sochis v. U. S., (E. D. Pa. 1920) 266 Fed. 446.

Vol. V, p. 672, Jud. Code, sec. 159.

Necessity of proof of plaintiff's allegiance.—Where the loyalty of a plaintiff has been alleged in a petition as required by this section, and it comes to the knowledge of the court that there is doubt as to whether plaintiff has always borne true allegiance to the government of the United States, the court will not hear the case upon its merits until the question of plaintiff's loyalty has been settled. Vogelstein v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 490.

Vol. V, p. 673, Jud. Code, sec. 162.

Ownership at time of seizure.—One who purchased in 1865 cotton which had previously been sold to the Confederate States under a sale treated by the seller as rescinded before delivery, and who, after a seizure of the cotton by the federal Treasury agents, agreed with her vendor that the sale should be rescinded because of his prior transactions in connection with the cotton, was not the owner at the time of the seizure, within the meaning of this section. Mangan v. U. S., (1921) 254 U. S. 494, 41 S. Ct. 157, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 54 Ct. Cl. 207.

Vol. V, p. 678, Jud. Code, sec. 175.

Allowance of motion for new trial as discretionary.—In Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 485, the court said regarding motions for new trials under this section: "Without going into an extended discussion of the relative rights of the parties under a motion for a new trial under section 175 of the Judicial Code we believe the allowance or refusal of such a motion rests in the sound discretion of the court, and in reaching its conclusion the court is entitled to consider the record presented in support thereof."

Nature of motion.—The motion contemplated by this section is largely analogous to a bill in the nature of a bill of review in equity to set aside a former decree, or a bill impeaching a decree for fraud. Electric Boat Co. v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 497.

Ground for new trial.—Where the record in a former trial between the same parties, upon which a motion for a new trial under this section is based, does not show that fraud, wrong, or injustice has been done the United States, the burden of proving which is upon the defendants, the court will not grant a new trial. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 485.

Newly discovered evidence.—To same effect as original annotation, see Electric Boat Co. v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 497, wherein it was held that where facts materially affecting the issues in a case were unknown to the Attorney General or his assistant in charge at the trial thereof, it is good ground for the allowance of a motion to take testimony as to such facts under the rules of the court allowing new trials for after-discovered evidence.

Correction of findings of fact.—Where there are facts in the record which would vitally alter the findings of fact and which have not been brought to the attention of the court either in oral argument or by requests for findings at the trial thereof, the court will of its motion, upon the discovery of such facts, make the proper correction of its findings of fact. Electric Boat Co. v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 497.

Pollution of waters of New York bay.—The state of New York can maintain an original suit in the federal Supreme Court to enjoin the state of New Jersey and its sewerage commissioners from discharging a large volume of sewage into the waters of upper New York bay, which, it is alleged, will cause such pollution of the waters of New York bay as to amount to a public nuisance which will result in grave injury to the health, property, and commercial welfare of the people of the state and city of New York. New York v. New Jersey, (1921)

250 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 492, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein it was further held that the federal government having properly intervened in the suit, it was within the authority of the Attorney General to agree that the United States should retire from the case upon terms stated in a stipulation on behalf of the state of New Jersey, which were plainly approved by the Secretary of War, who afterward embodied them in a construction permit issued to the sewerage commissioners.

IV. PROCEDURE (p. 716)

Restoring suit to docket for supplemental proof.—In North Dakota v. Minnesota, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 533 mem., 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, the original suit was restored to the docket to afford an opportunity for the taking of supplemental proof deemed necessary to an adequate consideration and disposition of the cause.

I. Prohibition.

4. Limitation on right to issue.

II. Mandamus.

1. Power to issue.

I. PROHIBITION

4. Limitation on Right to Issue (p. 719)

Generally.—A writ of prohibition to prevent a lower court from wrongfully assuming jurisdiction of a party, of a cause, or of some collateral matter arising therein, will ordinarily be granted to one who at the outset objected to the jurisdiction, has preserved his rights by appropriate procedure, and has no other remedy, but if the jurisdiction of the lower court is doubtful, or depends upon a finding of fact made upon evidence which is not in the record, or if the complaining party has an adequate remedy by appeal or otherwise, the writ will ordinarily be denied. Ex p. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1921) 255 U. S. 273, 41 S. Ct. 288, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

In admiralty cases a writ of prohibition goes as a matter of right only where the absence of jurisdiction is plain. Where the jurisdiction is debatable, the granting or refusal is discretionary. In re Hussein Lutfi Bey, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 609, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Prohibition or mandamus will not issue to prevent a federal district court from exercising further jurisdiction, and to compel it to undo what has been done, in a suit in admiralty against a British steamship privately owned, in which a mere suggestion, unsupported by proof, was presented on behalf of the British Embassy by private counsel appearing as amici curiae, that the vessel libeled was in the public service and under the control of the British government as an admiralty transport, where the suit is still in the interlocutory stage, and the status of the vessel is at best doubtful and uncertain, both as matter of fact and in point of law. Ex p. Muir, (1921) 254 U. S. 522, 41 S. Ct. 185, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said:

"The power of this court, under § 234 of the Judicial Code, to issue writs of prohibition to the district courts, when proceeding as courts of admiralty, to prevent an unlawful assumption or exercise of jurisdiction, is not debatable. But this power, like others, is to be exerted in accordance with principles which are well settled. In some instances, as where the absence of jurisdiction is plain, the writ goes as a matter of right. Ex parte Phenix Ins. Co., 118 U. S., 610, 626, 30 L. ed. 274, 280, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 215; Ex parte Indiana Transp. Co., 244 U. S. 456, 61 L. ed. 1253, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 717. In others, as where the existence or absence of jurisdiction is in doubt, the granting or refusal of the writ is discretionary. Re Cooper, 143 U. S. 472, 485, 36 L. ed. 232, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 453; Re New York & P. R. S. S. Co., 155 U. S. 523, 531, 39 L. ed. 246, 249, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 183; Re Alix, 166 U. S. 136, 41 L. ed. 948, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 522. And see Ex parte Gordon, 104 U. S. 515, 518, 519, 26 L. ed. 814, 815; The Charkieh, L. R. 8 Q. B. 197, 42 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 75, 28 L. T. N. S. 190, 21 Week. Rep. 437.

"Here the most that can be said against the District Court's jurisdiction is that it is in doubt; and in other respects the situation is such that we deem it a proper exercise of discretion to refuse the writ. Nothing need be added to show that the request for a writ of mandamus is on no better footing. Re Morrison, 147 U. S. 14, 26, 37 L. ed. 60, 65, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 246; Re Oklahoma, 220 U. S. 191, 209, 55 L. ed. 431, 435, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426; Ex parte Roe, 234 U. S. 70, 58 L. ed. 1217, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 722."

To prevent assuming jurisdiction of non-resident corporation.—Neither prohibition nor mandamus will be granted by the federal Supreme Court to prevent a district court from assuming jurisdiction of the person of a non-resident corporation against which a personal liability is asserted in a cross bill filed in a suit for the appointment of a receiver of another corporation in default on its bonds, after the nonresident corporation appeared before a special master for the purpose of protecting its interest in such bonds, where the most that can be said against the district court's jurisdiction is that it is in doubt, the return reciting that the order which declared that such nonresident corporation became a party rests upon evidence which has not been embodied in the record, and the district court obviously having jurisdiction to determine in the first instance whether such corporation had entered a general appearance, and to determine whether the relief sought in the cross bill was in its nature germane to the proceedings theretofore instituted in the suit, so that the rights asserted in the cross bill could be properly litigated in that suit, and to determine whether the fact that such earlier proceeding had been instituted on behalf of such corporation, and that it had actively participated in the conduct thereof, and to that end had entered a general appearance, made it subject to further proceedings thereon by way of cross bill as fully as if the earlier action had been taken in its name as well as on its behalf. Ex p. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1921) 255 U. S. 273, 41 S. Ct. 288, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Objection to jurisdiction one that could have been raised by appeal.—The fact that the objection to the jurisdiction of the court below might be raised by appeal from the final decree is not, in all cases, a valid objection to the issuance of a writ of prohibition by the federal Supreme Court at the outset, where a court of admiralty assumes to take cognizance of matters over which it has no lawful jurisdiction. Matter of New York, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 588, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

II. MANDAMUS

1. Power to Issue (p. 721)

Suits in admiralty.—Mandamus will not issue to prevent a federal District Court from exercising further jurisdiction, and to compel it to undo what has been done in a suit in admiralty in which the question of the jurisdiction of that court is an open one and of uncertain solution. In re Hussein Lutfi Bey, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 609, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

To prevent exercise of doubtful jurisdiction.—Neither prohibition nor mandamus will be granted by the federal Supreme Court to prevent a district court from assuming jurisdiction of the person of a nonresident corporation against which a personal liability is asserted in a cross bill filed in a suit for the appointment of a receiver of another corporation in default on its bonds, after the nonresident corporation appeared before a special master for the purpose of protecting its interest in such bonds, where the most that can be said against the district court's jurisdiction is that it is in doubt, the return reciting that the order which declared that such nonresident corporation became a party rests upon evidence which has not been embodied in the record, and the district court obviously having jurisdiction to determine in the first instance whether such corporation had entered a general appearance, and to determine whether the relief sought in the cross bill was in its nature germane to the proceedings theretofore instituted in the suit, so that the rights asserted in the cross bill could be properly litigated in that suit, and to determine whether the fact that such earlier proceeding had been instituted on behalf of such corporation, and that it had actively participated in the conduct thereof, and to that end had entered a general appearance, made it subject to further proceedings thereon by way of cross bill as fully as if the earlier action had been taken in its name as well as on its behalf. *Ex p. There being no pretense that the highest state court adopted its view of a non-federal question in order to evade an issue under the Federal Constitution, and the case having been decided upon grounds that have no relation to any federal question, the federal Supreme Court accepts the decision of the state court, whether right or wrong. *Nickel v. VI. QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE BY SUPREME COURT

1. Federal Questions

b. Non-federal Question in Case in Addition to Federal Question (p. 733)

The general rule.—A decision of the highest court of a state which rests upon grounds independent of the only federal question involved that would serve as the basis of a writ of error from the Federal Supreme Court, and which appeared to the state court to preclude any recovery, is not reviewable in the Federal Supreme Court on writ of error, where such independent grounds are broad enough to sustain the judgment, and, if not well taken, are not without substantial support, and, while possibly involving federal questions, are not such as, since the act of September 6, 1916, (see 1918 Supp. p. 411) will support such a writ of error. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Washburn Lignite Coal Co., (1920) 254 U. S. 370, 41 S. Ct. 140, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, dismissing writ of error to review (1918) 40 N. D. 69, 168 N. W. 684, 12 A. L. R. 744.

c. Fictitious, Frivolous, or Moot Federal Question (p. 737)

A writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to a state court must be dismissed where the federal question involved had, when the writ was sued out, become too unsubstantial to support the federal jurisdiction of the federal Supreme Court. Miller v. Sacramento, etc., Drainage Dist., (1921) 256 U. S. 129, 41 S. Ct. 404, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, dismissing writ of error to review (1920) 182 Cal. 252, 187 Pac. 1041, and denying writ of certiorari.

The federal Supreme Court will dismiss a writ of error to a state court where the proposition upon which alone jurisdiction to entertain the writ can be based is so wanting in foundation as to be frivolous. Quong Ham Wah Co. v. Industrial Acc. Commission, (1921) 255 U. S. 445, 41 S. Ct. 373, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, dismissing writ of error to review (1920 Cal.) 192 Pac. 1021, 12 A. L. R. 1190.

2. Questions of Fact (p. 739)

In general.—The omission of the state courts below to pass upon certain evidence or make findings of fact thereon, doubtless because, under their respective views of the applicable law, the facts referred to were immaterial, does not relieve the federal Supreme Court, on writ of error, of the duty of examining the evidence for the purpose of determining what facts reasonably might be and presumably would be found therefrom by the state court if plaintiff in error's contention upon the question of federal law should be sustained, and the facts thereby shown to be material. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Richmond, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 619, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

3. Local and General Law (p. 742)

Rule stated.—To the same effect as the first paragraph of original annotation, see Hartford L. Ins. Co. v. Blincoe, (1921) 255 U. S. 129, 41 S. Ct. 276, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 279 Mo. 316, 214 S. W. 207, 12 A. L. R. 758.

Construction of local statute.—The construction of a state statute by the highest court of that state must be accepted by the federal Supreme Court when testing the validity of the statute under the Federal Constitution, on writ of error to the state court. Quong Ham Wah Co. v. Industrial Acc. Commission, (1921) 255 U. S. 445, 41 S. Ct. 373, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, dismissing writ of error to review (1920 Cal.) 192 Pac. 1021, 12 A. L. R. 1190.

Decree of foreclosure of railroad mortgage as binding state.—The ruling of the highest court of a state in a revisory proceeding, that the state is not bound by a decree of foreclosure of a railroad mortgage in a suit to which the state voluntarily makes itself a party, is upon a local question with which the federal Supreme Court has no concern. Bullock v. Florida, (1921) 254 U. S. 513, 41 S. Ct. 193, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming on other grounds (1919) 78 Fla. 321, 82 So. 866, 8 A. L. R. 232.

State long-and-short-haul statute.—The objection, in an action by a shipper against a carrier for overcharges, brought under a state long-and-short-haul statute, that the shipper did not pay freight charges, and therefore was not damaged, raises no substantial federal question, but a question of state law, which the federal Supreme Court has no jurisdiction to review on writ of error to a state court. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. McGrew Coal Co., (1921) 256 U. S. 134, 41 S. Ct. 404, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1920) 280 Mo. 466, 217 S. W. 984, 13 A. L. R. 283.

Taxation.—A state having power to impose an inheritance tax, the question whether or not a certain interest under the circumstances was correctly subjected to the tax is a purely state question, not reviewable by the federal Supreme Court on writ of error to a state court. Nickel v. Cole, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 467, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

4. State Procedure (p. 747)

Federal question first raised at rehearing.—A federal question first raised by a petition to the highest court of the state for a rehearing, which that court overruled without more, will not support a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court. Wall v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., (1921) 256 U. S. 125, 41 S. Ct. 402, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, dismissing writ of error to review (1919) 290 Ill. 227, 125 N. E. 20.

Costs for vexatious appeal.—The proper construction of a state statute providing for the recovery of damages and attorneys' fees for vexatious refusal to pay a loss under a policy of insurance is for the state courts to determine; and their conclusion is not open to review in the federal Supreme Court, although the latter court may consider the application of the statute to the circumstances of the case to be rather hard. Hartford L. Ins. Co. v. Blincoe, (1921) 255 U. S. 129, 41 S. Ct. 276, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —,

XVIII. PENDENCY OF CASE IN SUPREME COURT AS AFFECTING ACTION OF STATE COURT (p. 793)

Writ of error as not vacating judgment of state court.—The removal of a case by writ of error from a state court to the federal Supreme Court does not vacate the judgment of the state court. It continues in force until reversed. Duart v. Simmons, (1920) 236 Mass. 225, 128 N. E. 32.

XIX. REVIEW ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI (p. 794)

Recovery of additional freight charges.—Whether a carrier is entitled to recover from the consignee of an interstate shipment, as a matter of law, under the Interstate Commerce Acts, the difference between the freight rates charged and collected and the larger amount due under the applicable published rates, is a question which the federal Supreme Court can review by certiorari to a state court; not by writ of error. New York Cent., etc., R. Co. v. York, etc., Co., (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 509, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing in part and affirming in part (1918) 230 Mass. 206, 119 N. E. 855.

I. SCOPE OF STATUTE AND GENERAL MATTERS

3. Porto Rico (p. 797)

Supervisory jurisdiction.—The transfer to the appropriate circuit court of appeals of a part of the then-existing appellate jurisdiction of the federal Supreme Court over the United States district court for Porto Rico, which is made by the Act of January 28, 1915, does not warrant the inference that the federal Supreme Court may, by virtue of its general jurisdiction over the circuit courts of appeals, review a final decision of such a court properly appealed to that court from the Porto Rico court. El Banco Popular, etc. v. Wilcox, (1921) 255 U. S. 72, 41 S. Ct. 312, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, dismissing appeal to review (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1918) 255 Fed. 442, 166 C. C. A. 518.

5. Habeas Corpus (p. 798)

Habeas corpus is a civil proceeding reviewable by appeal and not by writ of error. In re Graves, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 181.

8. Frivolous Grounds and Moot Questions (p. 799)

Frivolous grounds.—A writ of error will not lie from the federal Supreme Court to a state court in a case in which the only question which the state court was called upon to decide, and did decide, is one which was no longer an open one in the federal Supreme Court, the ruling of the latter court being the basis of the state court's decision. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. C. L. Merrick Co., (1920) 254 U. S. 376, 41 S. Ct. 142, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, dismissing writ of error to review (1916) 35 N. Dak. 331, 160 N. W. 140.

Moot questions.—A judgment below in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover the possession of real property which, pending review in the federal Supreme Court on writ of error, he has sold, thus causing the case to become moot, will be reversed and the cause remanded for the dismissal of the complaint. Heitmuller v. Stokes, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 522, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) — (reversing (1920) 49 App. Cas. (D. C.) 391, 266 Fed. 1011), wherein it was further held that the costs incurred upon the writ of error should be paid by the plaintiff.

The federal Supreme Court, though unable to consider the merits of a case, owing to the moot character of the issues involved, is at liberty to make such order as is consonant to justice, in view of the conditions and circumstances of the case. Heitmuller v. Stokes, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 522, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1920) 49 App. Cas. (D. C.) 391, 266 Fed. 1011.

III. FINAL JUDGMENT (p. 800)

Holding process to be nugatory.—A decree of a federal district court in a suit in rem in admiralty against a ship, which decree, though not formally dismissing the libel, holds for naught the process under which the ship was arrested, declares that the ship is not subject to any such process, and directs her release, is final for the purpose of an appeal to the federal Supreme Court. The Pesaro, (1921) 255 U. S. 216, 41 S. Ct. 308, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

IV. "JURISDICTION OF COURT IN ISSUE"

1. In General (p. 801)

The question of the jurisdiction alone of the district court must under this section be certified by that court to the Supreme Court and the Circuit Court of Appeals has no jurisdiction. Cleveland Cliffs Iron Co. v. Kinney, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 888.

Foreign sovereignty asserted in bar of jurisdiction.—Whether or not a ship owned by a foreign government, and, at the time of arrest, in the possession of such government, is subject to the process of a federal district court, sitting as a court of admiralty, is a jurisdictional question in the sense of the provision of the Judicial Code, § 238, for an appeal or writ of error from a district court directly to the federal Supreme Court in any case in which the jurisdiction of the lower court may be in issue. The Pesaro, (1921) 255 U. S. 216, 41 S. Ct. 308, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —. See to the same effect The Carlo Poma (1921) 255 U. S. 219, 41 S. Ct. 309, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

2. Separate Appeals and Right of Election Between Supreme Court and Circuit Court of Appeals

a. General Consideration of Subject (p. 801)

If the jurisdiction of the District Court as a federal court is the sole question involved, an appeal lies only to the Supreme Court under the very terms of this section. However, where another question than that of jurisdiction arises, although the question of jurisdiction is also presented, an appeal is properly taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals. Consolidated Textile Corp. v. Dickey, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 269 Fed. 942.

b. Jurisdiction Sole Question in Issue (p. 805)

The Circuit Court of Appeals has no jurisdiction to review a judgment of the District Court convicting a person of murder where the only question presented is whether the lower court has jurisdiction of the crime charged and over the person of the defendant. Sol Louie v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 295.

Where the question is as to the jurisdiction of the District Court as a federal court it should go by writ of error to the Supreme Court. The Circuit Court of Appeals has no jurisdiction. Perrett v. Clara Kimball Young Film Corp., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 613.

5. When Jurisdiction Is in Issue (p. 806)

Objection that an indictment does not charge a crime against the United States.—The contention that a District Court was without jurisdiction of a criminal prosecution for the murder of one Indian by another within the limits of an Indian reservation because, before the time of the alleged crime, the accused had been declared competent, and the land on which the crime was alleged to have been committed had been allotted and deeded to him in fee simple, raises a question not of the jurisdiction of the court, but of the jurisdiction of the United States, and hence furnishes no basis for a direct writ of error from the Supreme Court to the District Court. Louie v. U. S., (1921) 254 U. S. 548, 41 S. Ct. 188, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said: "Since defendant's motions in the district court did not raise a question properly of the jurisdiction of the court, but went to the merits, there was no basis for a direct writ of error from this court. Pronovost v. United States, 232 U. S. 487, 58 L. ed. 696, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391. He properly sought review in the circuit court of appeals. In United States v. Celestine, 215 U. S. 278, 54 L. ed. 195, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 93, and United States v. Pelican, 232 U. S. 442, 58 L. ed. 676, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 396, where the defense was similar to that presented here, and in United States v. Sutton and United States v. Soldana, supra, the cases came to this court by direct writ of error to the district court under the Criminal Appeals Act of March 2, 1907, chap. 2564, 34 Stat. at L. 1246, 6 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 149. Hallowell v. United States, 221 U. S. 317, 55 L. ed. 750, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 587, where a similar question was involved, came here on certificate. In Clairmont v. United States, 225 U. S. 551, 554, 56 L. ed. 1201, 1202, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 787, it was inadvertently assumed without discussion that the question involved was one of the jurisdiction of the district court."

Proper service of process.—A decree of a federal District Court which set aside the attempted service by publication upon non-resident defendants and dismissed the bill upon consideration of the allegations of such bill, which, upon application of general principles, were held not to show that plaintiff had any such lien upon or interest in the assets within the district sought to be reached as authorized him to invoke the procedure outlined in the Judicial Code, § 57 (see vol. 5, p. 525), is not reviewable in the federal Supreme Court as presenting a question of the jurisdiction of the District Court as a federal court. De Rees v. Costaguta, (1920) 254 U. S. 166, 41 S. Ct. 69, 65 U. S. (L. ed.)

—, wherein the court said: "The appellees challenge the jurisdiction of this court to entertain this appeal on the ground that the case does not present a jurisdictional issue properly reviewable by this court."

"Since the decision of Shepard v. Adams, 168 U. S. 618, 42 L. ed. 602, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 214, it has been the accepted doctrine that where there is a contention that no valid service of process has been made upon the defendant, and the judgment is rendered without jurisdiction over the person, such judgment can be reviewed by direct appeal to this court. This principle was restated and previous cases cited as late as G. & C. Merriam Co. v. Saalfeld, 241 U. S. 22, 26, 60 L. ed. 868, 971, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 477.

"It is equally well settled that where the question of jurisdiction presented and decided turns upon questions of general law, determinable upon principle alike applicable to actions brought in other jurisdictions, the jurisdiction of the court as a Federal court is not presented in such wise as to authorize the jurisdictional appeal directly to this court; and the question must be decided as other questions are, by the usual course of appellate procedure, giving review in the circuit court of appeals. Louisville Trust Co. v. Knott, 191 U. S. 225, 48 L. ed. 159, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 119; Bache v. Hunt, 193 U. S. 523, 48 L. ed. 774, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 547; Fore River Shipbuilding Co. v. Hagg, 219 U. S. 175, 55 L. ed. 163, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185; Scully v. Bird, 209 U. S. 481, 485, 52 L. ed. 899, 901, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 597; Bogart v. Southern P. Co., 228 U. S. 137, 57 L. ed. 768, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 197.

"That the question of the adequacy of the allegations of the bill to justify the relief sought does not present a jurisdictional question was held in Smith v. McKay, 161 U. S. 355, 40 L. ed. 731, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 490; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 28, 45 L. ed. 410, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 251; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co., 234 U. S. 369, 372, 58 L. ed. 1356, 1358, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 810; R. J. Darnell v. Illinois C. R. Co., 225 U. S. 243, 56 L. ed. 1072, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 760; Public Service Co. v. Corboy, 250 U. S. 153, 162, 63 L. ed. 905, 909, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 440.

"The opinion of the court below, read in connection with the certificate, shows that it was held that the contract set up in the bill gave no lien upon or right in rem in the assets sought to be reached within the district. The question was presented, the court, in the exercise of jurisdiction, after an examination of the contract set forth in the bill, and a consideration of its terms, determined it upon principles which would have been equally applicable had the question been presented in other jurisdictions. Its decision, therefore, did not involve the jurisdiction of the Federal court as such, which, it is settled, is required in order to justify a direct appeal to this court.

"In Chase v. Wetzlar, 225 U. S. 79, 56 L. ed. 990, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 659, the Act of March 3, 1875, now § 57 of the Judicial Code, was involved, and there was an attempt to have service on alien defendants by publication under the provisions of the statute. The issue made was as to whether there was property of the defendants within the jurisdiction of the court. That issue was held to present a question of jurisdiction properly reviewable in this court under § 238. In the case now presented no question is made as to the presence of property in the district. The attempted service was set aside, and the bill dismissed, upon consideration of the allegations of the bill which, it was held, upon application of general principles, did not show that the plaintiff had any lien upon or interest in the property authorizing him to invoke the procedure outlined in § 57 of the Judicial Code.

"As to the contention that the whole case is here upon a constitutional question because of the procedure in the court below, § 238 provides that when a case comes here upon a question of jurisdiction, that question alone shall be certified. Moreover, we find no merit in the alleged deprivation of constitutional rights, so as to present questions arising under the Constitution."

Validity of federal farm loan bonds.—A bill filed by a stockholder to enjoin the corporation from investing the funds of such corporation in farm loan bonds issued under the authority of the Federal Farm Loan Act of July 17, 1916, as amended by the Act of January 18, 1918, on the ground that these acts were beyond the constitutional power of Congress, and that the securities issued thereunder were consequently of no validity, sets forth a cause of action arising under the Federal Constitution or laws of which a federal District Court has jurisdiction under Judicial Code, § 24, without diversity of citizenship, and from the decree of the District Court dismissing the bill a direct appeal lies to the federal Supreme Court. Smith v. Kansas City Title, etc., Co., (1921) 255 U. S. 180, 41 S. Ct. 243, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

9. Scope of Review

c. Questions of Fact and Findings (p. 827)

Evidence not in record.—A decree of a federal Circuit Court of Appeals will be affirmed on motion where the case turns essentially on questions of fact, and both courts below, on a review of the evidence, have found the facts in the same way, and the record not only fails clearly to disclose error in such concurrent findings, but does not contain all the evidence, since, under these circumstances, to return the cause for oral argument in regular course would result in harmful delay, and serve no useful purpose. Bodkin v. Edwards, (1921) 255 U. S. 221, 41 S. Ct. 268, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 621.

V. "FINAL SENTENCES AND DECREES IN PRIZE CASES" (p. 828)

Supplementary decree to make effective decree involving constitutional point.—A supplementary decree of a federal District Court in a subordinate proceeding to carry into effect a decree of the federal Supreme Court in the main cause, which supplemental decree brings to effective conclusion, if not vitiated by error, a controversy that arose out of a railway company's attack on constitutional grounds upon freight rates prescribed by state authority, must be treated as involving a federal question, so as to justify, under the Judicial Code, § 238, a direct appeal to the federal Supreme Court, although the only question immediately involved is the proper construction of the tariff prescribed by the state. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Haasty, (1921) 255 U. S. 252, 41 S. Ct. 269, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

VI. CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS IN ISSUE

1. "Construction or Application of Constitution of United States" Involved

b. Illustrations (p. 829)

Income tax clause involved.—The Supreme Court has jurisdiction of a writ of error to a District Court to review a judgment which sustained a demurrer to a declaration in assumpsit to recover back federal income taxes, where the claim to recover is based upon the contention that the fund taxed was not income within the scope of the Sixteenth Amendment, and that the effect given by the lower court to the federal legislation under which such taxes were imposed renders it unconstitutional and void. Merchants' Loan, etc., Co. v. Smietanka, (1921) 255 U. S. 509, 41 S. Ct. 386, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —; Goodrich v. Edwards, (1921) 255 U. S. 527, 41 S. Ct. 390, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —; Walsh v. Brewster, (1921) 255 U. S. 536, 41 S. Ct. 392, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

2. "Constitutionality of Any Law of United States Drawn in Question."

a. In General (p. 831)

Validity of act established by previous decisions.—The want of merit in the contention that the provision of the Reed Amendment of March 3, 1917, § 5, prohibiting the transportation in interstate commerce of intoxicating liquor into any state whose laws forbid the manufacture or sale therein of such liquor for beverage purposes is repugnant to U. S. Const., art. 1, § 9, cl. 6, prohibiting any regulation of commerce which gives a preference to the ports of one state over those of another, is so plainly established by the decisions of the federal Supreme Court and the authorities which have followed those decisions as to require the affirmance on motion of a conviction for a violation of such statute, brought up directly from a federal District Court for review, on the theory that the law was unconstitutional for that reason. Williams v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 336, 41 S. Ct. 364, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

3. "Constitution or Law of State Claimed to be in Contravention of Constitution of United States"

a. In General (p. 831)

The federal Supreme Court must accept on writ of error the decision of the highest court of a state as to the meaning of state legislation and the state constitution, as though such meaning was expressed in both legislation and constitution. Thornton v. Duffy, (1920) 254 U. S. 361, 41 S. Ct. 137, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 99 Ohio St. 120, 124 N. E. 54.

4. Exclusiveness of Jurisdiction of Supreme Court (p. 834)

To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original annotation, see Grammer v. Fenton, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 943.

Where the jurisdiction of the District Court is based both on the ground of the construction and application of the Constitution of the United States and that it is a suit arising under a law of the United States the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to hear an appeal from the judgment below is not exclusive. Farmers' Grain Co. v. Langer, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 635.

7. Scope of Review (p. 836)

Jurisdiction of a direct writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to a District Court once having attached, because of the presence of a constitutional question, continues for the purpose of disposing of other questions raised in the record, although the constitutional question has since been decided in another case to be without merit. Jin Fuey Moy v. U. S., (1920) 254 U. S. 189, 41 S. Ct. 98, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming on other grounds (W. D. Pa. 1918) 253 Fed. 213.

Interlocutory orders.—A certificate to the Supreme Court for instructions does not lie in the case of interlocutory orders. Cheney v. Hines, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 310.

III. TABLE OF CASES WHERE QUESTIONS WERE CERTIFIED (p. 848)

In Gould v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 839, the following questions were certified to the Supreme Court by the Circuit Court of Appeals:

First. Is the secret taking or abstraction without force by a representative of any branch or subdivision of the government of the United States of a paper writing, of evidential value only, belonging to one suspected of crime, and from the house or office of such person, a violation of the Fourth Amendment?

Second. Is the admission of such paper writing in evidence against the same person, when indicted for crime, a violation of the Fifth Amendment?

Third. Are papers of no pecuniary value, but possessing evidential value against persons presently suspected and subsequently indicted under sections 37 and 215, C. C., when taken under search warrants issued pursuant to act of June 15, 1917, from the house or office of the person so suspected, seized and taken in violation of the Fourth Amendment?

Fourth. If such papers so taken are admitted in evidence against the person from whose house or office they were taken, such person being then on trial for the crime of which he was accused in the affidavit for warrant, is such admission in evidence a violation of the Fifth Amendment?

Fifth. If in the affidavit for search warrant under act of June 15, 1917, the party whose premises are to be searched be charged with one crime, and property be taken under the warrant issued thereon, can such property so seized be introduced in evidence against said party when on trial for a different offense?

Sixth. If papers of evidential value only be seized under a search warrant and the party from whose house or office they are taken be indicted, if he then move before trial for the return of said papers, and said motion is denied, is the court at trial bound in law to inquire as to the origin of or method of procuring said papers, when they are offered in evidence against the party so indicted?

VI. TABLE OF CERTIORARI CASES

8. Patent Cases (p. 870)

Certiorari, not appeal, is the proper mode of reviewing in the Supreme Court a judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals upon an application for leave to file in the District Court a petition in the nature of a bill of review in a patent suit, since such proceeding was ancillary to the original jurisdiction invoked, and was still, in its essence and nature, a suit involving the validity of a patent, which is expressly made final in the Circuit Court of Appeals. The Supreme Court, upon reversing on certiorari the judgment of a Circuit Court of Appeals on a petition which that court should have regarded as an application for leave to file in the District Court a petition in the nature of a bill of review, invoking a consideration of the effect of a decree in another district as res judicata, will not pass upon the merits of the petition, but will remand the cause to the Circuit Court of Appeals for a determination of the effect of such decree. National Brake, etc., Co. v. Christensen, (1921) 254 U. S. 425, 43 S. Ct. 154, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 880, 169 C. C. A. 600.

Amount in controversy — Consolidation of cases to permit appeal.—The court will not consolidate causes which are separately not appealable in order to create a consolidated case with an amount in controversy sufficiently large to authorize an appeal and thereby defeat the purpose of the statute. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 58, wherein it was said:

"The court by refusing to consolidate does not seek to defeat any right of appeal. It merely refuses to circumvent the statute authorizing appeals. This statute prescribes the amount necessary for that purpose, and as 'it draws the boundary line of jurisdiction it is to be construed with strictness and vigor.' As jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent of parties, but must be given by the law, so it ought not to be extended by doubtful construction."

Amount claimed in petition as amount in controversy.—The amount claimed in a petition in the Court of Claims is the amount in controversy for the purpose of testing the right to appeal to the Supreme Court, although there may be a defense to a part that does not extend to the entire claim, where there is nothing in the nature of the case to prevent a recovery of the entire amount should claimant's view of the law be sustained. Journal, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1921) 254 U. S. 581, 41 S. Ct. 202, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 612.

Amended petition as determining amount in controversy.—The amount in controversy in a suit in the court of claims is to be determined, when testing the right to appeal to the Supreme Court, by the amended petition, where there is one, rather than by the original petition. Journal, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1921) 254 U. S. 581, 41 S. Ct. 202, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 612.

Vol. V, p. 890, Jud. Code, sec. 243.

Remanding case to Court of Claims.—

Where a case has been remanded to the Court of Claims for further findings of fact, without an order directly setting aside the judgment or directing the court to set it aside, the order will not be construed as authorizing a new trial, but as limiting the remand to "further findings of fact." Norris v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 208.

Vol. V, p. 913, Jud. Code, sec. 250.

Final judgment or decree subject to review.

—A decision of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia on an appeal from the Commissioner of Patents, (see 7 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 202) which reverses the latter's decision not to cancel certain certificates of registration of a trademark, and directs the clerk of the court to certify the court's decision to the Commissioner, as required by law, is not final for the purpose of appeal to or certiorari from the federal Supreme Court. Baldwin Co. v. R. S. Howard Co., (1921) 256 U. S. 35, 41 S. Ct. 405, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, (dismissing appeal to review (1919) 48 App. Cas. (D. C.) 437), wherein the court said:

"It is true that in Estate of P. D. Beckwith v. Commissioner of Patents, 242 U. S. 538, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) 705, 40 S. Ct. 414, this court allowed a writ of certiorari from a decision of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, affirming a decision of the Commissioner of Patents, in an application to register a trademark. No question of the jurisdiction of the court was considered in that case, and an inadvertent allowance of the writ of certiorari does not establish the jurisdiction of the court. J. Homer Fritch v. United States, 248 U. S. 458, 463, 63 U. S. (L. ed.) 359, 39 S. Ct. 158."

Third clause.—A judgment of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia in a case in which the constitutional power of Congress to enact a local statute is drawn in question is reviewable in the federal Supreme Court on writ of error or appeal under this clause, which in express terms confers power on the latter court to review judgments of the District of Columbia court "in cases involving the construction or application of the Constitution of the United States, or the constitutionality of any law of the United States." The Court of Appeals is therefore without power to certify the question to the Supreme Court. Heald v. District of Columbia, (1920) 254 U. S. 20, 41 S. Ct. 42, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said:

"But it is suggested that as it was held in American Secur. & T. Co. v. District of Columbia, 224 U. S. 491, 56 L. ed. 856, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 553, that the power conferred upon this court by paragraph 6 of § 250, to review on error or appeal judgments or decrees of the court below 'in cases in which the construction of any law of the United States is drawn in question by the defendant,' embraced only the construction of laws of general operation, as distinguished from those which were local to the District of Columbia, therefore the grant of power to determine the constitutionality of acts of Congress must be treated as applying only to such acts as are general in character, as to which it is insisted the act involved in this case is not one.

"But the contention disregards the suggestion of a difference between the two subjects which was made in the American Secur. & T. Co. case, and overlooks the implication resulting from a subsequent case directly dealing with the same matter. United Surety Co. v. American Fruit Product Co., 238 U. S. 140, 59 L. ed. 1238, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 828.

"In addition, as the paragraphs of § 250 in question but re-enact provisions of prior statutes which had been construed as conveying authority to review controversies concerning the constitutional power of Congress to enact local statutes (Parsons v. District of Columbia, 170 U. S. 45, 42 L. ed. 943, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 521; Smoot v. Heyl, 227 U. S. 518, 57 L. ed. 621, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336), the proposition conflicts with the settled rule that where provisions of a statute had, previous to their re-enactment, a settled significance, that meaning will continue to attach to them in the absence of plain implication to the contrary. Latimer v. United States, 223 U. S. 501, 504, 56 L. ed. 526, 527, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 242; Anderson v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co., 225 U. S. 187, 199, 56 L. ed. 1047, 1053, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 626; United States ex rel. Louisville Cement Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 246 U. S. 638, 644, 62 L. ed. 914, 918, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 408.

"That a decision below which merely deals with and interprets a local statute is not subject to review by error or appeal affords no basis for saying that the exertion of the infinitely greater power to determine whether Congress had constitutional authority to pass a statute local in character should be necessarily subjected to a like limitation. To the contrary, the elementary principle is that the right to pass upon the greater question, the constitutional power of Congress, draws to it the authority to also decide all the essential incidents, even though otherwise there might not be a right to consider them. Fields v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 194 U. S. 618, 620, 48 L. ed. 1142, 1152, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 784; Williamson v. United States, 207 U. S. 425, 432, 52 L. ed. 278, 284, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 163.

"It follows that the certificate must be and it is dismissed for want of jurisdiction."

Vol. V, p. 917, Jud. Code, sec. 251.

Table of certiorari cases.—Harris v. District of Columbia, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 610, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) — (action against District for injury to employee engaged in sprinkling streets).

Finality of judgment on appeal from decision of Commissioner of Patents.—A decision of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia on an appeal from a decision of the Commissioner of Patents (see 7 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 202), which affirms the latter's decision to refuse an application for the registration of a trademark, and directs the clerk to certify the decision of the court to the commissioner, as required by law, is not final for the purpose of certiorari from the federal Supreme Court. American Steel Foundries v. Whitehead, (1921) 256 U. S. 40, 41 S. Ct. 407, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, dismissing writ of certiorari to review (1919) 49 App. Cas. (D. C.) 16, 258 Fed. 160.

Inadvertent allowance of writ of certiorari.—An inadvertent allowance of a writ of certiorari to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia does not establish the jurisdiction of the federal Supreme Court. Baldwin Co. v. R. S. Howard Co., (1921) 250 U. S. 35, 41 S. Ct. 405, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, dismissing appeal to review (1919) 48 App. Cas. (D. C.) 437, and denying writ of certiorari.

Certified questions.—The Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia is without power to certify questions to the federal Supreme Court in a case in which the judgment or decree of the District Court would be reviewable by the federal Supreme Court on writ of error or appeal. Heald v. District of Columbia, (1920) 254 U. S. 20, 41 S. Ct. 42, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Tort action arising in admiralty.—The District Court has jurisdiction on its common law side of a tort action arising in admiralty when the jurisdictional requisites of citizenship and amount are present. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Berg, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 534.

State jurisdiction of action for injury to seaman.—A state court has jurisdiction of an action for injuries sustained by an employee on a boat from an explosion caused by the fact that gasoline was put in a can habitually used for kerosene. Sandanger v. Carlisle Packing Co., (1920) 112 Wash. 480, 192 Pac. 1005.

Right to trial by jury.—The common law remedy which the District Court affords is that of trial by jury, and such a remedy is saved to him by the clause conferring on the District Court exclusive admiralty jurisdiction. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Berg, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 534.

Defendant's liability measured by maritime law.—Whether the action is tried at common law or in admiralty the liability of the defendant is measured by the maritime law and not the common law. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Berg, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 534.

Limitation on power to issue.—The writ does not lie for the purpose of reviewing an administrative order made by an executive officer of the government as in the case of such an order issued by the Secretary of the Interior. Mickadiet v. Payne, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 269 Fed. 194.

9. Mandamus

a. Jurisdiction in General (p. 934)

Power to issue.—This provision gives the power to issue a writ of mandamus. U. S. v. Malmin, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 785.

Power of United States Supreme Court.—The failure of a Circuit Court of Appeals in its decree to dispose of one of the claims in suit will not be corrected by mandamus, where the relator failed adequately to call the court's attention to such omission during the term, or to seek relief in the federal Supreme Court by petition for a writ of certiorari. Ex p. National Park Bank, (1921) 256 U. S. 131, 41 S. Ct. 403, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

To correct record on appeal.—Mandamus does not lie to correct the conclusion of the court below in a criminal case that the record need not be corrected to show that, as the result of an agreement between the accused and the district attorney, the case was tried before a jury of eleven, since the accused might have saved the point by an exception at the trial, or by a bill of exceptions to the denial of his subsequent motion for correction of the record, setting forth whatever facts or offers of proof were material, and might then have brought a writ of error. Ex p. Riddle, (1921) 255 U. S. 450, 41 S. Ct. 370, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Limitation on power to issue.—The Circuit Court of Appeals has no power to issue the writ of mandamus to a District Court except in aid of its appellate jurisdiction. U. S. v. Malmin, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 785.

Directing district judge to resume office.—A writ of mandamus directing a district judge whose appointment has been unlawfully revoked to resume the duties of his office is conclusive only of the government's right to ask the court to compel its servant, under his prima facie title, to return to his jurisdiction and to perform the duties of his office. It is not conclusive of subsequent proceedings, if any be had, on different facts to test the title to the office. Nor does it determine any question of the tenure of the respondent's office, the power thereafter to remove him and to appoint another or where such power, if any, resides. U. S. v. Malmin, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 785. The court further declared: "If the absence of a lawfully appointed judge of a District Court, from which appeals lie to this court, thereby affects the right of litigants to take appeals and the right of this court to entertain them, confessedly this court has power to restore the orderly proceedings of the trial court by commanding the absent judge to return and transact its business. So also, when the District Court is occupied by a stranger exercising the functions of judge without color of title, questions of the validity of judgments he enters and of appeals taken may conceivably arise; yet they would arise in a way which would leave this court helpless to correct the fundamental trouble; for, unquestionably, the right of the incumbent—even if claimed under color of title to the office—to enter valid judgments could not be collaterally attacked and tried out on appeal, Hager v. Heyberger, 7 Watts & S. (Pa.) 104, 105, 42 Am. Dec. 220, and the right of the public to a properly constituted trial court from which appeals can validly lie could not be asserted or brought about in proceedings on appeal or by writ of error.

"It may be that valid appeals would lie from and valid writs of error could be directed to a de facto judge with color of title to the office; but as we are deciding this case on the theory of law that the respondent's title to the office de jure draws to it the possession de facto, there is nothing left in the district court (saving the effect of a possible ad interim appointment) on which the appellate jurisdiction of this court can validly operate. Therefore, it becomes essential to the appellate jurisdiction of this court that orderly proceedings in the district court of the Virgin Islands be restored and to that end we shall enter on order, in the form prayed by the United States, that— 'a writ of peremptory mandamus issue, directed to Lucius J. M. Malmin, Judge of the District Court of the United States, commanding him to proceed forthwith to the Municipality of St. Croix, and there enter upon, undertake and perform the duties appertaining to the office of Judge of the District Court of the Virgin Islands aforesaid, so long as he shall continue hereafter lawfully to hold the office of Judge of the District Court aforesaid.'"

b. Controlling Judicial Action or Discretion
(p. 937)

Execution of mandate of appellate court.—Mandamus is an appropriate remedy in a case where the mandate of an appellate court is disregarded. U. S. v. U. S. District Ct., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 611.

c. Not as Substitute for Appeal or Writ of Error (p. 942)

Generally.—The Circuit Court of Appeals will not issue a mandamus to compel a district judge to vacate an order vacating a previous order by which he dismissed a suit for the infringement of a patent, as that is a matter subject to correction on appeal and the order complained of in no way affected the appellate jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals. Raritan Copper Works v. Elliott, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 284.

f. Acts of Executive Officers (p. 947)

Commissioner of patents.—Neither injunction nor mandamus will lie to control the actions of the Commissioner of Patents in matters committed by law to his discretion. Snelling v. Whitehead, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 712.

Vol. V, p. 954, Jud. Code, sec. 264.

II. GENERAL PRINCIPLES AND PARTICULAR APPLICATION (p. 955)

Judgments.—A federal court may enjoin the enforcement of a judgment fraudulently obtained in a state court. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Callicotte, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 799.

The fact that the judgment against which relief is sought was rendered in a state court is not material as the injunction acts not on the court rendering the judgment but on the party. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Callicotte, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 799.

A court of the United States has no power to enjoin the judgment of a state court for errors committed in the trial of a cause, in construing a statute of another state, not affecting the validity of such statute. Hartford L. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 30.

Restraining prosecution under unconstitutional statute.—Averments of the unconstitutionality, under U. S. Const., 5th and 6th Amendments, of certain criminal provisions of a federal statute, if well founded, justify equitable relief by injunction against the enforcement of such provisions. Kennington v. Palmer, (1921) 255 U. S. 100, 41 S. Ct. 303, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

I. CONSTRUCTION AND APPLICATION

1. Generally (p. 959)

Extent of prohibition.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see W. E. Stewart Land Co. v. Arthur, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 184, holding that the prohibition of this section extended to an injunction staying the taking of depositions in a state court.

II. JURISDICTION

1. Generally (p. 962)

Under this section a federal court has no jurisdiction of a bill which seeks to enjoin the attorney general of a state from prosecuting in a state court certiorari proceedings against a telephone company. Cumberland Telephone, etc., Co. v. Stevens, (S. D. Miss. 1921) 274 Fed. 745.

In Holmes County v. Burton Constr. Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 565, it was said in a case involving the right to enjoin a suit in a state court: "We think that the court should have denied said injunction and sustained the motion to dismiss said bill for want of equity. Even if the suit in the state and federal courts had been between the same parties, being purely an action in personam, involving, neither in its progress nor in the judgment sought, the control or disposition of any property, the pendency of the suit in the United States court would not, in the absence of special circumstances, furnish ground for an injunction of the state court suit. It has been held that a prior suit in a state or federal court in the same state furnishes no ground for a plea in abatement to a second suit in the court of the other jurisdiction."

2. Court First Acquiring Jurisdiction Retains It (p. 962)

To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original annotation, see Burke Constr. Co. v. Kline, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 605.

Where a federal court has first acquired jurisdiction it will retain it in a case where its jurisdiction is broad enough to afford as complete relief at law and in equity as may be obtained in the state court. Hoffman v. Mathieson Alkali Works, (D. C. R. I. 1920) 269 Fed. 62.

"The court which first acquired the lawful jurisdiction of specific property by the seizure thereof, or by the due commencement of a suit from which it appears that is or will become necessary to a determination of the controversy involved, or to the enforcement of its judgment or decree therein, for that court to seize, to charge with a lien or trust, to sell or exercise like dominion over it, thereby withdraws that property from the jurisdiction of every other court, so far as necessary to accomplish the purpose of the suit, and entitles that court to retain the control of it requisite to effectuate its final judgment or decree therein, free from the interference of every other tribunal." Berg v. Fidelity, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 311.

In a case where the controversy or the parties are the same in different actions pending in courts of concurrent jurisdiction, "the weight of authority seems to be that the court first acquiring jurisdiction of the controversy will retain it, to the exclusion of the other, though possession of the res be not taken. In re Lasserot, 240 Fed. 325, 153 C. C. A. 251; Gluck & Becker on Receivers, 67, 68 (2d ed., 89, 91); Empire Trust Co. v. Brooks, 232 Fed. 641, 146 C. C. A. 567; Knudsen v. First Trust & Savings Bank, 245 Fed. 81, 157 C. C. A. 377; In re Chetwood, 165 U. S. loc. cit. 460, 17 Sup. Ct. 385, 41 L. ed. 782; Moran v. Sturges, 154 U. S. loc. cit. 273, 14 Sup. Ct. 1019, 38 L. ed. 981. Where the controversy, however, is not the same, the issues being different in one suit from those involved in another, and the subject-matter is not identical, there can be no infringement of jurisdiction as between the courts maintaining cognizance of the cases. This rule rests on the ground that in such a case there is no conflict of jurisdiction as to the question or cause. In such cases the court which first acquires the actual or constructive possession of property is entitled to retain the same." Havner v. Hegnes, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 537.

III. PROTECTION OF FEDERAL JURISDICTION

1. Proceedings Incidental to Jurisdiction (p. 963)

"This section does not deprive the federal courts, sitting in equity in cases involving any controversies between the citizens of jurisdiction, and which have been adjudged different states, of which such courts have by the state courts, of the power or relieve them of the duty to enjoin the parties to such suits from enforcing judgments of the state courts in their favor where, on account of fraud, mistake, accident, or any other ground of equity jurisprudence, and on account of the threat of imminent and irreparable injury, the rules and principles of equity demand that the parties shall not proceed to enforce such state judgments." Pierce v. National Bank of Commerce, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 487.

"A court of the United States, by virtue of its general equity powers, has jurisdiction to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment of a state court, if there is a diversity of citizenship, or a federal question involved, and the amount involved exceeds $3,000, if the allegations in the complaint state a proper cause of action." Hartford L. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 30.

2. General Principles as to Protecting Jurisdiction (p. 964)

Rule stated.—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original annotation, see Smith v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 653.

In Burke Constr. Co. v. Kline, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 606, it was said:

"When a citizen of one state, in the exercise of the right granted to him by the Constitution and the acts of Congress to an adjudication of a controversy judicable in a federal court between him and a citizen of another state, brings a suit in personam or in rem against the latter in the proper federal court to obtain the adjudication of that controversy by that court, and that court first acquires jurisdiction of that controversy and of the parties thereto, and the plaintiff therein persistently demands the adjudication of the controversy by the federal court, the defendant in that suit may not deprive the plaintiff of his constitutional right to such an adjudication by the federal court, or of the enforcement thereof by that court, by bringing a subsequent suit in a state court against the plaintiff in the federal court or against him and others to obtain an adjudication by the latter court of the same controversy or of that controversy and of other controversies, or by any other action or proceedings such a defendant may take. . . . Nor may they unduly or unnecessarily postpone the hearings or delay the proceedings in their courts to the disadvantage of suitors vested with the right to a determination of their controversies by such courts by the Constitution and the acts of Congress. McClellan v. Carland, 217 U. S. 268, 30 Sup. Ct. 501, 54 L. ed. 762; McClellan v. Carland (8 C. C. A.) 187 Fed. 915, 919, 110 C. C. A. 49. The power is conferred and the duty is imposed on a federal court, which, at the suit of a citizen of one state against a citizen of another state, to secure from it an adjudication of a controversy between them judicable in the federal court and which first acquires jurisdiction of the controversy and the parties, to protect its jurisdiction of and its power to adjudicate the controversy and to enforce its adjudication by its injunction against any subsequent proceedings in a state court or elsewhere by the defendant, his attorneys, agents or representatives which would or might have the effect to defeat or impair its jurisdiction, its adjudication, its orders, judgments, or decrees or its enforcement thereof."

3. Effect of Possession of Res (p. 965)

Generally.—This section does not deprive the federal court of the power to enjoin parties litigant or other persons from proceeding by judicial proceedings or otherwise to interfere with property of which said court had the actual or constructive possession. Havner v. Hegens, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 537.

Possession through receiver.—An injunction by a federal court to enjoin a receiver of a state court from interfering with the possession of a receiver appointed by the federal court should not be directed to the judge of the state court but to the receiver appointed by such court. Havner v. Hegness, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 537.

8. Instances When Injunction Refused (p. 970)

Action in personam.—An action in a federal court which is in personam and does not involve the protection of the custody of property, does not give the court power to enjoin an action in a state court between the same parties with reference to the same subject matter. W. E. Stewart Land Co. v. Arthur, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 184.

IV. PROCEEDINGS UNDER STATE STATUTE

3. Criminal Cases (p. 974)

General doctrine and application.—A federal court will not interfere with the regular processes of justice in a criminal case in a state court where there is no infraction of the accused's rights or impediment to his asserting any defense that he may think he has under the Constitution of the United States. Lindsey v. Allen, (D. C. Mass. 1920) 269 Fed. 656.

V. OTHER PARTICULAR MATTERS AND PROCEEDINGS (p. 976)

Judgments of state courts.—If judgments rendered by a state court be void or if they be void as to the plaintiff in the proceeding before the federal court and the other requisites of jurisdiction are present the federal court has jurisdiction to enjoin their execution. Mohawk Oil Co. v. Layne, (W. D. La. 1921) 270 Fed. 841.

Injunction may be granted against enforcement of a state judgment to protect the rights of one under the Fourteenth Amendment prohibiting the taking of one's property without due process of law. Mohawk Oil Co. v. Layne, (W. D. La. 1921) 270 Fed. 841.

A suit in a federal court to stay the enforcement of a judgment of a state court, obtained under circumstances that render such enforcement contrary to recognized principles of equity and standards of good conscience, is not forbidden by the prohibition in this section against enjoining proceedings in state courts except in bankruptcy cases. Thus an express company with which an employee in charge of express matter transported by railway stipulated, as a condition of employment, to assume all risk of injuries incident to his employment, from whatever cause arising, is entitled to have such employee restrained from enforcing a judgment which, in violation of his agreement, he wrongfully sought and obtained against the railway company, which judgment, as between the two companies, the express company is bound to pay, and which was rendered in an action to which the express company was not a party, and wherein it could not be heard, the employee being financially irresponsible, so that if the judgment is collected, the express company, which has not been in any wise negligent or at fault, will be remediless. Wells-Fargo Co. v. Taylor, (1920) 254 U. S. 175, 41 S. Ct. 93, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1918) 249 Fed. 109, 161 C. C. A. 161) wherein the court said:

"Is the suit one to stay proceedings in a state court in the sense of that provision? If it is, the district court erred in not dismissing the bill on that ground. Haines v. Carpenter, 91 U. S. 254, 23 L. ed. 345; Dial v. Reynolds, 96 U. S. 340, 24 L. ed. 644; United States v. Pankhurst-Davis Mercantile Co., 176 U. S. 317, 44 L. ed. 485, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 423. If it is not, the court rightly entertained the suit and proceeded to an adjudication of the merits for the citizenship of the parties and the amount in controversy were within the jurisdictional requirements.

"The provision has been in force more than a century, and often has been considered by this court. As the decisions show, it is intended to give effect to a familiar rule of comity, and, like that rule, is limited in its field of operation. Within that field it tends to prevent unseemly interference with the orderly disposal of litigation in the state courts and is salutary; but to carry it beyond that field would materially hamper the federal courts in the discharge of duties otherwise plainly cast upon them by the Constitution and the laws of Congress, which, of course, is not contemplated. As with many other statutory provisions, this one is designed to be in accord with, and not antagonistic to, our dual system of courts. In recognition of this it has come to be settled by repeated decisions and in actual practice that, where the elements of federal and equity jurisdiction are present, the provision does not prevent the federal courts from enjoining the institution in the state courts of proceedings to enforce local statutes which are repugnant to the Constitution of the United States (Ex parte Young, 209 U. S. 123, 52 L. ed. 714, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 932, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 441, 14 Ann. Cas. 764; Truax v. Raich, 239 U. S. 33, 60 L. ed. 131, L.R.A. 1916D, 545, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 7, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 283; Missouri v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 241 U. S. 533, 538, 543, 60 L. ed. 1148, 1154, 1156, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 715), or prevent them from maintaining and protecting their own jurisdiction, properly acquired and still subsisting, by enjoining attempts to frustrate, defeat, or impair it through proceedings in the state courts (French v. Hay (French v. Stewart) 22 Wall. 250, 22 L. ed. 857; Julian v. Central Trust Co. 193 U. S. 93, 112, 48 L. ed. 629, 639, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 399; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. McCabe, 213 U. S. 207, 219, 53 L. ed. 765, 770, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 430; Looney v. Eastern Texas R. Co. 247 U. S. 214, 221, 62 L. ed. 1084, 1087, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 460), or prevent them from depriving a party, by means of an injunction, of the benefit of a judgment obtained in a state court in circumstances where its enforcement will be contrary to recognized principles of equity and the standards of good conscience (Marshall v. Holmes, 141 U. S. 589, 35 L. ed. 870, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 62; Ex parte Simon, 208 U. S. 144, 52 L. ed. 429, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 238; Simon v. Southern R. Co. 236 U. S. 115, 59 L. ed. 492, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Public Service Co. v. Corboy, 250 U. S. 153, 160, 63 L. ed. 905, 908, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 440; National Surety Co. v. State Bank, 61 L.R.A. 394, 56 C. C. A. 657, 120 Fed. 593)."

Interlocutory judgments.—The equity powers by which a federal court will restrain a person from gathering the fruits of a void judgment obtained in a state court do not extend to judgments which are merely interlocutory. Essanay Film Mfg. Co. v. Kane, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 959.

Foreclosure proceedings.—A federal court in which a receiver has been appointed in a creditor's suit has no power to issue a permanent injunction against the foreclosure of a mortgage in proceedings in which the state court has already acquired jurisdiction. In such a case the receiver must apply to the state court for relief. Dey v. Brenack Stevedoring Co., (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 272 Fed. 127.

The court said: "I am constrained to hold that in the case at bar the receiver must apply to the state court for relief, and must invoke the equity powers of that tribunal to obtain a temporary stay of the sale, to permit the receiver to negotiate a sale of the property at a fair price, if possible, in order that the general creditors may not suffer. Permission to make such application is hereby granted."

"In all other actions pending against the defendant in the state courts, the receiver is hereby given leave to apply to such courts for permission to intervene."

In In re Locust Bldg. Co., (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 272 Fed. 988, proceedings commenced in the state court subsequent to bankruptcy to foreclose a mortgage were stayed by the bankruptcy court. The court said:

"If the various parties in interest had been brought into an action under the state statutes, by which all parties having any claim to the title would be cut off, except those whose rights to the proceeds of sale are fixed by the decree in foreclosure, where the title thus made would be easier of investigation, and would clearly and conclusively determine what liens exist against the property and should be transferred to the fund, where their validity might be attacked by the trustee in bankruptcy when they make claim thereto, there would be no reason why the action in foreclosure should not proceed to the entry of the decree, if the state court sees fit to proceed with the action and determine the various issues presented on the pleadings."

"If the state court did not deem it advisable, or was unable to proceed with the liquidation of this claim and the determination of its validity, within a reasonable time, the trustees could nevertheless in due course proceed before the referee or this court to determine how the fund should be distributed. But this court having already ordered the sale of the property, free and clear of all claims, there being sufficient funds admittedly to pay all liens, so that the security of a mortgage is unnecessary for any purpose except to establish the lien, and particularly where there are two prior mortgages, which are disputed, and as to which the same issue will be presented as that to be litigated as to the third mortgage, and where the issues as to these prior mortgages cannot be determined in the present foreclosure action, this court is constrained to continue the stay against the foreclosure suit."

I. PURPOSE AND SCOPE (p. 985)

Construction in general.—This section contemplates a stay which will protect against the enforcement of the law the plaintiff who in the federal court is seeking the injunction. J. & A. Frieberg Co. v. Dawson, (W. D. Ky. 1920) 274 Fed. 420.

The court said: "It is manifest that the stay which only prohibits the attorney general from enforcing the law against another plaintiff in another case cannot protect this plaintiff in this case, and Congress could not have intended to oust the jurisdiction of the federal courts, excepting where the state courts were providing an adequate substitute. The reasons assigned to Congress for the enactment of this amendment, as shown in the report of the House judiciary committee, February 27, 1913, report No. 1584, indicate that it was intended to reach only those cases where the enforcement by the state was through a court action, brought by some administrative body, for specific performance of the law; but, however that may be, and if the amendment might be invoked when its application was based upon some other kind of an action for some other kind of enforcement of a law, there at least must be identity between the party claiming protection in the federal court and the party who is receiving protection in the state court."

The suit must be one brought to enforce the law and brought in a court having jurisdiction to enforce it. J. & A. Frieberg Co. v. Dawson, (W. D. Ky. 1920) 274 Fed. 420.

The court said: "The action of the federal court is to be superseded or suspended only in case, as we read the statute, a suit to enforce such statute or order shall have been brought in a court of the state having jurisdiction thereof under the laws of such state; and, while it is said that this particular state court has jurisdiction to enforce this law because it is the court in which the state might rightfully bring suit to collect penalties, it is entirely plain that the suit which has been brought was not brought to enforce this law. The attorney-general would escape this conclusion by saying that the clause to enforce such statute or order is dependent upon and defines the word 'court,' and not the word 'suit.' This construction is not only, as it seems to us, awkward and unnatural, but it leaves the word thereof superfluous and without meaning, and leaves the word 'suit' going at large without definition. According to this construction, if only the suit is brought in a court which has jurisdiction to enforce this law, it makes no difference what kind of a suit it is or what it is about."

When action is taken in the state court to cause a stay of proceedings in the federal court the meaning of this section is that the action must be such in the state court that the same issues can be framed and the same questions considered and decided in the state court as have been raised by the pleadings in the federal court, and pending the determination of that suit in the state court the temporary relief that must be granted by the state court in a stay order must be of as broad a scope as the temporary relief which is asked in the federal court, where the suits have already been started. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co. v. Hilton, (D. C. Minn. 1921) 274 Fed. 384.

II. POWER OF COURT AND SINGLE JUDGE
 (p. 985)

Power of judges.—Where it is clear that the right of any intervenor or plaintiff will be the same as the right of the plaintiff in the case before the court the judges may approve the issue of preliminary injunction by the district judge to any such intervenor or plaintiff whose case appears to such district judge not to be essentially distinguishable from that of the plaintiff to whom the injunction is granted, such injunction to be upon the same terms and conditions as prescribed by the judges in the case before them. J. & A. Frieberg Co. v. Dawson, (W. D. Ky. 1920) 274 Fed. 420.

The court has no power to sustain or deny a motion to dismiss being called into existence for the sole purpose of hearing and deciding the motion for a preliminary injunction. J. & A. Frieberg Co. v. Dawson, (W. D. Ky. 1920) 274 Fed. 420.

In case of the existence of a serious doubt whether conservancy district officers are state officers in such a sense as to justify a hearing under this section it has been held that the court as constituted under this section will not go further than to deny an injunction. Silvey v. Montgomery County, (S. D. Ohio 1921) 273 Fed. 202.

When three judges unnecessary.—Where no attack is made on the constitutionality of any statute of the state, but the attack is made on the effect of an action of a municipal board in insisting upon a maintenance of certain rates, to be charged by a local company for local telephone service, on the ground that the action of such municipal board amounts to prescribing rates so low as to be confiscatory and as such in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, the requirement in this section as to three judges does not apply. Dallas v. Dallas Telephone Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 410.

Where a temporary injunction has been granted "it may be said that the decision of a court of three judges is after all but a district court decision, and not binding upon the judge who hears the case at final presentation.

In a sense this is true, for the court hearing the application for injunction pendente lite necessarily acts upon affidavits, the potency of which may largely disappear after consideration of the evidence of witnesses subject to cross-examination." But where no cross-examination or additional evidence has changed the situation presented when the motion for temporary injunction was argued the decision will be adhered to. Kings County Lighting Co. v. Nixon, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 268 Fed. 143.

Discretion not controlled by master's report.—Where a suit is brought to arrest the operation of an ordinance fixing rates on the ground that it is unconstitutional the court will not fetter its discretion or judgment by any artificial rules as to the weight of the master's findings, however useful and well settled these rules may be in ordinary litigation. Southwestern Telephone, etc., Co. v. Houston, (S. D. Tex. 1920) 268 Fed. 878.

III. WORD "STATUTE" CONSTRUED (p. 987)

Municipal ordinance as "statute of state."—To the same effect as the first paragraph of original annotation, see Des Moines v. Des Moines Gas Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 506.

IV. APPLICATION GENERALLY (p. 988)

In J. & A. Frieberg Co. v. Dawson, (W. D. Ky. 1920) 274 Fed. 420, a motion for a preliminary injunction to restrain the collection of a state tax on liquor in bonded warehouses was held to come within the provision of this act requiring a hearing before three judges. The bill in this case was filed against the warehouse company and against the state auditor and the state attorney general, alleging that the warehouse company was unlawfully refusing to make the transfer, and that the state officers were threatening to enforce this law and the penalties thereof against plaintiff and the warehouse company, and asking that the warehouse company be enjoined from further refusing to make the transfer or from further asserting any lien for this 50-cent tax, that the state officers be enjoined from any step attempting to enforce the act or the lien thereof, and that the attorney general be enjoined from instituting any action, civil or criminal, to coerce the payment of this tax, or to collect the penalties or fines prescribed in the act.

The question whether a railroad is threatened by the state authorities with being deprived of one cent per mile per passenger its property under the Federal Transportation Law is a constitutional one and an application for a preliminary injunction must be heard by a court constituted as required by this section. New York Cent. R. Co. v.

Public Service Commission, (N. D. N. Y. 1920) 268 Fed. 558.

Where a party confined itself to claiming that the members of a state council of defense during the war with Germany acted outside of and beyond the powers and duties contained in the statute creating it, and did not question the validity of that law there was held to be no constitutional question of the character requiring the three judge court. Council of Defense v. International Magazine Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 390.

Conflict between state and federal statute.

—This section applies to cases in which it is sought to restrain the enforcement of a state statute on the ground that it conflicts with a federal statute. Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Michigan Public Utilities Commission, (E. D. Mich. 1921) 271 Fed. 319, wherein it was said: "This injunction is not sought 'upon the ground of the unconstitutionality of such statute,' in the more common sense in which we speak of unconstitutionality. That there is a conflict between state and federal law does not always bring to mind the issue of the unconstitutionality of the former; yet it is prescribed by the federal Constitution that it and the laws and the treaties made in pursuance thereof shall be the supreme law of the land, and it seems to follow that a state statute which is in conflict with a federal statute, when the latter is pursuant to and within the power given by the federal Constitution, is, in a very fair sense, unconstitutional. We think the present situation is fully within the spirit and fairly within the letter of section 266."

VI. EFFECT OF AMENDMENT OF 1913 [new]

A restraining order issued by a state court in purely private litigation between third parties over the validity of a state tax, which leaves those who have already begun suit in a federal court to enjoin the enforcement of the tax statute subject to all the danger of irreparable injury against which they sought the protection of the federal court, is not such a stay as is contemplated by the provision of the Judicial Code, § 266, as amended by the Act of March 4, 1913, that if, before the final hearing of an application to restrain the enforcement of a statute or an administrative order, "a suit shall have been brought in a court of the state having jurisdiction thereof, under the laws of such state, to enforce such statute or order, accompanied by a stay in such court of proceedings under such statute or order pending the determination of such suit by such state court, all proceedings in any court of the United States to restrain the execution of such statute or order shall be stayed pending the final determination of such suit in the courts of the state." Dawson v. Kentucky Distilleries, etc., Co., (1921) 255 U. S. 288, 41

S. Ct. 272, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (W. D. Ky. 1920) 274 Fed. 420. The court said:

"The suit pending in the state court was this: A liquor dealer who owned whisky in a distillery warehouse had, prior to the enactment of the statute here in question, caused it to be bottled in bond, and had paid thereon the 2-cent a gallon state tax imposed under the Law of 1917. He claimed the right to withdraw the whisky from bond without payment of the 50-cent a gallon tax; and brought suit in a county court to enjoin the warehouseman from preventing his doing so. The latter set up this 1920 act. Thereupon, the plaintiff, by amended petition, joined the attorney-general and the auditor as codefendants, and prayed that they be enjoined from compelling the plaintiff or the warehouseman to pay the 50-cent a gallon tax on the plaintiff's whisky. A restraining order to that effect issued.

"Whether this suit in the county court was of such a character as to entitle the state officials to stay the proceedings in the Federal court we do not decide. Strictly speaking, it was not 'brought . . . to enforce' the statute in question; but it is, at least, arguable that it might have been accepted by the state officials as a means to that end, and so have fulfilled in substance the statutory requirement. See House Report No. 1584, 62d Cong. 3d Sess. But whether this is true or not, it was not 'accompanied by a stay in such state court of proceedings under such statute,' within the meaning of the Judicial Code. The stay contemplated by Congress is a general one, which would protect, among others, those who had already sought protection in the Federal court."

I. DERIVATION AND CONSTRUCTION GENERALLY (p. 989)

Derivation of rule.—In determining the adequacy of the legal remedy resort must be had to the common law as modified by English statutes at the time of the adoption by Congress of the Judiciary Act of 1789. The fact that a state gives an adequate remedy at law is not sufficient to deprive a federal court of equity of its jurisdiction. Kellogg v. Schauble, (S. D. Miss. 1921) 273 Fed. 1012.

This section is merely declaratory of the pre-existing law.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Plews v. Burrage, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 347.

II. JURISDICTIONAL MATTERS GENERALLY (p. 990)

Concurrent jurisdiction.—A court of equity will not enjoin an action at law on the ground of res judicata as a party relying on res judicata has a complete and adequate remedy by pleading this defense in a suit at law. Plews v. Burrage, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 347.

IV. REMEDY AT LAW

1. Adequate Remedy at Law Bars Relief in Equity (p. 996)

To the same effect as the original annotation, see J. & A. Frieberg Co. v. Dawson, (W. D. Ky. 1920) 274 Fed. 420.

Legal remedy arising after suit.—Equitable jurisdiction is not lost because, since the filing of the bill, an adequate legal remedy may have become available. Dawson v. Kentucky Distilleries, etc., Co., (1921) 255 U. S. 288, 41 S. Ct. 272, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (W. D. Ky. 1920) 274 Fed. 420.

2. Nature of Remedy at Law Required (p. 997)

Remedy at law must be in federal courts.—The adequate remedy at law which is the test of equitable jurisdiction in the federal courts must exist in those courts. The fact of the existence of such a remedy in the state courts is immaterial. Franklin v. Nevada-California Power Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 643.

V. WAIVER OF OBJECTION TO JURISDICTION (p. 999)

General principles.—This provision that suits in equity shall not be sustained in the courts of the United States where there is an adequate remedy at law, was enacted to secure a privilege to a defendant which he may waive. Rosenthal v. Heller, (M. D. Pa. 1920) 266 Fed. 563.

I. CONSTRUCTION

2. Particular Phrases and Words (p. 1011)

"As to obstruct the administration of justice"—Criticising decisions of courts.—"The right to criticize the correctness of the decisions of courts and judges has always existed under our form of government, and must continue to exist, not merely as a right possessed by the individual, but as a safeguard to our institutions. Such criticism often invites valuable discussion and deliberation, and not infrequently results in correcting error. But such right must not be confused with 'the misbehavior . . . so near' the presence of the court 'as to obstruct the administration of justice.'" U. S. v. Craig, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 266 Fed. 230.

II. CONTEMPT GENERALLY

1. What Constitutes Contempt (p. 1013)

Contempt may be committed although the misbehavior is not directed to a definite matter which is to be disposed of by the court's order, judgment or decree dealing with that precise subject-matter. The test really is not whether the "misbehavior" is directed against the decision of a particular question sub judice but whether it is of such a kind as to be obstructive of the administration of justice. U. S. v. Craig, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 266 Fed. 230.

Contempt by public officials.—In a case where a comptroller of the city of New York was held guilty of contempt the court said:

"Nor is the comptroller of the city of New York clothed with any privilege which will protect him for acts committed in contempt of court. He is not a member of the Legislature, even though it may be urged that the board of which he is a member has certain delegated powers in the nature of legislative functions; and, indeed, for that matter, no one would contend that a member of the Legislature would be free to commit contempt of court by misbehavior outside the halls of the legislative body in any manner he pleased as to the act or conduct of any court or judge." U. S. v. Craig, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 266 Fed. 230.

III. POWER TO PUNISH FOR CONTEMPTS GENERALLY

3. Limitations on Power (p. 1016)

In general.—"The court must act judicially in all things and cannot transcend the power conferred by the law, and when the court does so in imposing the sentence not merely is an error committed, but the judgment is absolutely void." Ex p. Craig, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 177.

IV. PARTICULAR ACTS OR CONDUCT AS CONTEMPTS

10. Letters Relating to Litigation (p. 1024)

Where at the time of the writing of a letter referring to a denial of an application to appoint a coreceiver, the matter referred to had been disposed of, it was held that there was no proceeding pending before the court which the letter could affect by obstructing the administration of justice.

Ex p. Craig, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 177. In this case a comptroller of the city of New York was held guilty of contempt by writing and delivering a letter to a public service commissioner of the state in response to an invitation to a conference in respect to the transportation situation in New York city in which letter he falsely stated that "before any such conference can be seriously considered, and as an evidence of good faith on the part of those acting by and under the authority of United States District Judge Mayer, there must be a reversal of the policy for which Judge Mayer is responsible of denying to myself and other members of the board of estimate and apportionment any access to original sources of information concerning the property and affairs of these various public utility corporations holding franchises to operate in the streets of New York." The court said:

"In the case at bar, the information sets forth that two consolidated causes in equity and one bankruptcy proceeding were pending in this court on October 6, 1919. By virtue of the equity causes (the information shows) there came into the custody of the court large and extensive properties of public utilities, subway, elevated, and surface transit lines. It is plain that in the equity causes and the bankruptcy proceeding the court would be called upon from time to time to make orders and decrees. Such orders and decrees would not merely affect the property as such, but necessarily affect the relation of the property to the public.

"The very nature of the properties and the legal proceedings involving them cast upon the court from the beginning a continuing duty, which must necessarily be performed through the agency of orders, instructions, and decrees decided upon from time to time and expressed in such form as may be appropriate. Until, therefore, the property is no longer in the court, and the court by its final decree or proper order has released the property from its custody, and has no further duty to perform, the equity suits and the bankruptcy proceeding are in every sense pending. . . . Finally, examining the information, it appears that it is alleged that the court was falsely charged in effect with a policy or course of conduct by which it denied to public officials access to original sources of information. It will be noted that defendant refers to 'the policy' for which the court is responsible. Indeed, counsel for defendant assert in their brief:

"The information itself discloses on its face that Judge Mayer had adopted a settled policy and a fixed purpose in regard to the character of the information to be accorded by the receivers and the trustee to the city officials."

"But counsel contend that this action of the court was 'presently final.' It must be plain that 'policy' means a continuing course in a pending cause, and the alleged false statement in respect thereof looked to the present and the future, as well as the past. But it is not necessary to place the decision of this question on either narrow or technical ground. The question is broader and reaches further.

"Such statements as are alleged in the information to be knowingly false have, for their purpose and expected effect, the creation of a fear in the mind of the court that it will invite popular distrust, and perhaps condemnation, if it continues the course which it has pursued. The assault is based on the assumption—fortunately rarely correct—that the court will shape its decisions to meet passing popular approval and to avoid passing popular criticism. It is intended to play on human frailty, and to deflect and deter the court from the performance of its duty, and drive it into a compromise with its own unfettered judgment, by placing it, through the medium of knowingly false assertion, in a wrong position before a public which has little opportunity to investigate the facts and ascertain the truth."

IV. Effect of state remedies.

Construction of this section as amended, see infra, p. 644.

II. POWER OF COURT (p. 1048)

Power to grant.—"Under rule 11 (188 Fed. ix, 109 C. C. A. ix) the court, at its option, may notice a plain error not assigned. Nor will the court refuse to notice a substantial error committed during the trial, when the accused's liberty is involved, although no exceptions were taken, nor included in the assignment of errors. But it is only in a clear case, to prevent a miscarriage of justice, that an appellate court will consider an alleged error, not called to the attention of, and not passed on by, the trial court. Gillette v. United States, 236 Fed. 215, 149 C. C. A. 405. If it appears from the entire record that the accused is clearly guilty, errors not excepted to will afford no ground for reversal." Smith v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 665.

Discretion of court.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see American Film Co. v. Moye, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 419; Bates v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 563; Preleau v. U. S., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 271 Fed. 361; Tanners' Products Co. v. Nulty, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 898.

The denial of a motion for a new trial is a matter within the discretion of the court whose action will not be reviewed in the absence of an abuse of discretion. Ramsey v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 825; Harley v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 384.

"The granting of the motion for a new trial was within the discretionary power of the learned District Judge, and, having exercised his discretion, no exception can be sustained to his denial. It has only been in cases where the trial judge has refused to exercise his discretion, and to consider the motion or the affidavits offered in its support, that his ruling has been reviewed." Katz v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 157.

It is not assignable as error on appeal that the court erred in overruling a motion for a new trial based on the assumption that the verdict was not sustained by the evidence. Whelan v. Welch, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 689.

III. GROUNDS FOR GRANTING NEW TRIAL

1. In General (p. 1050)

Doubt as to issues on which verdict was based.—Where it is doubtful that the verdict of a jury in favor of a plaintiff was rendered on the issue submitted in the court's charge, rather than on a different issue urged by the plaintiff's counsel, a new trial will be granted. Oriental Textile Mills v. Thompson Worsted Co., (E. D. Pa. 1920) 265 Fed. 794.

6. Instructions (p. 1052)

Where a portion of an instruction, which was objected to by the defendant's counsel, was withdrawn by the court and the jury cautioned to disregard it, it does not constitute prejudicial error. Gross v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 606.

IV. EFFECT OF STATE REMEDIES (p. 1055)

A restricted new trial where the whole case is not resubmitted to the jury as authorized by a state statute is beyond the power of a federal court to order. McKeon v. Central Stamping Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 385.

Vol. V, p. 1059, Jud. Code, sec. 274a.

The fact that a complainant in equity has an adequate remedy at law is no longer sufficient ground for the dismissal of the suit. Pierce v. National Bank of Commerce, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 487, citing equity rule 22.

Construing equity rules 22 and 23 together with this statute it has been said: "We understand that a suit in equity shall not be tried by piecemeal, but is to be proceeded with on the side in which the suit was properly brought; that is to say, if it should have been brought as an action at law, under rule 22 the court should make an order of transfer to the law side, to the end that the action may be proceeded with upon the law side. If the suit is one properly to be brought before a court of equity, it should remain upon the equitable side and there tried. On the other hand, if, in the course of the suit begun in equity, matters should arise which would ordinarily have to be determined at law, such matters shall be determined without sending the case to the law side of the court." Chanslor-Canfield Midway Oil Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 145.

This statute is remedial and should be liberally construed. Plews v. Burrage, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 881.

Release as bar to action at law.—A release is not a bar to an action at law until set aside in equity since under this section the defendant may plead it as a defense in such an action. Manchester St. Ry. v. Barrett, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 557.

Submission to jury.—Whether the issues of fact involved in equitable relief to a plaintiff replying to a legal defense should be submitted to a jury or determined by the court is, a question of judicial discretion. While the verdict of a jury may in the equitable issue be advisory only, yet when such issue is simple and one eminently fit for submission to a jury, it is held that such submission is the preferable practice and the one most consonant with the spirit and purpose of the statute. Plews v. Burrage, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 881.

Meeting legal defense by equitable reply.—Under this section when a legal defense is set up in the answer, the plaintiff has by replication the same right to meet such legal defense by equitable reply as a defendant has to set up in his answer an equitable defense to a legal claim set up in the declaration. Plews v. Burrage, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 881. The court said:

"We cannot believe that Congress intended to prevent circuitry of action when a defendant, sued at law, has an equitable defense, and did not intend to prevent circuitry of action when a plaintiff needs to interpose a reply grounded on equity in order to meet a legal defense set up in the answer. We are aware that a majority of the Court of Appeals of the second circuit reached a different conclusion in Keatley v. U. S. Trust Co., 249 Fed. 296, 161 C. C. A. 304; but our views as to the scope and meaning of this statute accord with those of Judge Learned Hand, who, dissenting, said:

"It seems to me that we should not construe so narrowly section 274b. The phrase, 'equitable defenses may be interposed by . . . replication without the necessity of filing a bill on the equity side of the court,' can only mean, I think, this: That where the defendant interposes a bar valid at law, the plaintiff may set up in his next pleading facts avoiding the bar in equity. The suggestion is that it might give the plaintiff the right to plead to the defendant's 'equitable defenses' set up in the answer, but that is independently provided for in the fourth sentence of the act. Besides, the defendant's answer to a suit in equity cannot properly be said to be interposed by 'filing a bill on the equity side of the court,' which is the language of the first sentence.

"So far as we may look to the purpose of the section I cannot think there is any doubt. Congress can hardly be thought to have any predilection for plaintiffs' suits in equity rather than defendants', and we must leave a capricious exception in practice, if we do not include a case like this. I agree that the language of the section is not what a Mitford or a Langdell would have used; but the purpose seems to me perfectly plain, and we ought, I think, to try to effect it if we can."

"See, also, the Knickerbocker Trust Case, 247 Fed. 833, 837, 160 C. C. A. 55.

"Defendant's contention that, so construed, the statute is unconstitutional, is plainly untenable. The decision in Scott v. Neely, 140 U. S. 106, 11 Sup. Ct. 712, 35 L. Ed. 358, so far as now pertinent, is merely to the effect that legal and equitable remedies cannot be so blended in equity suits as to impair the constitutional right to jury trial given by the Seventh Amendment. Stockbridge v. Mixer, 215 Mass. 415, 102 N. E. 646, is to the same effect. Compare State v. Saunders, 66 N. H. 39, 76 et seq., 25 Atl. 588, 18 L. R. A. 646. There is no constitutional guaranty of permanent circuitry of action."

Vol. V, p. 1061, Jud. Code, sec. 274c.

I. PRACTICE UNDER TEXT SECTION 274c.

Amendment of complaint.—An amendment will be permitted under this section only when the existing facts warrant it and there has been a request therefor. Buena Vista County v. Title Guaranty, etc., Co., (N. D. Ia. 1920) 267 Fed. 477.

A petition for removal may be amended even in the Circuit Court of Appeals so as to clear up matters of form. Ohio v. Swift, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 141.

Vol. V, p. 1073, Jud. Code, sec. 280.

[First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 246.]

Selection on discharge of panel.—Jurors may be selected in the manner prescribed in this section where there is lack of a jury in consequence of the action of the court in discharging the panel or panels regularly summoned. Moorehead v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 210.

Vol. V, p. 1098, sec. 9. [First ed., 1914 Supp., p. 377.]

Mode of review—Certiorari.—The mode of review by the Circuit Court of Appeals of the final decrees or judgments of the District Court of the Canal Zone is limited by this section to "the same manner and under the same regulations, and by the same procedure as is done in reviewing the final judgments and decrees of the district courts of the United States." The jurisdiction conferred is brought into play by writ of error or appeal and a suggestion that an order of the District Court prevented the petitioner from taking an appeal does not authorize the issuance of a writ of certiorari as a judge of the Circuit Court of Appeals could have allowed an appeal if application therefor had been duly made. Simkins v. Simkins, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 87.

Finality of decree.—"If no final judgment or decree has been rendered in the case, the proceedings in it are not now subject to be reviewed by this court, whose jurisdiction is limited as indicated by the plain terms of the statute. This court has not been vested with power to superintend or control action of the District Court of the Canal Zone in a case or proceeding in which no final judgment or decree has been rendered." Simkins v. Simkins, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 87.

Enforcement of order to cease and desist enjoined.—In National Tube Co. v. U. S., (N. D. Ohio 1918) 272 Fed. 735, an injunction was issued restraining the enforcement of an order requiring trunk line defendants to cease and desist from making allowance to a terminal railroad for a service rendered to certain shippers.

Enjoining enforcement of order.—The execution of an order made by the commission under section 402 (15) of the Act of Feb. 28, 1920, as amended by the Act of June 5, 1920, ch. 235 ("Transportation Act") 72 [1920

Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. p. 97], can be enjoined only by three judges as provided in this section. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Lambert Run Coal Co., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 776.

Vol. V, p. 1117, sec. 4. [First ed., vol. II, p. 84.]

Torts of officers and agents.—The United States has not consented to be sued in the Court of Claims for the torts of its officers or agents. Journal, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1921) 254 U. S. 581, 41 S. Ct. 202, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 612.

I. GENERAL RULES AND PRINCIPLES

2. Federal Questions (p. 1126)

Federal courts in a suit to enjoin the construction of a dam in an alleged navigable river of the United States need not follow a decision of the highest court of the state within which the stream lies, that such stream in its natural condition is not navigable. Economy Light, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1921) 256 U. S. 113, 41 S. Ct. 409, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 256 Fed. 792, 168 C. C. A. 138.

5. Questions of Unwritten or Common Law

b. Present Rule (p. 1129)

In general.—To the same effect as the second paragraph of the original annotation, see In re Roth, (N. D. Ohio 1920) 272 Fed. 516; Petition of National Discount Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 570.

Decision of Supreme Court of Hawaii.—A decision of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Hawaii construing prior decisions of the Supreme Court relating to the common law doctrine of the presumption of a grant has been held to be binding on the Circuit Court of Appeals. Hawaii v. Hutchinson Sugar Plantation Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 856.

c. Local Law; Rules of Property (p. 1130)

Local law.—To the same effect as the third paragraph of the original annotation, see Pickens v. Merriam, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 1.

Priority of state over other unsecured creditors.—Whether the priority of a state over other unsecured creditors in payment of debts due the state out of the assets of the debtor is a prerogative right or merely a rule of administration is a matter of local law, and the decision of the highest court of the state as to the existence of the right and its incidents will be accepted by the federal Supreme Court as conclusive. Marshall v. New York, (1920) 254 U. S. 380, 41 S. Ct. 143, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 727.

6. Constitutional and Statutory Questions Generally.

a. General Rule Stated (p. 1133)

To the same effect as fifth paragraph of original annotation, see Wight v. Police Jury, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 264 Fed. 705; In re Fox, (D. C. Kan. 1920) 266 Fed. 134; U. S.

r. Briggs, (W. D. Pa. 1920) 266 Fed. 434; Lederer v. Pearce, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 497; Chicago v. S. Obermayer Co., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 237; Woodstock Operating Corp. v. Young, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 278; Brewer-Elliott Oil, etc., Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 100; Ahlberg v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 661; Murray v. Payne, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 820; McNichol v. Consumers' Power Co., (E. D. Mich. 1921) 274 Fed. 478; Noble v. Douglas, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 274 Fed. 672.

Decisions of the state courts that a local statute is not violative of the state constitution are controlling. Hannan v. Council Bluffs First Nat. Bank, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 527.

The construction of the California Code made by the Supreme Court of California is binding on the federal courts. In re Hansen, (S. D. Cal. 1919) 268 Fed. 904.

The contemporaneous and practical construction of a statute by an administrative tribunal, whose duty it is to carry it into effect, is entitled to great respect. Though not absolutely controlling, it is entitled to the most respectful consideration, and ought not to be overruled without cogent reasons. Ginnocchio v. Hydraulic Press Brick Co., (S. D. Ohio 1920) 266 Fed. 564.

c. Conflicting Decisions of State Courts Generally (p. 1138)

To the same effect as first paragraph of original annotation, see Midway Irrigation Co. v. Snake Creek Min., etc., Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 157.

"In those cases in which the effect of the state decisions is in doubt, the federal court may be under the necessity of making a decision without reference to expressions from the state court." Wight v. Police Jury, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 264 Fed. 705.

"Where unequivocal dicta are in conflict with prior unequivocal decisions, no definite rule defines the duty of the federal court." Wight v. Police Jury, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 264 Fed. 705.

d. Change of State Decisions After Accrual of Rights (p. 1138)

"Where state decisions have been followed under conditions making them rules of property rights, changes in the decisions may substantially constitute the taking of property without due process of law, in which event the courts of the United States may feel obliged to adhere, with reference to rights arising prior to the change, to the old rulings." Wight v. Police Jury, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 264 Fed. 705.

"When transactions have been had, contracts, grants, or conveyances have been made, and rights have thereby accrued and vested in a state of the laws and under the rules of property under which such rights are valid and enforceable, and the claim is asserted that by decisions of state tribunals subsequent to the accrual of such rights a different rule of property and state of the law has been created, which, if applied to the determination of the effect of such prior transactions, contracts, grants, or conveyances, would invalidate them and destroy the vested rights under them, the federal courts are not bound by such later rule of property or state of local law, the power is conferred and the duty is imposed upon them to hear and determine the claims of the parties in interest as in right and reason they ought to determine them according to the dictates of their own opinions as independent tribunals." Brewer-Elliott Oil, etc., Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 100.

II. APPLICATION OF RULES TO PARTICULAR SUBJECTS

7. Contracts Generally (p. 1163)

Construction of contracts.—In American Trading Co. v. Steele, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 774, it was held in the case of a contract entered into in California that its construction would be governed by what the courts of that state had decided on the subject but that if they had not spoken then the federal court would exercise its judgment in the premises.

8. Corporate Existence (p. 1166)

Corporate powers.—The question of the powers of a corporation is one for the courts of the state in which it was organized to determine, and where the highest courts of that state have decided the question and it has become a rule of property, their decision is binding on the federal court sitting in that state. Kelley v. West Braddock Bridge Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 163.

11. Damages, Measure of (p. 1169)

The rule established by state decisions as to the measure of damages in an action for a breach of contract and the burden of proof to show any instigation will be followed by the federal courts. Isleworth Hotel Co. v. Ward, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 86.

Decisions of the state court that when profits are the direct and immediate fruit of the contract they may be recovered as damages for the breach thereof will be followed. Heyward v. Goldsmith, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 269 Fed. 946.

Damages for appropriating public lands.—In a suit to recover against a trespasser for oil taken from public lands in which it was contended that the law of the state controlled as to the amount recoverable, it has been said: "It is not necessary to determine the import of the state statutes and decisions relied on, as in this suit in equity by the government for redress for an alleged unlawful appropriation of part of the public domain the relief grantable is not determined by local laws or rules of decision, but by general principles, rules, and usages of equity having uniform operation in federal courts, wherever those courts are sitting as courts of equity. The public domain is not at the mercy of state legislation or decisions." Mason v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 135; Norvell v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 142.

14. Deeds, Mortgages and Leases of Realty b. Mortgages (p. 1175)

In general.—Where the question relating to a mortgage is one of general jurisprudence the federal courts are not bound by the state decisions but will require and determine what is the correct rule. In re Roth, (N. D. Ohio 1920) 272 Fed. 516.

d. Effect of State Statute (p. 1176)

The decision of the highest court of a state as to the effect of a statute relating to the right of redemption from a foreclosure sale is held to govern a decision in federal court. McCutchen v. Union Trust Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 586.

16. Evidence and Witnesses

b. Effect of State Statutes Generally (p. 1177)

To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original annotation, see Crittenden v. Widrevitz, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 871.

n. Commercial Paper (p. 1188)

The provisions of the Negotiable Instruments Law of New York as to the burden of proof in the case of a person claiming to be a holder in due course has been held applicable in the federal courts. Crittenden v. Widrevitz, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 871.

19. Guaranty Contracts (p. 1191)

In an action by the United States on a bond given by a contractor, the recovery is limited to the penalty named in the bond and cannot include interest where by the law of the state where the bond and contract were made, interest is not recoverable. U. S. v. Garland, (D. C. Del. 1921) 271 Fed. 14.

26. Limitation of Actions

b. Suits in Equity (p. 1204)

General rule stated.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Tilden v. Barber, (D. C. N. J. 1920) 268 Fed. 587.

While the statute of limitations prescribed by a state do not apply to suits in equity in the federal courts yet such statutes are generally followed by analogy in cases in equity where there is no showing on either side that to follow or not to follow the statute would be inequitable. Warner v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 661.

Suits by trustee in bankruptcy.—A suit by a trustee in bankruptcy to avoid an alleged fraudulent transfer by the bankrupt is held to be subject to the state statute of limitation. Davis v. Willey, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 397.

c. Proceedings in Admiralty (p. 1206)

A state statute limiting the time for bringing an action for libel, slander, assault, battery, false imprisonment, seduction or for injury to or for the death of one caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another or by a depositor against a bank for the payment of a forged or raised check, has no application to a libel filed in an admiralty court for the recovery of civil damages, it being declared that the foregoing provision has no application to a libel filed in an admiralty court, containing the plaintiff's allegations as a basis for the recovery of civil damages, in so far as the word "libel" therein mentioned is concerned, but to libels based upon defamatory remarks or acts intended or which tend to bring one into disrepute. Flynn v. Christenson, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 385.

29. Mortgages, Sales and Bailments of Personality (p. 1210)

"The federal courts necessarily adopt the views of the state court with respect to title to personal property." In re Irwin, (W. D. Pa. 1920) 268 Fed. 162.

The validity of a chattel mortgage is determined by the decision of the state court. In re Bonk, (E. D. Mich. 1920) 268 Fed. 1012; In re Mitchell Motor, etc., Co., (W. D. Wash. 1921) 274 Fed. 492.

The decisions of a state court as to what constitutes a sufficient delivery followed by an actual and continued change of possession of property covered by a chattel mortgage where the mortgage is not filed for record, are controlling in the federal court. In re Bonk, (E. D. Mich. 1920) 270 Fed. 657.

30. Municipal and Quasi Municipal Corporations (p. 1211)

Construction of ordinance.—The decision of the highest court of a state construing a municipal ordinance is binding on the federal courts. Schoenfeld v. Seattle, (W. D. Wash. 1920) 265 Fed. 726.

31. Negligence Questions

a. In General (p. 1215)

Where a state statute gives a mother the right to recover for the homicide of a child on whom she is dependent and who contributes to her support, the construction given by the state court to the statute that partial dependency and contribution is sufficient to authorize recovery by the mother of the full value of the life of the deceased child, even though the child's earnings are legally due to the father, is binding on the federal courts. Woodstock Operating Corp. v. Young, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 278.

Doctrine of "attractive nuisance."—The attractive nuisance doctrine is one of general law as to which the federal courts are not bound to follow the decisions of the state courts. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Fruchter, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 419.

38. Taxation

a. In General (p. 1226)

To the same effect as the second paragraph of the original annotation, see Lederer v. Pearce, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 497.

g. Exemptions from Taxation (p. 1229)

Widow's interest in husband's estate.—

The question as to what extent a widow's interest in her husband's estate is taxable, if at all, under the Federal Estate Tax Law, is to be determined by the statutes and rules of decision in the state where the decedent's property is located. Randolph v. Craig, (M. D. Tenn. 1920) 267 Fed. 993.

Where under the laws of the state a widow's right to support is not limited to a case of actual dependency on the decedent a charge therefor should be deducted as a "charge against the estate" under the Federal Estate Tax Law. Randolph v. Craig, (M. D. Tenn. 1920) 267 Fed. 993. The court said: "While it would apparently be true that in so far as the Federal Estate Tax itself is concerned, she would not be entitled to support during the administration of the estate—whatever the period—unless dependent upon the decedent, under the terms of clause a (1) of section 203, nevertheless her claim for a year's support should in any event be deducted as a charge against the estate allowed by the laws of Tennessee; there being nothing in the Tennessee statutes or decisions in reference to a year's support which limits the widow's right to a year's support to cases of actual dependency upon the decedent."

Where under the laws of the state the widow does not receive either her homestead, dower or year's support in succession to her husband or by transfer from him, but takes them under the statutory provisions vesting these rights in her independently of her husband and adversely to his estate, the property assigned to her as dower, homestead and year's support, not being transferred to her from her husband, is not a part of his estate upon which the tax is imposed by the Federal Estate Tax. Randolph v. Craig, (M. D. Tenn. 1920) 267 Fed. 993.

39. Telegraph Companies (p. 1232)

To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original annotation, see Friedlander v. Postal-Tel.-Cable Co., (N. D. Ohio 1921) 271 Fed. 954.

Mental anguish as damages.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Western Union Tel. Co. v. Speight, (1920) 254 U. S. 17, 41 S. Ct. 11, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing on other grounds (1919) 178 N. C. 146, 100 S. E. 351.

40. Title and Incidents of Realty Generally
a. Rule Stated (p. 1233)

To the same effect as the original annotation, see Guzzi v. Delaware, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 513; Pickens v. Merriam, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 1.

"Federal courts accept as conclusive the decisions of the highest court of the state with respect to the meaning and effect of the state Constitution and statutes upon state matters—such as holding realty within the state." Chicago v. S. Obermayer Co., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 237.

c. Application of Rule Generally (p. 1234)

The general rule as to the duty of the federal courts to follow the decisions of the highest court of the state in matters relating to the title and incidents of real property has been applied in numerous instances as follows: as to the title to the surface of a lot as against the owner of coal underlying such lot. Guzzi v. Delaware, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 513.

d. Water Rights (p. 1235)

Riparian rights.—Whether a conveyance made by a state of land abutting upon navigable water confers upon the grantee any right of interest in those waters or in the land under the same is a matter wholly of local law, upon which question the provisions of the constitution and statutes of the state and the decisions of its highest court are accepted by the federal Supreme Court as conclusive. Seattle v. Oregon, etc., R. Co., (1921) 255 U. S. 56, 41 S. Ct. 237, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

e. State Statutes Concerning Realty Generally (p. 1235)

The general rule as to following state decisions construing state statutes has been applied in case of a statute as to the transfer of homestead rights. Chisholm v. Creek, etc., Development Co., (E. D. Okla. 1921) 273 Fed. 589.

41. Wills

b. Decisions Constituting Rule of Property (p. 1238)

The construction given by the state courts to the community property laws of that state is binding on the federal court. Blum v. Wardell, (N. D. Cal. 1920) 270 Fed. 309.

Vol. VI, p. 18, sec. 913. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 561.]

Discontinuance of libel in personam.—A libellant may of right discontinue a suit in personam where although the pleadings have been filed no further steps have been taken and no interlocutory orders affecting rights have been made. Erie R. Co. v. Boston, etc., Canal Co., (D. C. Mass. 1921) 270 Fed. 876.

A replication is not entitled to be filed not being allowed under the fifty-first rule in admiralty. The Claveresk, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 276.

Impleading parties.—Equity rule 59 permitting the impleading of a third party in collision cases has been applied in almost numberless cases other than collision cases, and third parties have been thus impleaded, not necessarily at the instance of the libellant by way of amendment, but at the instance of the original respondent. The Minerva, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 266 Fed. 598.

I. CONSTRUCTION GENERALLY

4. Clauses in Act Construed

c. "As Near as May Be" (p. 26)

General doctrine.—"Undoubtedly this section provides substantial rights for the litigants upon both sides of an action at law. That general proposition probably has never been questioned, though sometimes the courts may differ as to what the practice and modes of proceeding of a particular state may be; but, when they are ascertained, the result is cared for, as near as may be, by the statute just cited, and known as the Conformity Act, as modified by section 918." Ellicott Mach. Corp. v. Vogt Bros. Mfg. Co., (W. D. Ky. 1920) 267 Fed. 934.

Discretion given to courts.—This section "expressly grants to the federal trial court power to make rules to 'regulate their own practice as may be necessary or convenient for the advancement of justice and the prevention of delays in proceedings.' There seems no way of reconciling these seemingly inconsistent provisions, unless through the effect of the 'as near as may be' clause. There is ample room to say that where, in the judgment of the federal nisi prius court, the adoption of a particular practice is necessary or convenient to meet the particular needs of that court, and when there is reasonable basis for that judgment, the 'as near as may be' clause will take effect, precise conformity will not be required, and the particular federal practice or rule will prevail." Ellicott Mach. Corp. v. Vogt Bros. Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 945.

III. EFFECT ON JURISDICTION OF FEDERAL COURTS

2. Equity Courts

a. General Doctrine (p. 30)

Where under state decisions it is a rule that in boundary cases, where the answer prays for affirmative relief by way of asking that the line described in the answer be adopted, the defendant waives any objection that he might have urged against the right of a court of equity to establish the controverted boundary, it has been declared that regarding the subject matter as belonging to a class where equity has jurisdiction, the federal court can conform to the rule of the state cases. Muck v. Weyerhaeuser Timber Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 469.

IV. APPLICABILITY IN GENERAL (p. 32)

In common law actions the conformity statutes require the practice, pleadings and procedure to follow the state practice. Anders v. Security Mut. L. Ins. Co., (E. D. Pa. 1920) 268 Fed. 677.

The state practice does not obtain in bankruptcy proceedings. In re Puget Sound Engineering Co., (W. D. Wash. 1920) 270 Fed. 353.

Manner in which judge performs duties.—The conformity statute does not apply to the manner in which the judge shall perform his personal duties on the bench. Ellicott Mach. Corp. v. Vogt Bros. Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 945, so declaring in a case involving the signing of the journal.

Regulations to be observed by clerk.—A regulation to be observed by the clerk in doing his work and which requires the minutes of the court as kept by him to be written out, read in an audible voice and signed by the judge on the order book is entirely outside of the practice and proceedings in a case inter partes. "The parties to the action would have no control over these things. Our view was and clearly is that these provisions are not and were not intended to be embraced in the Code of Practice, which regulates the 'practice and pleadings in civil cases,' as between the parties thereto, within the contemplation of section 914, R. S." Ellicott Mach. Corp. v. Vogt Bros. Mfg. Co., (W. D. Ky. 1920) 267 Fed. 934.

V. APPLICABILITY IN PARTICULAR INSTANCES

10. Costs and Fees

a. In General (p. 34)

In the federal courts, in cases at law, the state allowances may be followed where no rule has been established by Congress. Warner v. Liquid Carbonic Co., (N. D. Ga. 1921) 270 Fed. 294.

13. Criminal Cases (p. 36)

In general.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Holmes v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 96.

24. Judgments and Proceedings Subsequent to

a. In General (p. 40)

Signing of judgments by judge.—The signing of a judgment on a separate paper which is then passed to the clerk by the judge to be entered on the order book has been held to be "as near as may be" in conformity with the Kentucky "practice, pleadings and forms and modes of proceeding" in civil cases. Ellicott Mach. Corp. v. Vogt Bros. Mfg. Co., (W. D. Ky. 1920) 267 Fed. 934.

c. Motions for New Trials (p. 42)

A restricted new trial where the whole case is not resubmitted to the jury as authorized by a state statute is beyond the power of a federal court to order. McKeon v. Central Stamping Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 385.

d. Bill of Exceptions (p. 42)

"Bills of exceptions in the federal courts are not governed by the rules governing appeals in the courts of record of the state within which the federal courts are held. The Act of Conformity of June 1, 1872, c. 255, § 5, has no application to bills of exceptions." Rothman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 31.

e. Vacating or Modifying Judgments (p. 43)

In West Side Irrigating Co. v. U. S., (E. D. Wash. 1920) 264 Fed. 538, it was held that where under the statute of a state a judgment may be vacated within one year, the decision of the state courts that the party must act with diligence even within the year, while not absolutely controlling are fundamental.

28. Limitation of Actions (p. 48)

The state statute of limitations has been held to apply in an action under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. Jones v. West Pub. Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 563.

32. Nonsuit

a. Voluntary Nonsuit (p. 49)

In the Eastern District of Michigan it has been held that in an action at law in a federal court sitting within the State of Michigan a plaintiff has the same right to take a nonsuit as he has in the courts of that state.

McNichol v. Consumers' Power Co., (E. D. Mich. 1921) 274 Fed. 478.

33. Parties

a. Parties Plaintiff (p. 50)

The question in whose name an action is to be brought is one of procedure in which the federal courts will follow the local state practice. New York Evening Post Co. v. Chaloner, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 285 Fed. 204. Petition for writ of certiorari dismissed. (1920) 252 U. S. 591, 40 S. Ct. 396, 64 U. S. L. ed. 731. See also (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 260 Fed. 335.

State as party.—The decision of the state court to the effect that the state is the party plaintiff would bind the federal courts in so far as it was a construction of the statutes or of practice or pleadings, but the defendant may where removal is sought challenge such decision in the federal courts through invoking the Fourteenth Amendment. Ohio v. Swift, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 141.

36. Pleadings

b. Construction of Pleadings (p. 53)

The construction of pleadings is a matter of state law. Connolly v. Standard Oil Co., (D. C. R. I. 1920) 264 Fed. 383.

g. Demurrers to Pleadings (p. 56)

Where under state practice general grounds of demurrer are insufficient in law in a state court, they will be so regarded in the federal court. Randolph v. Craig, (M. D. Tenn. 1920) 267 Fed. 993.

49. Writs and Process

b. Mode and Sufficiency of Service (p. 61)

General doctrine.—To the same effect as the third paragraph of the original annotation, see Esteve v. Harrell, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 382.

Power of court.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Mankin v. Bartley, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 466; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 58.

Purpose.—"In its conception that statute was designed for the sole purposes of saving the time of the court and the costs to the litigants. As originally enacted in 1813 (3 Stat. 21) it was one of three sections in an act dealing with costs. Under its beneficent provisions, not only may cases affecting the same property, title, res, or fund be thus brought together and tried at one time, but cases unrelated in right or liability, but connected by some common controlling issues or facts, which can conveniently be heard and determined by a jury or a chancellor at one hearing." Adler v. Seaman, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 828.

The propriety of any consolidation order must be determined by the situation of the cases at the time the order is made. Adler v. Seaman, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 828.

Consolidation discretionary.—The power to consolidate two cases pending in the same court rests in the sound discretion of the court. Woodstock Operating Corp. v. Young, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 278.

"Consolidation is in no wise mandatory, but the advisability of such an order is based upon the practical administration of justice and the economical and convenient disposition of the cases in the trial court. It is therefore a matter of judicial discretion. But the statute has in terms limited the exercise of this discretion to cases 'of a like nature or relative to the same question'; also this discretion, even within the above limits, is judicial, not arbitrary, and there must be some indication of 'avoiding unnecessary costs or delay in the administration of justice,' and some basis that such action is 'reasonable' as required by the statute. Since consolidation of independent cases is lawful only under this statute, litigants are deprived of legal rights if their causes are consolidated outside the terms of the statute, to their injury, and the appellate courts of the United States have often examined orders of consolidation." Adler v. Seaman, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 828.

When consolidation proper.—If the two suits are "of a like nature, or relative to the same question," the court might simply consolidate them, unless it is clearly and conclusively evident that such action would not avoid unnecessary costs or delay and would be unreasonable as affecting rights of some of the parties. To determine these matters requires, first, examination and comparison of the two actions; and, second, an examination of the status of each at the time the order of consolidation was made. Adler v. Seaman, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 828.

Effect of consolidation.—"Although the result of consolidation is merely to try cases together, necessitating separate verdicts and judgments or separate decrees (Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Hillmon, 145 U. S. 285, 12 Sup. Ct. 909, 36 L. Ed. 706; Toledo, etc., R. R. Co. v. Trust Co., 95 Fed. 497, 36 C. C. A. 155 [C. C. A. 6th Circuit, opinion by Judge Lurton]), yet it is true that sometimes independent suits bear a relation to each other, such that, when they are properly consolidated, the several controversies assume certain natural attitudes toward each other, such as 'in the nature of' a cross-bill or intervention, and it is then convenient to so regard them in the subsequent conduct of the litigation (Sioux City Terminal R. R. and Warehouse Co. v. Trust Co., 82 Fed. 124, 27 C. C. A. 73 [C. C. A. 8th Circuit]; Lant v. Kinne, 75 Fed. 636, 637, 21 C. C. A. 466 [C. C. A. 6th Circuit]; Central Trust Co. v.

Bridges, 57 Fed. 753, 6 C. C. A. 539 [C. C. A. 6th Circuit]; McBee v. Ry. Co., [C. C.] 48 Fed. 243, 245; but this is purely a rule of convenience, and does not result in actually making such parties defendants or interveners in the other suit." Adler v. Seaman, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 828.

Separate actions by separate plaintiffs.—Where separate actions are brought under a state statute to recover damages for the homicide of a son and they arise out of the same transaction and involve in a large measure the same evidence it is within the discretion of the court to consolidate them. Woodstock Operating Corp. v. Young, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 278.

Trials for contempt.—A court may order separate actions for repeated violations of an injunction to be consolidated for trial and to direct the trial of all the charges against the defendant to a single jury. Jennings v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 399.

Consolidation improper.—A consolidation was held to be error under the following conditions. One was a proceeding by a dissatisfied stockholder against the corporate officers and directors, seeking accounting and satisfaction for past wrongdoing as such, the prevention of future wrongdoing or action prejudicing the corporate welfare by the removal of such officers and directors and election of a new board, and escape from onerous contracts fraudulently consummated by such persons. If necessary to protect the corporation from harm during this proceeding, a receiver was sought. The other prayers for receiver were purely as an aid in executing a decree found in complainant's favor. The other case was a bill by a bondholder under a junior mortgage. It alleged default in payment of a senior mortgage on part of the railway system, insolvency of defendants, threatened foreclosure or improper increase of indebtedness prior to complainant's lien, default under another prior mortgage and danger of foreclosure, danger of dismemberment of a harmonious street railway system, resulting in large loss in value in the security behind complainant's bonds and injury to the public. The prayer was for a receiver, a marshaling of assets, and a declaration of rights of respective lien holders and creditors. The court declared: "No application by the receiver or by any one else to have him made party to the Seaman suit has been ruled upon or even filed in the Adler suit. Therefore, as to this proceeding for unlawful waste brought by Seaman, the status of the two cases at the time of the order of consolidation was that a stockholder had a suit against certain corporate directors for unlawful waste of corporate funds, and in another proceeding a creditor had obtained a general receivership of that corporation. The only place where the two cases in any wise touch is that, if Seaman can legally continue the prosecution of his suit after the qualification of the Adler receiver, any sum recovered by him would be for the benefit of the corporation, and would pass as assets thereof to the receiver. This is no basis for any consolidation of the two cases. No economy of expense or of time, and no convenience in the conduct of the suits, can arise from such combination. If the receiver is not made a party to the Seaman suit, that suit is outside the scope of the Adler receivership, which is in no wise affected thereby, unless and until Seaman successfully terminates his action and has a fund to turn over to the receiver. The receiver has not been made a party, and as yet Seaman has no such fund; therefore there was no ground to connect the suits, and no proper purpose is served thereby." Adler v. Seaman, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 828.

Order as appealable.—Although it is not said that as a general rule an order of consolidation is not appealable yet the right of appeal has been recognized where the consolidation would tend to deprive one of the parties of his rights of the ordinary litigant. Adler v. Seaman, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 828.

I. IN GENERAL (p. 94)

The power to amend a bill of exceptions, like the power to allow the bill in the first instance, cannot be exercised after the court below has lost its power over the case, as when the term has expired without control of the case having been reserved. Ulmer v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 176.

II. WHAT CONSTITUTES BILL OF EXCEPTIONS

To the same effect as the second paragraph of original annotation, see Hanson v. Cole, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 67.

III. SIGNATURE

2. Agreement of Counsel (p. 95)

Where a bill of exceptions was not signed by the judge no exception at the trial as to which error was assigned is brought before the court in appeal though the parties stipulated that the transcript of record had been agreed on as true. Allemanni v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 523.

3. Time of Signing (p. 95)

The bill of exceptions must be signed within the term at which the judgment is entered unless during the term the time is extended or unless it is signed thereafter by consent of the parties previously given. Ulmer v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 176.

Signing after expiration of term.—In Ulmer v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 176, it was said: "Consent of the parties, given during the term, may be sufficient authority for the signing of the bill after the term expired. Waldron v. Waldron, 156 U. S. 361, 378, 15 Sup. Ct. 383, 39 L. ed. 453. But in Blisse v. United States, supra, we stated our opinion to be that consent of the parties, even if expressly given, would be ineffective if given after the writ of error had removed the case into this court."

The power to settle the evidence which is a statement of the evidence and not a bill of exceptions is not lost by the district court in an equity appeal although there has been an approval of the bond on appeal and a citation has been signed. Struett v. Hill, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 247.

5. How Signed (p. 96)

Signing by other than trial judge.—Where a bill of exceptions is signed by one who was not the trial judge he should in doing so expressly state in his certificate the reason why he, and not the trial judge, allowed and signed the bill. Unless this is done the court on appeal does not know by what right one who did not try the case came to allow the bill. Ulmer v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 176.

VI. DISABILITY (p. 97)

Absence from district.—The absence of the trial judge from the district is not a disability within the meaning of the statute so as to allow the bill to be allowed and signed by another judge who is within the district. Ulmer v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 176.

VII. OBSERVANCE OF RULES OF COURT (p. 98)

The court may refuse to strike portions of a bill of exceptions although they were not prepared and submitted as required by the rules of court. Czizek v. Western Union Tel. Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 223.

The common-law bill of exceptions is not the proper way to present the evidence in an equity appeal. The practice is regulated by the equity rules adopted by the Supreme Court. Struett v. Hill, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 247.

It is said that rule 75 was adopted with due consideration of the existing practice by which appeals were claimed and permitted, regardless of the expiration of terms, and that the trial court has power to approve and direct the filing of the statement of evidence, although the term has expired when the decree was rendered, and no order has been entered carrying the subject-matter over until the next term. Struett v. Hill, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 247.

VIII. PLEADINGS

1. In General (p. 105)

Supplemental bill.—"Granting or refusing leave to file a supplemental bill is usually in the discretion of the trial court, and not reversible on appeal, except for abuse of discretion." Rosemary Mfg. Co. v. Halifax Cotton Mills, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 363.

Vol. VI, p. 111, sec. 955. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 601.]

- I. Survival of action.
- II. Revival of action.

I. SURVIVAL OF ACTION (p. 112)

In general.—As a general rule the death of a party pending a writ of error furnishes no ground for the abatement of a suit. Roberts v. Criss, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 296, 11 A. L. R. 698.

II. REVIVAL OF ACTION (p. 113)

Laches of representative.—Under rule 19 of the Circuit Court of Appeals, which provides that whenever, pending a writ of error or appeal in this court, either party shall die, the proper representatives of such deceased party may voluntarily come in and be admitted parties to the suit, and thereupon the case shall be heard and determined as in other cases, and that, if the representatives of the deceased do not become parties to the action, the other party may suggest the death on the record, and on motion obtain an order that, unless they do become parties to the action within sixty days, the party moving for the order, if plaintiff in error, shall be entitled to open the record and on hearing have the judgment reversed, if it be erroneous, it was held that, where the executrix of the defendant never complied with the privilege accorded to her by the plaintiff in error to become a party within the specified period, or at any time thereafter, she was not and never had been a party to the action, and her counsel was without right to file a brief or be heard on the argument, and she was without right to costs if the court should conclude that there was no reason why the judgment should be reversed. Roberts v. Criss, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 296, 11 A. L. R. 698.

Vol. VI, p. 124, sec. 648. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 389.]

- V. Province of court and jury.
- VII. Power to direct verdict.

V. PROVINCE OF COURT AND JURY (p. 127)

In general.—Where in an action on an insurance policy the assessment of damages depends upon the interested testimony of a plaintiff, both as to quantum of goods destroyed and the value of such goods, the credibility of the witnesses, without whose evidence the plaintiff made out no case at all, is eminently for the jury, and the direction of a verdict for the full amount claimed has been held to be error. Fire Ass'n v. Mechlowitz, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 322.

VII. POWER TO DIRECT VERDICT (p. 128)

"The rule of directed verdicts is, in the courts of the United States, usually put as requiring a direction when a verdict, if rendered the other way, would necessarily be set aside." Fire Ass'n v. Mechlowitz, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 322.

Where both parties move for a directed verdict, whatever controverted issues of fact are revealed by the record are for the purposes of the appellate court conclusively determined in favor of the party whose motion was granted. Tanner v. Ballard, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 671.

In general.—A plaintiff in error cannot challenge the sufficiency of these special findings to meet the requirements of this section, where without these findings there would be no question presented that the court would have authority to review. Mayes v. Jones, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 121.

Findings of fact.—While a finding of fact is elaborate in detail, and each paragraph thereof might have been separately numbered as a separate finding, yet, where the failure to do this cannot possibly prejudice the rights of the defendant in error, it is of no importance, especially where it also further appears that each and all of these facts so found by the court to be established by the testimony are essential to a full and complete understanding of the issues joined by the pleading in the case, and particularly the conduct and management of the business to which these issues relate. Mayes v. Jones, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 121.

Where a jury trial has been waived and issues of law and fact submitted to the court it is a matter entirely for the discretion of the court whether to make special findings of fact. U. S. v. One Diamond Necklace, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 696.

Vol. VI, p. 130, sec. 1. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 557.]

Conclusiveness of findings.—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original annotation, see The Lake Monroe, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 474; The Perseus, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 633.

Where an issue of fact was presented by oral testimony of men whose mien and bearing justly had weight with the judge who saw them, the appellate court will not disturb the resultant findings. Donovan v. New York Trap Rock Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 308.

Costs as subject of review.—While mere questions of costs are not appealable, a claim for wharfage by a navigation company inserted by the marshal in his bill of costs, is in no sense costs but an unadjudicated claim against the proceeds of the ship, and an order refusing its payment out of a fund in the registry is appealable. The St. Paul, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 265.

Vol. VI, p. 139, sec. 17. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 279.]

Review of action as to restraining order.—Although a restraining order was improperly granted and lacked compliance with some of the provisions of this section, yet the court will not examine into the question where criticism has become moot, such order having been superseded by a preliminary injunction and that in turn by a permanent injunction, and no injury appears to have been done by the restraining order. King v. Weiss, etc., Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 257.

Vol. VI, p. 140, sec. 19. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 279.]

Terms of order.—An injunction against strikers which enjoins not only threats and intimidation against the workmen but also "all unlawful interference" with them is not advisable, since it leaves the door open for controversy both as to what is interference and what is unlawful. It is said that doubtless words of general import must sometimes be used so as to give an order its due breadth, but that in most cases more distinctive words than these can be selected and the defendants thereby be more accurately informed as to what is forbidden. King v. Weiss, etc., Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 257. See also Davis v. Henry, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 261.

Constitutionality.—This section is not unconstitutional as restricting the powers of courts of equity to issue injunctions in labor disputes between employers and employees. Kinloch Telephone Co. v. Local Union No. 2, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 265 Fed. 312. The court said:

"Much of the argument presented in favor of the unconstitutionality urged is directed against the lawfulness of a secondary boycott. This point is not involved in the instant case. Judge Manton, then District Judge, and now Judge of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, held that this act is constitutional. Duplex Co. v.

Deering (D. C.) 247 Fed. loc. cit. 196. The Duplex Case went by appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals, and was there affirmed. Duplex Co. v. Deering, 252 Fed. 722, 164 C. C. A. 562. While no reference is made in the carrying opinion (there was a dissenting opinion by Judge Rogers) to the question of the unconstitutionality of the act, I take it that, if the point was urged, it was deemed of no sufficient moment to render necessary a discussion of it. Since the rule is that the statute attacked as unconstitutional must be held valid till all reasonable inferences of its goodness are resolved against it (State v. Baskowitz, 250 Mo. 82, 156 S. W. 945, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 477; State v. Thompson, 144 Mo. 314, 46 S. W. 191), I feel constrained to follow the Duplex Case, supra, till some court superior to this shall rule the matter.

"Counsel for plaintiffs, to sustain their right to injunctive relief herein, rely largely upon the case of Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. v. Mitchell, 245 U. S. 229, 38 Sup. Ct. 65, 62 L. ed. 260, L. R. A. 1918C, 497, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 461. While the Hitchman Case was not decided until three years after the Clayton Act took effect, it was, however, begun seven years before the passage of that act. If the provisions of the Clayton Act passed under judgment in the Hitchman Case, then plaintiffs have, upon the facts proven, clearly shown themselves entitled to the injunction for which they pray. But I cannot bring myself to conclude that the Supreme Court of the United States held the Clayton Act in judgment when it ruled the Hitchman Case. Judge Trieber seemingly held to the view that the Hitchman Case did not consider the Clayton Act. Kroger Grocery Co. v. Retail Clerks, supra. In his view I am constrained to acquiesce.

"Many cases are urged upon my attention, which hold substantially to the view, so forcefully expressed in Atchison v. Gee, (D. C.) 139 Fed. 582, that there can be no such thing as peaceful picketing, any more than there can be 'chaste vulgarity, or peaceful mobbing, or lawful lynching'; but of all such cases it is only necessary to say that none of them held in judgment the provisions of the Clayton Act. See 24 Cyc. 838; Erdman v. Mitchell, 207 Pa. 79, 56 Atl. 327, 63 L. R. A. 534, 99 Am. St. Rep. 783; Franklin Union No. 4 v. People, 220 Ill. 355, 77 N. E. 176, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1001, 110 Am. St. Rep. 248.

"Being constrained to follow the fairly plain provisions of the Clayton Act, I am of opinion that this case is ruled by it, and, however strongly I may heretofore have entertained the view that, when there is committed an irreparable injury to property and when similar injury is clearly threatened and no adequate remedy at law exists, equity may grant relief by injunction, even as against employees, I am yet bound by this statute, which I deem it my plain duty to follow, even to the exclusion of these views."

Scope of section.—This section applies only to disputes between employers and employees and consequently does not prohibit the courts at the instance of a shipper from granting an injunction against labor unions or their members restraining them from interfering with interstate shipments through refusal to handle a shipment because brought to a dock by employees of a transfer company which employs both union and nonunion men. Buyer v. Guillian, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 65.

"Property right."—The right of a person to continue his business is a "property right" within the meaning of this section. King v. Weiss, etc., Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 257. The court said:

"We understand defendants' counsel also to take the position that, since section 20 of the Clayton Act prohibits an injunction, excepting in case of injury to property or property rights, the issue of the injunction was in conflict with this act, because the right of the plaintiff to continue its business, free from unlawful obstruction, was neither 'property' nor a 'property right.' There is no sufficient basis for this contention. The Clayton Act did not undertake to make new definitions of 'property' and 'property right.' It used these terms in their then accepted and well-understood definitions. It was dealing with the fact that between the recognized property right of the employer to conduct his business and the other recognized right of the employees to strike, more or less conflict would arise; and it was prescribing the kind and degree of injury to this employer's right which should be deemed rightly appurtenant to the employees conflicting right, and which should therefore not be deemed unlawful. No court has held, since the passage of the Clayton Act, so far as we find, that it was intended to forbid an injunction in aid of an employer's right to keep his business running, in any case where the injury to that right, which the defendants were inflicting, is beyond the limits which the act purports to authorize. That the right to prosecute a lawful business without unlawful obstruction is either property or a property right has always been recognized, and is at the foundation of equity jurisdiction in this entire class of cases."

"It is settled that the right of an employer to keep his business running is a property right under section 20 of the Clayton Act, notwithstanding the existence of a strike." Quinlivan v. Dail-Overland Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 56.

No adequate remedy at law.—Under this section employees may lawfully strike in violation of a contract with their employer, and may not be enjoined even though the strike results in irreparable injury to the employer without an adequate remedy at law for the redress of such injury. Kinloch Telephone Co. v. Local Union No. 2, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 265 Fed. 312.

Rights of striking employees.—In Kinloch Telephone Co. v. Local Union No. 2, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 265 Fed. 312, the court, in commenting upon the rights of striking employees under this section, said:

"Looking at this law even casually, it seems plain that any employee, by virtue of the provisions which I have quoted, may singly (that is, by himself or herself) or in concert with others (that is, by virtue of prearranged agreement) terminate any relation of employment. Any relation of employment would seem to connote and include any contract of employment; that is, an employment at will, or an employment for a definite contractual term, whether such term has or has not expired by lapse of time.

"Said act further provides that any person or persons, acting alone or together, may by peaceful means advise or persuade others—that is, any employee—to terminate such employment. In order to advise and persuade employees to terminate their employment, and in order to communicate or obtain, or for the purpose of communicating information, or obtaining information as to the existing situation, any person or persons may go to or attend any place to which he or she might have gone, if no labor dispute existed: Provided, he or she go in the same way in which he or she would have gone if no such dispute existed. And all such persons may, of course, peacefully assemble, pending such dispute, in the same manner in which any other citizens might assemble if no such dispute existed. Other provisions of this act are, I think, either so plain and clear as to call for neither interpretation nor exposition, or the same are not now involved in this case.

"These provisions, of course, do not confer any right to assemble about or to picket the shop or place of business of any former employer under such circumstances or in such numbers as to menace peace or produce intimidation by reason of the very fact of numbers. Neither does it permit any striker, or any person acting in concert with any striker, to use physical force or intimidation of any sort, or abuse, or duress, or any threat of physical force, either to the employer, or to the employees who are working, or to persons who are seeking employment of the employer, or to persons who have business, or who desire to transact business, with the employer. So much, I think, is clear from the provisions of the act itself, because, plainly the test therein of what may be done is what any ordinary citizen would have been permitted to do if no labor dispute existed. Stephens v. Telephone Co. (D. C.) 240 Fed. 759; Duplex Co. v. Deering (D. C.) 247 Fed. 192.

"'Peacefully,' as used in this act, means peacefully in the strict sense of that word; for it will be noted that the words 'peacefully' and 'lawfully' run as red threads through the very warp and woof of this act. Surely no persons can be said to act peacefully, when they crowd the streets, sidewalks, or alleys near to or adjacent to the shop or place of business under their displeasure and, though silent, threaten and intimidate by numbers. Neither can a person be within the peace or the protection of this statute when he or she, singly or with others, in furtherance of a strike, uses threats, abuse, profane or obscene language, physical force, or other intimidation to any employer, or to his agents, servants, or employees, present or potential, or to the customers, or agents and employees of customers, present or potential."

What constitutes lawful and peaceful actions by strikers.—Regarding the test as to what constitutes lawful and peaceful acts by striking employees, the court in Langerberg Hat Co. v. United Cloth Hat, etc., Makers, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 266 Fed. 127, said:

"Lately, this court, in the case of Kinloch Telephone Co. et al. v. Local Union No. 2 of International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 265 Fed. 312, took occasion to discuss some of the things which cannot lawfully be done by striking employees as well as many of the things which those employees may lawfully do. In that case I took occasion to lay down a test of what is lawful and what is peaceful, by stating that to my mind the plain and simple language of the Clayton Act (38 Stat. 730) itself discloses what is lawful and what is peaceful; conversely, 'he who runs may read' what is unlawful and what is unpeaceful.

"The test which I stated in that case, and which I now repeat (and that test is almost in the language of the Clayton Act itself) could be put in the form of a question: Would any ordinary citizen be permitted to do the acts complained of in this case, if no strike, or labor dispute, existed? If he could do those things, absent a strike, then, of course, he could do them, present a strike; in other words, if any ordinary citizen, when no strike exists, can do a given act against the rights, person, peace, or property of another, and not commit thereby a breach of the peace, or an act of lawlessness, then the striking employee can do the same act when there is a strike existing.

"Injunction, when brought by an employer against an employee reaches only such acts as fall without the pale of the test which I have stated above. In the face of so simple a rule, it is almost incomprehensible why men and women, possessing the capacity to reason from cause to effect, can so blind themselves with their own self-interests as to contend, in case of a strike, for the alleged right to outrageously violate the peace, person, property, and rights of others with whom their interests may for the time clash."

Legalizing secondary boycott.—Injunctive relief to a manufacturer against concerted action which members of labor organizations, standing in no employment relation with it, past, present, or prospective, have taken in aid of a strike in its factory in order to compel such manufacturer to unionize its factory, establish the closed shop, the eight-hour day, and the union scale of wages, by interfering with and restraining its interstate trade through coercive pressure upon actual or prospective customers, with the intent and result of causing them to withdraw patronage from such manufacturer for fear of loss or damage to themselves should they deal with it, may not be denied on the theory that such relief was forbidden, or that such action—the so-called secondary boycott—was legalized by the provisions of sec. 6 of this act (see Vol. 9, p. 737) that nothing in the Anti-trust Laws shall be construed to forbid the existence and operation of labor organizations, or to forbid their members from lawfully carrying out their legitimate objects, and of this section of that act, restricting the granting of injunctions in cases “between an employer and employees, or between employers and employees, or between employees, or between persons employed and persons seeking employment, involving, or growing out of a dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment,” and providing that none of the acts specified therein shall be considered or held to be violations of any law of the United States. Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Deering, (1921) 254 U. S. 443, 41 S. Ct. 172, 85 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1918) 252 Fed. 722, 164 C. C. A. 562) wherein it was further held that: The exceptional immunity from the operation of the Federal Anti-trust Laws, granted by the Clayton Act in cases “between an employer and employees, or between employers and employees, or between employees, or between persons employed and persons seeking employment, involving, or growing out of, a dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment,” must be confined to those who are proximately and substantially concerned as parties to an actual dispute respecting the terms or conditions of their own employment—past, present, or prospective. Moreover it was held that to instigate a sympathetic strike in aid of a secondary boycott cannot be deemed “peaceful and lawful” persuasion, within the meaning of the Clayton Act. The court said:

“The principal reliance is upon § 20. This regulates the granting of restraining orders and injunctions by the courts of the United States in a designated class of cases, with respect to (a) the terms and conditions of the relief and the practice to be pursued, and (b) the character of acts that are to be exempted from the restraint; and in the concluding words it declares (c) that none of the acts specified shall be held to be violations of any law of the United States. All its provisions are subject to a general qualification respecting the nature of the controversy and the parties affected. It is to be a ‘case between an employer and employees, or between employers and employees, or between employees, or between persons employed and persons seeking employment, involving, or growing out of, a dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment.’

“The first paragraph merely puts into statutory form familiar restrictions upon the granting of injunctions already established and of general application in the equity practice of the courts of the United States. It is but declaratory of the law as it stood before. The second paragraph declares that ‘no such restraining order or injunction’ shall prohibit certain conduct specified,—manifestly still referring to a ‘case between an employer and employees, . . . involving, or growing out of, a dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment,’ as designated in the first paragraph. It is very clear that the restriction upon the use of the injunction is in favor only of those concerned as parties to such a dispute as is described. The words defining the permitted conduct include particular qualifications consistent with the general one respecting the nature of the case and dispute intended; and the concluding words, ‘nor shall any of the acts specified in this paragraph be considered or held to be violations of any law of the United States,’ are to be read in the light of the context, and mean only that those acts are not to be so held, when committed by parties concerned in ‘a dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment.’ If the qualifying words are to have any effect, they must operate to confine the restriction upon the granting of injunctions, and also the relaxation of the provisions of the Anti-trust and other laws of the United States, to parties standing in proximate relation to a controversy such as is particularly described.

“The majority of the circuit court of appeals appear to have entertained the view that the words ‘employers and employees,’ as used in § 20, should be treated as referring to ‘the business class or clan to which the parties litigant respectively belong;’ and that, as there had been a dispute at complainant’s factory in Michigan concerning the conditions of employment there,—a dispute created, it is said, if it did not exist before, by the act of the Machinists’ Union in calling a strike at the factory,—§ 20 operated to permit members of the Machinists’ Union elsewhere,—some 60,000 in number,—although standing in no relation of employment under complainant, past, present, or prospective, to make that dispute their own, and proceed to instigate sympathetic strikes, picketing, and boycotting against employers wholly unconnected with complainant’s factory, and having relations with complainant only in the way of purchasing its product in the ordinary course of interstate commerce,—and this where there was no dispute between such employers and their employees respecting terms or conditions of employment.

"We deem this construction altogether inadmissible. Section 20 must be given full effect according to its terms as an expression of the purpose of Congress; but it must be borne in mind that the section imposes an exceptional and extraordinary restriction upon the equity powers of the courts of the United States, and upon the general operation of the Anti-trust Laws,—a restriction in the nature of a special privilege or immunity to a particular class, with corresponding detriment to the general public; and it would violate rules of statutory construction having general application and far-reaching importance to enlarge that special privilege by resorting to a loose construction of the section, not to speak of ignoring or slighting the qualifying words that are found in it. Full and fair effect will be given to every word if the exceptional privilege be confined—as the natural meaning of the words confines it—to those who are proximately and substantially concerned as parties to an actual dispute respecting the terms or conditions of their own employment, past, present, or prospective. The extensive construction adopted by the majority of the court below virtually ignores the effect of the qualifying words."

No indictment or information is essential under this section to the legal trial of one accused of contempt of court. Jennings v. U. S. (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 399.

Vol. VI, p. 145, sec. 2. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 136.]

A decision of the Supreme Court of Porto Rico on a question of procedure which is one of purely local law should not be reversed except on a clear showing of error. Garcia v. Hernandez, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 455.

Findings of fact in an action at law tried without a jury cannot be reviewed by a Circuit Court of Appeals in the exercise of its jurisdiction, under this section, to review judgments and decrees of the Porto Rico courts. Ana Maria Sugar Co. v. Quinones, (1920) 254 U. S. 245, 41 S. Ct. 110, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1918) 251 Fed. 499, 163 C. C. A. 493) wherein the court said:

"Under § 35 of the Act of April 12, 1900, chap. 191, 31 Stat. at L. 77, 85, 7 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. pp. 1259, 1275, the power to review final judgments and decrees of the supreme court of Porto Rico, then exercised exclusively by this court, was limited to matters of law. Garzot v. Rios de Rubio, 209 U. S. 283, 52 L. ed. 794, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 548; Gonzales v. Buist, 224 U. S. 126, 56 L. ed. 693, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 463; Rosaly v. Graham y Frazer, 227 U. S. 584, 57 L. ed. 655, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 333; Ochoa v. Hernandez y Morales, 230 U. S. 139, 57 L. ed. 1427, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1033; Porto Rico v. Emmanuel, 235 U. S. 251, 59 L. ed. 215, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 33. When that act was superseded by § 244 of the Judicial Code, writs of error and appeals from the insular supreme court became subject to the same regulations which governed appeals from the district courts of the United States. Thereby this court acquired power to review questions of fact in cases coming to it on appeal in equity or admiralty (Elzaburu v. Chaves, 239 U. S. 283, 285, 60 L. ed. 290, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 47); but in actions at law which are reviewable on writ of error, there was no right in this court to review the facts, although the case was tried without a jury (Behn v. Campbell, 205 U. S. 403, 407, 51 L. ed. 857, 858, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 502). The jurisdiction to review judgments and decrees of the Porto Rico courts conferred upon the circuit court of appeals by Act of January 28, 1915, chap. 22, 38 Stat. at L. 803, is subject to the same limitation. The cause of action here sued on is, in its nature, a legal one. The review should therefore have been prosecuted by writ of error instead of by appeal, although the case was tried without a jury. Oklahoma City v. McMaster, 196 U. S. 529, 49 L. ed. 587, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 324. By reason of § 4 of the Act of September 6, 1916, chap. 448, 39 Stat. at L. 727, Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1918, p. 421, this failure to adopt the proper appellate proceeding is no longer fatal. But the provision does not abolish the distinction between writs of error and appeals. It merely provides that the party seeking review shall have it in the appropriate way, notwithstanding a mistake in choosing the mode of review. Gauzon v. Compania General de Tabacos, 245 U. S. 86, 62 L. ed. 165, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 46."

Questions for review — Measure of damages.—Rulings of the supreme court of Porto Rico on the measure of damages, which were not assigned as errors in the Circuit Court of Appeals, and were not considered by it, cannot be insisted upon in the federal Supreme Court as grounds for reversal. Ana Maria Sugar Co. v. Quinones, (1920) 254 U. S. 245, 41 S. Ct. 110, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1918) 251 Fed. 499, 163 C. C. A. 493.

I. Necessity of compliance with statute.

1. In general.

II. When time begins to run.

III. Computation of time.

I. NECESSITY OF COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE

1. In General (p. 161)

The proviso in this section applies solely to cases for which at the time of the passage of the act a lesser period than six months for writs of error and appeals existed. Maple v. Union Pac. R. Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 89.

II. WHEN TIME BEGINS TO RUN (p. 162)

Where a judgment was entered on June 3, 1919, it was held that the period of six months expired with December 3, 1919, and that the subsequent signing on January 22, 1920, on the order book of the court, of the record of the proceedings of June 3, 1919, upon the special reasons stated therefor, in no way changed the rights of either of the parties. Ellicott Mach. Corp. v. Vogt Bros. Mfg. Co., (W. D. Ky. 1920) 267 Fed. 934.

Filing assignment of errors.—In Benjamin v. Buell, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 792, the appeal was prayed and allowed and bond filed within due time, but assignment of errors was not filed for more than six months after entry of decree, and appellee moved to dismiss the appeal on the ground that under rule 11 of the court the filing of the assignment of errors was jurisdictional, and unless filed within the statutory six months there was properly no appeal. The court said: "We think the rule itself negatives such conclusion, in that it provides that under certain circumstances the court may notice errors not assigned at all, and hence in its discretion may consider an appeal even without assignment of errors, thus clearly indicating that the provisions of the rule respecting assignment of errors are not jurisdictional. In Hultberg v. Anderson, 203 Fed. 853, 122 C. C. A. 171, this court held that, notwithstanding the rule requiring assignment of errors to be first filed, prior filing was not jurisdictional, and failing to so file did not vitiate an appeal otherwise properly taken. The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied."

III. COMPUTATION OF TIME (p. 163)

The court on appeal in computing the time is bound by the recitals in the record as to the time when the judgment was entered. Texas Co. v. American Trade Developing Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 670.

This section is not modified by section 6 of the Act of September 6, 1916 (1918 Supp. p. 422). Maple v. Union Pac. R. Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 89.

Vol. VI, p. 163, sec. 997. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 605.]

II. Allowance of writ of error.

IX. Records.

XI. Filing of assignment of errors.

II. ALLOWANCE OF WRIT OF ERROR (p. 165)

In general.—Ordinarily a writ of error is likely to be granted as of course, thereby leaving the question of its jurisdiction to be determined by the appellate tribunal, but when the question is raised before the district judge it is necessary for that judge to determine the right to the writ. Ellicott Mach. Corp. v. Vogt Bros. Mfg. Co., (W. D. Ky. 1920) 267 Fed. 934.

IX. RECORDS (p. 166)

Essential parts of record.—A motion for a new trial, being addressed to the discretion of the trial court, is not properly a part of the record for review under this section. Ford Motor Co. v. Hotel Woodward Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 625.

XI. FILING OF ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS (p. 167)

Criminal cases.—While it is the general rule that where there are no objections or exceptions to the evidence the judgment cannot be reviewed, yet there is a firmly established exception that in criminal cases, where the life or liberty of the citizen is at stake, the courts of the United States, in the exercise of a sound discretion, may notice and relieve from radical errors in the trial which appear to have been seriously prejudicial to the rights of the defendant, although the questions they present were not properly raised or preserved by objection, exception, request, or assignment of error. McNutt v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 670.

Opinion of court as basis of assignment of error.—The opinion of the court below cannot form the basis of an assignment of error and assignment of error based on such opinion presents nothing for review, as the opinion may be wrong and still the judgment be right. Stoffregen v. Moore, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 680.

Incorporation in record by bill of exceptions.—The rule that errors in rulings of law occurring in the course of the trial cannot be considered on writ of error unless incorporated into the record by bill of exceptions has no application when the errors assigned are wholly those alleged to have been committed by an intermediate appellate court, even though such court has, like the supreme court of Port Rico, power to review the evidence, to make new findings of fact thereon, and to enter such judgment as to it may seem proper. Ana Maria Sugar Co. v. Quinones, (1920) 254 U. S. 245, 41 S. Ct. 110, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1918) 251 Fed. 499, 163 C. C. A. 493.

Applicable to federal appeals only.—This and the following section have no application to appeals in state courts. Chance v. Hawkins, (Minn. 1921) 182 N. W. 911.

Vol. VI, p. 187, sec. 1000. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 612.]

X. Damages and costs.

XI. Judgment.

X. DAMAGES AND COSTS (p. 191)

Costs.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Oehring v. Fox Typewriter Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 682, 12 A. L. R. 718.

XI. JUDGMENT (p. 192)

District courts have power to render summary judgments on supersedeas bonds, statutory in form, given under this section and rule 13 of the Circuit Court of Appeals. Medusa Concrete Waterproofing Co. v. McCormick Waterproofing Portland Cement Co., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 981.

Vol. VI, p. 192, sec. 1001. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 615.]

Application.—While the section is collocated with others relating to appeals, its terms are broad enough to cover any process in law issuing from a district court. U. S. v. Kinney, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 264 Fed. 542.

United States interpleading on rule under state statute.—Where the United States filed a claim with the marshal for goods levied on, and the court on application of the marshal made absolute a rule for an interpleader under the Pennsylvania statute requiring a bond, it was held that the state act must be complied with. The court said:

"In section 1001, as applied to the present case, it is distinctly confined to the narrow sense of process in law issuing from a court by the United States, and therefore does not include all proceedings to which the United States is a party.

"Statutory interpleader proceedings in Pennsylvania are intended for the protection of the sheriff where he has made a levy upon goods and chattels as the property of the defendant in the execution and a third party claims property in the goods and chattels seized and taken in execution. If the court makes the rule absolute, the claimant, it is required, shall give bond that he shall maintain his title, in order to have the goods and chattels delivered to him.

"If 'process' is taken in a sufficiently broad sense to include the order making the rule absolute in the present case, it is still not process issuing from the court 'by the United States,' but process issuing from the court by the marshal. The issue may be framed and the interpleader proceedings may be prosecuted by the United States without the giving of the bond. The act is in the alternative. While under its provisions the sheriff, upon the claimant entering bond, is required to deliver the goods and chattels to him, yet if the claimant fails to give bond, but files his statement of title within the time specified in the act, the court may direct a sale of the goods and chattels, and the proceeds may be paid into court to await the determination of the issue. The money in court is substituted for the goods and chattels. If a bond is given, it is as security 'to answer in damages' if the claimant shall not maintain its title. If section 1001, therefore, applied to any process in a proceeding to which the United States is a party, the United States would not be required to give bond in the present case because it is an undertaking to answer in damages or costs. As section 1001, however, taking 'process' in its broadest sense, applies only to process issued from the court by the United States, the present proceeding is held not to be within its terms, and the plaintiff's motion for an order on the marshal directing the sale of the goods and chattels levied upon will be granted in accordance with the provisions of the Pennsylvania Interpleader Act." U. S. v. Kinney, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 264 Fed. 542.

II. WAIVING A JURY2. Waiver Without Written Stipulation (p. 208)

Where there is no written stipulation waiving a jury trial, the appellate court has no jurisdiction to review any question on a writ of error, except those which arise on the process, pleadings, or judgment. St. Louis, Southwestern R. Co. v. Road Imp. Dist. No. 2, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 524.

IV. FINDINGS AND REVIEW1. In General (p. 211)

The findings and judgment of the trial court, to which no objection or exception was taken, being to the effect that the defendant company was not engaged in interstate commerce, and therefore not subject to the provisions of the Federal Hours of Service Act, are conclusive on writ of error. U. S. v. Columbia, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 625.

The action of the parties in praying the court for binding instructions in their favor respectively on a matter involving a fact is equivalent to a joint request for a finding of fact by the court, and when the court, acting upon such request, directs the jury to find for one of the parties, both are concluded on its finding. Richman v. Mulcahy, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 269 Fed. 786.

The court's findings upon questions of fact, a jury having been waived, are not subject to revision by a reviewing court, if there was any evidence upon which such findings could be made. Mayes v. Jones, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 121; Kissel Motor Car Co. v. Walker, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 492.

Where a case is tried with a jury waived the findings of fact by the court have the force and effect of a jury's verdict, and if based on any supporting evidence are conclusive on the court reviewing by writ of error. Litchfield First Nat. Bank v. Pipe, etc., Supply Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 105.

Where there was no request by a party, before the court below rendered its judgment, to find facts in his favor, or to declare the law in his favor, and hence no ruling by the court, there is nothing for review by the appellate court, and the judgment of the court below will be affirmed. McClay v. Fleming, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 472.

Findings by referee.—The findings of fact by a referee are binding on appeal, the court being concerned only as to whether the conclusions of law are supported by such findings. Aronstam v. All-Russian Cent. Union, etc., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 460.

The District and Supreme Courts of Porto Rico, being familiar with the local law, their findings on the testimony and involving mixed law and fact, should not be disturbed by the Circuit Court of Appeals unless plainly wrong. Fordham v. Marrero, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 61.

2. General Findings (p. 212)

A general finding cannot be reviewed on a writ of error in the absence of exception to a ruling made in the progress of the trial. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Clement Grain Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 535.

In the absence of special findings of fact by the court below, its general finding has, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 649 [6 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 130], the effect of a verdict of a jury, and is conclusive upon all matters of fact, and there being no exceptions to rulings of law in the progress of the trial, the review in the Federal Supreme Court is, under this section, limited to the question of the sufficiency of the complaint. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co. v. Anderson-Tully Co., (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 524, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 261 Fed. 741.

Where the master and trial court agree on the findings of fact, they are conclusive on the appellate court, where there is any substantial evidence to support them. Midland Bridge Co. v. Houston, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 931.

The rule is said to be elementary that the findings of the master, confirmed by the court, are entitled to great weight, and will be followed, if there has been no serious mistake made in the consideration of the evidence, or in the application of the law to the facts found. Meyer v. Ritter, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 937.

The findings of fact by a chancellor are highly persuasive to the reviewing court, and will not be disturbed except for manifest error. Manning v. American Security, etc., Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 710.

A finding as to salvage will not be disturbed on appeal where there is sufficient evidence to warrant such finding. The Ferm, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 518.

3. General and Special Findings

a. In General (p. 214)

Refusal to make special findings.—On the trial of an action at law without a jury, it is not error for the court to refuse to make special findings. U. S. v. Columbia, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 625.

b. Effect (p. 215)

To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original annotation, see Walsh Constr. Co. v. Cleveland, (N. D. Ohio 1920) 271 Fed. 701.

To the same effect as the second paragraph of original annotation, see Huhn v. Strong-Scott Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 638; American Trading Co. v. Steele, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 774.

V. SPECIAL FINDINGS AND AGREED STATEMENTS OF FACTS

4. What Constitutes (p. 217)

The facts found by the Interstate Commerce Commission in a reparation proceeding were not so adopted by the district court in a suit upon the reparation order as to become special findings of fact by the court, which may be reviewed by the federal Supreme Court without exception taken, merely because the court found that the report and order of the commission constituted prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated, and entered judgment in favor of plaintiff for the amount of the order, with interest and attorneys' fees. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co. v. Anderson-Tully Co. (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 524, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 261 Fed. 741.

6. Effect (p. 219)

Special findings if they are sustained by any substantial evidence are conclusive on the circuit court of appeals. U. S. v. Pennsylvania, etc., Dock Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 839.

7. Questions Reviewable (p. 219)

To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original annotation, see Stoffregen v. Moore, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 680.

The Circuit Court of Appeals cannot consider "additional facts not found by the court" but must confine its consideration of the case solely to the special findings of fact made by the trial court. U. S. v. Pennsylvania, etc., Dock Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 839.

VI. RULINGS AND EXCEPTIONS

1. Necessity (p. 221)

To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original annotation, see Stoffregen v. Moore, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 680; Liberty Oil Co. v. Condon Nat. Bank, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 928; Northrup Nat. Bank v. Title Guaranty, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 952.

Where after a full hearing and submission of the issues of fact and law the court has filed its findings of fact and conclusion that judgment must be entered for defendant it is too late for the first time to take exceptions to the rulings of the court on the issues tried, where no requests for findings or for modifications of findings were made by the plaintiff until subsequent to the close of the trial. Such subsequent requests and rulings thereon are, like motions for new trials after verdicts and the rulings thereon, discretionary with the trial court, and are not subject to review in the federal appellate courts. U. S. v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 1.

4. Bill of Exceptions (p. 223)

The opinion of the court cannot take the place of a bill of exceptions. Texas Ranger Producing, etc., Co. v. Robinson, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 453.

Vol. VI, p. 224, sec. 701. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 458.]

Modifying judgment.—The Circuit Court of Appeals has the power to increase or diminish a salvage award made by the lower court. The High Cliff, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 202.

Vol. VI, p. 230, sec. 1011. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 624.]

I. Matters reviewable generally.
V. Questions of fact and evidence.

I. MATTERS REVIEWABLE GENERALLY (p. 230)

Under the provisions of this section the Circuit Court of Appeals has no authority to disturb the finding of the jury on a question of fact, if there is any evidence to sustain the verdict. Tate v. Baugh, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 892.

Where a jury trial was waived and special findings of fact were made in favor of the defendants, and where at the close of the testimony plaintiff in error made no request for a finding in its favor on the issues, and made no motion or request presenting to the trial court the question of law whether there was substantial evidence to sustain findings for the defendant, the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings is not open to review in the Court of Appeals. Pabst Brewing Co. v. E. Clemens Horst Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 909.

The Circuit Court of Appeals in cases involving life or liberty will not permit an error in procedure, even though it be substantial, to result in manifest injustice, with consequent loss of liberty or of life. Holland v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 244.

V. QUESTIONS OF FACT AND EVIDENCE

In general.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see American Film Co. v. Moye, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 419; Howard v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 301.

The findings made by the jury when they have some evidence to support them are controlling on appeal. Champion Spark Plug Co. v. Automobile Sundries Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 74.

If the verdict is sustained by any substantial evidence, it is conclusive upon the Circuit Court of Appeals, regardless of the claim of the plaintiff in error that upon all the evidence the verdict should have been one of acquittal upon this count. Rose v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 245.

The verdict of a jury when based on sufficient evidence cannot be disturbed on appeal because the evidence was contradictory. Glynn v. May, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 464.

Where each of the parties moves that the court direct a verdict, a judgment based thereon will not be disturbed, if there be evidence to support it. A conflict in evidence becomes immaterial. Lockhart v. Tri-State Loan, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 523.

Weight of evidence.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Ramsey v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 825; Railroads v. Reynolds, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 948; Di Preta v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 73; R. E. Hamilton, etc., Co. v. Moss-Jellico Coal Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 237; Degnan v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 291; Loblowski v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 294; Columbia Aid Assoc. v. Sprague, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 271 Fed. 381.

The Circuit Court of Appeals has no authority under this section to pass on the weight of the evidence. If there is any substantial evidence to support the verdict of the jury the judgment of the trial court must be affirmed. Davidson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 285.

An assignment of error on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence will not be further considered where the record is barren of any demurrer to the evidence or of any request for a directed verdict and from a careful consideration of the evidence it is clear that no injustice in the result was reached. Holland v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 244.

Where a defendant in a criminal case did not preserve his right to secure a review in the Circuit Court of Appeals of the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, that court will not exercise its discretion to reverse a judgment or grant a new trial where the evidence tends to corroborate admissions made by him and the court is convinced that no grave error was committed or that his punishment would be gross injustice. Sturtz v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 350.

Questions as to verdict being excessive.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see American Film Co. v. Moyer, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 419.

Where there was no error in the admission of testimony or in the charge of the court on the subject of damages the amount awarded is not reviewable. Ford Motor Co. v. Hotel Woodward Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 625.

Findings of fact by the trial court are not reviewable. Stoffregen v. Moore, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 680.

The general finding of the court below on the facts, a trial by jury being waived, is binding on appeal. U. S. v. One Diamond Necklace, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 696.

"It is the settled law of the federal courts that, where a chancellor has made his findings of fact and decree on conflicting evidence, they will be treated as presumptively correct by an appellate court, and will not be disturbed, unless an obvious error has intervened in the application of the law, or some serious mistake has been made in the consideration of the evidence." Porto Rico Min. Co. v. Conklin, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 570.

Findings of fact by a master, approved by the trial court, are well nigh controlling on appeal, if there is any substantial evidence to support them. Stockley v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 632.

Special findings.—The making of special findings of facts in an action at law tried by the court on a waiver of a jury is discretionary with the trial court, and its action in making such findings, in refusing to make requested findings, or in refusing to amend findings made, is not subject to exception, or to a subsequent review in a federal appellate court. U. S. v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 1.

Vol. VI, p. 234, sec. 10. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 428.]

I. DISPOSITION OF CASE ON APPEAL OR WRIT OF ERROR (p. 235)

Remand of admiralty case.—An appeal in an admiralty case being a new trial, the court will not send the case back in order that evidence may be given. The St. Johns N. F., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 673.

Remand with directions.—The court may remand a case with direction as to a reduction of the amount of the judgment. Walker v. Gulf, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 269 Fed. 885.

Where a petition for rehearing and for modification of the judgment of the court has been filed by the appellee, and it appears therefrom that the appellee does not desire to present additional testimony, nor does it wish a new trial, but is willing to stand on the record as made, and that it prefers, instead of a ruling granting a new trial, a decision reversing the judgment of the lower court and directing that court to enter judgment for the appellants, in order that it may carry the case to the Supreme Court of the United States without further delay, it has been held that the petition should be granted. National League, etc., v. Federal Baseball Club, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 681.

Mandate to add interest.—In case of a mandate to the district court directing it to modify its decree by the addition of interest to the amount recovered, it has been held that interest is to be added to the date of the original decree and not to the date of the mandate. American Surety Co. v. Riner, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 137.

Authority of District Court to allow amendment curing defect pointed out by appellate court.—A decision of a circuit court of appeals holding the bill insufficient, and for that reason alone reversing the decree below, by which such bill was held good on demurrer, and remanding the cause, is not final, but leaves the district court free, in its discretion, to allow an amendment to the bill, curing the defect. Wells v. Taylor, (1920) 254 U. S. 175, 41 S. Ct. 93, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1918) 249 Fed. 109, 161 C. C. A. 161.

II. Writ of error.

III. Certiorari.

II. WRIT OF ERROR (p. 412)

Validity of municipal ordinance.—Writ of error, not certiorari, is the proper method of reviewing in the federal Supreme Court the judgment of the highest court of a state in a suit in which the defeated party below drew in question the validity of a municipal ordinance and the statute sanctioning it, as construed and applied, upon the ground of their alleged repugnance to a federal statute, and the state court sustained their validity notwithstanding such contention. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Richmond, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 619, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

III. CERTIORARI (p. 413)

Review of judgment granting writ of prohibition.—Certiorari, not writ of error, is the only mode of reviewing in the Supreme Court the judgment of a state court granting a writ of prohibition over the objection that such prohibition would take property without due process of law, contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution. Bullock v. Florida, (1921) 254 U. S. 513, 41 S. Ct. 193, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming on other grounds (1919) 74 Fla. 321, 82 So. 866, 8 A. L. R. 232.

1918 Supp., p. 414, sec. 2.

Since this amendment has been declared unconstitutional a longshoreman has no right to compensation under a state act. Lawson v. New York, etc., Steamship Co., (1921) 148 La. 290, 86 So. 815.

1918 Supp., p. 421, sec. 4.

Distinction between writs of error and appeals as still existing.—The distinction between writs of error and appeals, so far as the scope of review in either proceeding is concerned, was not abolished by the provision of this section that the reviewing court shall not dismiss a writ of error because an appeal should have been taken, nor dismiss an appeal because a writ of error should have been sued out, but shall disregard such mistakes and take the action appropriate if the proper appellate procedure had been followed. This section merely provides that the party seeking review shall have it in the appropriate way, notwithstanding a mistake in choosing the mode of review. Ana Maria Sugar Co. v. Quinones, (1920) 254 U. S. 245, 41 S. Ct. 110, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1918) 251 Fed. 499, 163 C. C. A. 493.

Review of contempt proceeding.—Where, in a contempt proceeding against a company for having violated an injunction prohibiting it from manufacturing and selling certain infringing machines, the criminal aspect of the judgment of the lower court is reversed, the remainder of the judgment may be reviewed on a writ of error, in view of the provisions of this section. Wilson v. Union Tool Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 669. The court said: "Upon an appeal from an interlocutory decree, holding that Wilson patent No. 827,595, for an underreamer, was valid as to certain claims, and was infringed as to claims 9 and 19, and awarding an accounting, this court affirmed the decree of the District Court. A full history of the case is given in Union Tool Co. v. Wilson, 249 Fed. 736, 161 C. C. A. 646. Thereafter, in contempt proceedings instituted in the District Court, the Union Tool

Company was held to have violated the injunction issued in Union Tool Company v. Wilson, supra, by having manufactured, offered for sale, and sold two types of underreamers, neither of which was substantially or even colorably different from the respective devices described in the injunctive order of the court, the manufacture, sale, and use of which underreamers were inhibited, and that the Tool Company, since the issuance and service of the injunction, had offered for sale and sold extra, spare, and repair parts and elements for and to be used with its device, sold prior to the issuance and service of the injunction. The court, however, purged the corporation of contempt in the matter of sales of repair parts, but made the order without prejudice to the right of Wilson to renew his application. The company was fined $5,000, out of which sum, when paid, the clerk of the court was authorized to pay over to the complainant (Wilson) $2,500 as a reasonable portion of the expenses incurred by the complainant in the contempt proceeding, and the court ordered that if, upon execution, the fine was not paid, the president of the Tool Company, Double, should stand committed to jail and be confined until the fine was paid. Writ and cross-writ of error were sued out, and upon the writ brought by the Union Tool Company and Double, to review the judgment of conviction, this court reversed the clearly punitive portion of the decree of the District Court, but affirmed that portion which imposed a fine and directed that the fine imposed should be paid to the complainant to cover his costs. Union Tool Co. et al. v. United States et al., 262 Fed. 431, — C. C. A. —. By the cross-writ now before us we are to review that portion of the judgment of the District Court wherein the Tool Company was purged of contempt. The Tool Company, however, first questions our jurisdiction, and contends that appeal, not writ of error, is the proper remedy. Inasmuch as the contempt proceeding had two aspects, criminal and civil, the criminal dominated, and in seeking review the Tool Company properly sued out writ of error. Matter of Christensen Engineering Co., 194 U. S. 458, 24 Sup. Ct. 729, 48 L. Ed. 1072. But as both the punitive and remedial phases were before the District Court, and both were considered, both may be reviewed upon writ of error. Proudfit L. L. Co. v. Kalamazoo L. L. Co., 230 Fed. 120, 144 C. C. A. 418; Krepplik v. Couch Patents Co., 190 Fed. 565, 111 C. C. A. 381. It would be strange if, merely because there was a reversal of the criminal aspect of the judgment, the party in whose favor the remedial order was affirmed should now be denied relief, and thus be obliged to proceed anew by another procedure. Such a ruling would be out of accord with section 4 of the act to amend the Judicial Code, approved September 6, 1916 (39 Stat. 726), which provides that—'No court having power to review a judgment or decree rendered or passed by an other shall dismiss a writ of error solely because an appeal should have been taken, or dismiss an appeal solely because a writ of error should have been sued out, but when such mistake or error occurs it shall disregard the same and take the action which would be appropriate if the proper appellate procedure had been followed." We therefore deny the motion to dismiss."

1918 Supp., p. 422, sec. 6.

This section in terms applies to the Supreme Court only. Maple v. Union Pac. R. Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 89.

This section does not modify the provisions of section 11 of the Act of March 3, 1891 (6 Fed. Stat. Ann. p. 161). Maple v. Union Pac. R. Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 89.

1919 Supp., p. 231. [New trials, etc.]

Construction.—It is said of Jud. Code, sec. 269, as amended: "It means that a judgment should not be reversed for any reason that does not affect the substantial rights of the parties, even though there be a technical ground for doing so. No warrant is afforded by it for holding that a party who assigns one reason in the court below for his objection to an instruction may urge an entirely different one in this court and have it considered." Standard Oil Co. v. Allen, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 645.

Effect of amendment.—"The amendment relates only to the hearing and determination of a case which is pending in a court. It has no reference to the preliminary steps by which a case is brought into an appellate court, nor does it affect the question of the jurisdiction of a court, or enlarge the power of an appellate court to entertain appeals or writs of error. It does not make appealable a judgment which, before the enactment of the amendment, was not appealable. It deals only with the examination of a record which is lawfully before a court." Rumsey v. New York L. Ins. Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 554.

This amendment has not in criminal cases extended the power in an appellate court beyond that which it formerly asserted and exercised. Katz v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 157.

Necessity of exceptions.—In Rosen v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 271 Fed. 651, it was said: "We shall go into this case more fully than the record required, and in doing so we wish it understood that this case is not to be regarded as a precedent binding this court to examine into assignments of errors where no exceptions have been reserved. In a proper case we may consider errors not excepted to and which are not assigned for error. But we do not understand that Congress in passing the act of February 26, 1919 (40 U. S. St. at L. pt. 1, c. 48, p. 1181), intended that cases could be reviewed in the appellate courts without regard to the taking of exceptions and the usual assignments of error. Whatever that act may mean, it certainly was not intended, among other things, to relieve counsel from the necessity of calling the attention of a trial judge to his mistake at the time an erroneous instruction or ruling is given in order that he may correct it then and there and avoid the necessity of setting a verdict aside and securing a new trial if a conviction improperly follows."

A written stipulation or agreed statement of facts as to what occurred at a trial cannot be substituted for a bill of exceptions, though it consists of a transcript of the reporter's notes made during the trial. The "record" which this section contemplates is that which is legally the record and it is in only such a record that the court is required to disregard technical errors. Rosen v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 271 Fed. 651.

Nonprejudicial errors.—The practice prevailing in the courts of the United States forbids the reversal of a judgment in a criminal case for errors which do not prejudice. Dierkes v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 75.

Technical errors not affecting the substantial rights of the parties are not grounds for new trial under this section as amended by L. 1919, ch. 48. Twenty-One Mining Co. v. Original Sixteen-to-One Mine, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 469.

Admission of evidence.—A nonprejudicial error in the admission of stenographers' notes is not ground for reversal under this amendment. Sneerson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 268.

Defect in failure of proof as to one of two counts.—Where a defendant was convicted on both counts of an indictment and the judgment imposed could have been inflicted on either, the judgment should not be reversed on account of any defect in or failure of proof as to one of the counts if the other count is good. Grant v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 443.

Erroneous instruction to jury.—A federal judge did not commit reversible error, in a criminal case in which the undisputed facts, as testified to by both the witnesses for the government and the defendant, show the latter's guilt, in telling the jury in effect to find the defendant guilty, so long as the jury was allowed the technical right to decide against the law and the facts. If the defendant suffered any wrong, it was of such a purely formal character as not to afford, since this act, a basis for reversing the judgment of the lower court. Horning v. District of Columbia, (1920) 254 U. S. 135, 41 S. Ct. 53, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming) (1919) 48 App. Cas. (D. C.) 380 wherein the court said:

"The question relates to the charge of the judge. The judge said to the jury that the only question for them to determine was whether they believed the concurrent testimony of the witnesses for the government and the defendant, describing the course of business that we have stated, and as to which there was no dispute. Those facts he correctly instructed them, constituted an engaging in business in the District of Columbia. This was excepted to and the jury retired. The next day they were recalled to court, and were told that there really was no issue of fact for them to decide; that they were not warranted in capriciously saying that the witnesses for the government and the defendant were not telling the truth; that the course of dealing constituted a breach of the law; that it was their duty to accept this exposition of the law; that, in a criminal case, the court could not peremptorily instruct them to find the defendant guilty, but that, if the law permitted, he would. The court added that a failure to bring in a verdict could only arise from a flagrant disregard of the evidence, the law, and their obligation as jurors. On an exception being taken, the judge repeated that he could not tell them in so many words to find the defendant guilty, but that what he said amounted to that; that the facts proved were in accord with the information, and that the court of appeals had said that that showed a violation of law.

"This was not a case of the judge's expressing an opinion upon the evidence, as he would have had a right to do. Graham v. United States, 231 U. S. 474, 480, 58 L. ed. 319, 324, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148. The facts were not in dispute, and what he did was to say so, and to lay down the law applicable to them. In such a case obviously the function of the jury, if they do their duty, is little more than formal. The judge cannot direct a verdict, it is true; and the jury has the power to bring in a verdict in the teeth of both law and facts. But the judge always has the right and duty to tell them what the law is upon this or that state of facts that may be found, and he can do the same none the less when the facts are agreed. If the facts are agreed, the judge may state that fact also; and when there is no dispute, he may say so, although there has been no formal agreement. Perhaps there was a regrettable peremptoriness of tone, but the jury were allowed the technical right, if it can be called so, to decide against the law and the facts, and that is all there was left for them after the defendant and his witnesses took the stand. If the defendant suffered any wrong, it was purely formal, since, as we have said, on the facts admitted, there was no doubt of his guilt."

In Consolidation Coal Co. v. Peninsular Portland Cement Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 625, an instruction was held to be prejudicial and not within this provision.

Omission in instruction.—Where in an instruction to the jury as to the testimony of any witness whom the jury might believe to have testified falsely, the court omits to give an instruction that the testimony must be willfully and intentionally false, it was held that such omission did not affect the substantial rights of the defendant. Braden v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 441.

A mistaken reference by indorsement on the indictment to the act which the accused is alleged to have violated has been held, under this section, to be too trivial and unsubstantial to work a reversal of the judgment. Wagman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 568.

Burden to show error.—Under this section the former practice of holding that an error requires the reversal of a judgment unless the opponent can affirmatively demonstrate from other parts of the record that the error was harmless is changed, and now the complaining party must show to the reviewing tribunal from the record as a whole that he has been denied some substantial right whereby he has been prevented from having a fair trial. Rich v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 566.

Decree of specific performance granted under this section in an action by minority stockholders to recover certain mining property acquired by a director of the company and leased to the company, see Presidio Min. Co. v. Overton, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 388.

1920 Supp., p. 132. [Removal of causes, etc.]

Service after removal.—Where several defendants have a right to remove a case but only one of them has been brought within the jurisdiction of the state court, he may exercise the right of removal, but if after such removal the other defendants are served they may at their option exercise that right conferred by this section to have the case removed to the state court. Hunt v. Pearce, (E. D. Okla. 1921) 271 Fed. 498.

LABOR

Vol. VI, p. 260, sec. 1. [First ed., 1914 Supp., p. 244.]

Employees within act.—The term “employees” within the meaning of this Act includes all persons operating railroad trains at the time the receiver takes charge. Birmingham Trust, etc., Co. v. Atlanta, etc., R. Co., (N. D. Ga. 1921) 271 Fed. 731.

Vol. VI, p. 267, sec. 9. [First ed., 1914 Supp., p. 249.]

Constitutionality.—“On its face it merely declares that the court must hear employees on questions affecting terms and conditions of employment, and where the question is of reducing wages must hear in advance, after 30 days’ notice, and provides a mode of service. As a statute of procedure in federal courts it is justified by the constitutional power of Congress to establish inferior courts with the implied power to define their jurisdiction and regulate their exercise of it. It does no more in the matter of wages than direct the court and its receiver not to meddle with the established scale—established with the consent of the carrier—until an orderly hearing after the usual and reasonable time to prepare for it has elapsed.

“But if it be admitted that in practical operation it fixes wages for 20 days, a law so doing in avoidance of strikes, even where a classification is made of the employees, is a valid regulation of commerce.” Birmingham Trust, etc., Co. v. Atlanta, etc., R. Co., (N. D. Ga. 1921) 271 Fed. 731, holding that when a wage is compelled to be paid even for twenty days, which is beyond the power of the road to earn, it does not constitute a taking of property without due process of law nor for public purposes without just compensation. The court further said:

“It is not to see how the maintenance for twenty days, and until a hearing, of a wage inaugurated by consent of the carrier, could be a serious taking of property. In the case at bar it appears that three-fourths of the wages paid are not affected by the act and may be freely reduced. The amount of train service could no doubt have been cut down. The trainmen, if presented the option of taking less pay for 20 days or suspending entirely, might have agreed to the temporary reduction. As a last resort the operation of the road might have been stopped for the period, since it could not constitutionally be compelled. It does not sufficiently appear in this case that the application of the statute necessarily would have been confiscatory.”

Employees within Act.—This section is restricted in its application to those actually engaged in train operation and train service. Birmingham Trust, etc., Co. v. Atlanta, etc.,

R. Co., (N. D. Ga. 1921) 271 Fed. 731, wherein it was said:

“The common meaning in railroad circles of ‘train operatives’ and ‘train service men’ includes only engineers, firemen, conductors, switchmen, train hands, and porters, and these alone are intended to be covered by this act. They actually and directly operate and serve the trains. Scheduled trains can be run without the assistance of telegraphers, and freight trains may move without station agents and clerks. While all employees of the railroad, whether upon the track, or in the offices or the shops, are necessary to the continued operation of the business, they are not indispensable to an operation for 20 days, and their places are more readily filled and with less peril from inexperience than are those above mentioned as train operatives. These considerations may have guided Congress in drawing the line it did.”

Orders within section.—The first order of a receiver on taking charge of a railroad establishing wages is within the protection of this section. Birmingham Trust, etc., Co. v. Atlanta, etc., R. Co., (N. D. Ga. 1921) 271 Fed. 731, wherein it was said:

“It is supposed, as is ordinarily the case, that the receiver will continue the business of the railroad without interruption, and that, tentatively, at least, the employees of the owner will be continued as the receiver’s employees. The contention, therefore, that the order in question, being the first establishment of wages by the receiver, was not within the intent of Congress, cannot be sustained. The aim of Congress, being to avoid the interruption of train service which may result from a decrease in pay without the human satisfaction of a prior hearing on the subject, would be defeated by the construction contended for.”

Reduction by contract.—As the forbidden reduction of wages in this section is one unconsented to, for such only provide strikes, a receiver may, notwithstanding the Act, make willing contracts with the old employees for a less wage, and a fortiori can make such contracts with new employees if the former ones cease from their employment. Birmingham Trust, etc., Co. v. Atlanta, etc., R. Co., (N. D. Ga. 1921) 271 Fed. 731.

Right of striking employees.—To question reduction.—The fact that employees have gone on a strike rather than accept an order reducing wages does not deprive them of their standing in court for the purpose of attacking the order and recovering wages at the old rate while working under protest of the order. But the right of striking employees to be heard is limited to the question of their right to the old wage while working under protest under the order reducing such wage. They cannot be heard in proceedings to fix future wages as by striking they forfeited their position as employees. Birmingham Trust, etc., Co. v. Atlanta, etc., R. Co., (N. D. Ga. 1921) 271 Fed. 743, wherein it was said:

"The rights of the trainmen, under the Newlands Act may be analogized to those that would exist under a definite contract to serve for the 20 days involved, at the fixed wage. As in the case of a contract, the benefit of the act may be waived by the trainmen. Ft. Smith Railway Co. v. Mills, 253 U. S. 206, 40 Sup. Ct. 526, 64 L. ed. 862. The wages here were not payable in advance of service, but were not due until about April 1st. The receiver's announcement was no more than an anticipatory breach of his duty to pay, like an anticipatory breach of a contract to pay, which gave the other party the choice of treating the relation as broken and abandoning it without incurring liability, or of denying the right to terminate it and performing or tendering the service and claiming the pay.

"Both things may not be done. A contract could not be treated as broken and abandoned, and also treated as unbreakable and to be performed. To make a homely illustration, if A. hires B. for 20 days to work for $5 per day, payable after the work is done, and during the work A. announces he will pay only $4, B. may decline to work further for him, in view of this announced intention, and may even sue him for damages for the breach of the contract in addition to recovering full wages for the work done. But, if he would have wages for the future time, he must remain at work, unless A. actually prevents him from working, and B. must take the position that A. cannot refuse to pay him the correct wages. In this case, after the receiver announced his wage reduction, the trainmen, with the others, conferred with him and insisted on the sole jurisdiction of the Labor Board, but made no mention of the Newlands Act; and as to the question discussed they were referred by the receiver to the provision in the court's order for a hearing at any time before the court. The men remained at work under protest. This was, as has been ruled, sufficient to reserve all rights, including those under the Newlands Act, and rebutted any inference of consent to the reduction.

"The refusal to work further on March 5th, when summoned by the receiver, no matter what the reason or justification, terminated the employment."

Re-employment of striking workmen.—Where workmen have gone on a strike because of an order improperly announced by the receiver, reducing their wages without a hearing, their re-employment will not be ordered though the strike has been conducted in an orderly manner, the court saying that re-employment must be treated as an administrative detail, to be taken up by the receiver, and that a strike though a lawful and valuable economic weapon, is not a substitute for orderly procedure in court and cannot be allowed as a legal remedy for legal rights against a receiver. Birmingham Trust, etc., Co. v. Atlanta, etc., R. Co., (N. D. Ga. 1921) 271 Fed. 743.

Vol. VI, p. 280, sec. 1. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 330.]

Jurisdiction of state court of action by employee.—Congress having taken jurisdiction of Muscle Shoals for the production of nitrate, under the act of June 3, 1916, (9 Fed. St. Ann. (2d ed.) p. 1340, sec. 124) and the employees of nitrate companies there operating having been declared to be within this compensation act, a state court has no jurisdiction of an action by such an employee for personal injuries. Webb v. J. G. White Engineering Co., (1920) 204 Ala. 429, 85 So. 729.

1918 Supp., p. 429, sec. 1.

Remedy as exclusive.—"It is optional with the employee as to whether he will make a claim under the act or not. If he does not, in our opinion he would have a right to maintain the present action and prosecute the same to judgment, as we think that the United States as to this particular case by the Federal Control Act consented to be sued. But if the employee elects to receive the benefits of the Compensation Act and his claim is allowed, then he is barred from prosecuting his action for negligence against the United States. In other words, he must elect which of the two remedies he desires to pursue, and, having elected to pursue one, he may not pursue the other. The United States under the statute being bound to pay the plaintiff after the latter has elected to claim the benefits of the Compensation Act, the remedy afforded by the act is exclusive." Hines v. Dahn, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 105.

1918 Supp., p. 435, sec. 27.

Effect of recovery against person other than United States.—"Whether the employee assigns his cause of action against a person other than the United States to the United States, and the same is prosecuted by said commission, or whether the employee prosecutes the cause of action himself, the employee gains nothing, but the whole recovery after deduction of the expense of litigation either goes into the compensation fund out of which employees are paid, or is retained by the employee and the amount thereof is credited to the United States on future payments. So that in any event the employee realizes nothing from the liability of a person other than the United States. In this very case the plaintiff would receive nothing, if he should collect his judgment other than his compensation under the Compensation Act." Hines v. Dahn, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 105.

LABOR DEPARTMENT

Vol. VI, p. 287, sec. 3. [First ed., 1914 Supp., p. 242.]

The administration of the immigration laws has been intrusted by Congress to the Department of Labor—not to the Department of Justice. The latter department has no more legal right or power to deal with the exclusion or the expulsion of aliens than has the Department of the Interior. Colyer v. Skeffington, (D. C. Mass. 1920) 265 Fed. 17.

LIMITATION OF VESSEL OWNERS' LIABILITY

Vol. VI, p. 334, sec. 4282. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 838.]

Relation to R. S. sec. 4493.—In The Virginia, (D. C. Md. 1920) 264 Fed. 986, it is said that this section is in no way a restriction on R. S. sec. 4493 (9 Fed. St. Ann. (2d ed.) p. 468).

IV. SCOPE OF STATUTE

3. Owners Affected (p. 338)

Director General of Railroads was held to be a charterer of vessels taken over as part of railroad property in The Virginia, (D. C. Md. 1920) 264 Fed. 986.

4. Vessels Included (p. 339)

In general.—A derrick boat in service as an instrumentality of interstate commerce has been held to come within the operation of the statute. Patton Tully Transp. Co. v. Turner, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 334. The court said: "Section 4283 reaches 'any vessel.' It was the theory of the act that always when a vessel was on a voyage between ports, and commonly until its return to the home port, the owner would have scant opportunity for personal control, and therefore ought to be relieved from the full effect of the respondeat superior rule. This theory applied with lessened force to ordinary vessels upon inland lakes and rivers, and with little, if any, force to the class of quasi vessels which often remain in or about one harbor and have no propelling power—barges, lighters, etc. Accordingly, section 7 of the original act of 1851 (R. S. § 4289) provided that the act should not apply 'to the owners of any canal boat, barge or lighter, or to any vessel of any description whatever used in river navigation.' In 1886, either because the original theory of the act had not justified section 7 or from a change in the theory, this section was amended so as to direct that the liability limiting provisions 'shall apply to all sea-going vessels, and also to all vessels used on lakes or rivers or inland navigation, including canal boats, barges and lighters.' U. S. C. S. § 8027. This last-quoted language is therefore controlling upon the present question. In a certain broad sense, all these floating structures, including even floating dry docks, are vessels; but it is accurate enough to say that they constitute a general class, which may be called quasi vessels, and which is divided into subclasses by more specific nomenclature. Under the general and familiar rule of construction, 'expressio unius,' etc., specific classes, not enumerated, would be excluded; for example, a dredge or pump boat is not a canal boat, and not within the ordinary definitions of a barge or lighter, and we have not seen decisions that undertake to classify such a boat under this section of the statute.

"This derrick boat was not a canal boat, nor, in the ordinary sense, a barge. It did at least closely approximate a lighter. A lighter often has lifting means for elevating cargo, though it commonly transfers cargo from the shore to itself, and then from itself to the ship, instead of directly from the shore to the ship, as here. There is not much inherent distinction, nor apparent reason for excluding this from the statute and including ordinary lighters. Both are directly essential to the transportation of freight by water, while the connection therewith of (e. g.) a dredge, is more indirect and remote.

"Upon the whole, we conclude that the lack of jurisdiction to proceed under this statute as to this derrick boat is not so clear that we ought, practically on our own motion to decline to proceed."

5. Losses Covered (p. 344)

Cases of personal injury and death.—In Flynn v. Christenson, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 385, it was held that the court committed no error in holding the respondent's liability for the death of a stevedore to be limited to their respective interests in the vessel.

Cargo claims.—This section has no application to cargo claims. The Virginia, (D. C. Md. 1920) 264 Fed. 986.

V. PRIVILEY OR KNOWLEDGE OF OWNER

1. In General (p. 344)

Mere negligence.—To same effect as first paragraph of original annotation, see The Virginia, (D. C. Md. 1920) 264 Fed. 986; Patton-Tully Transp. Co. v. Turner, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 334.

3. Competency of Master and Crew (p. 346)

Negligence of crew.—The right of a libellant to have limitation of liability decreed under this act should be recognized where the evidence shows a full complement or crew of competent officers, as well as the seaworthiness of the boat, and also shows statutory clearances and the fact that all statutory requirements as to a full crew had been complied with, and that all requisite life-saving appliances were on board. And the mere fact that the crew were guilty of negligence will not preclude the granting of a limitation of liability, such negligence not necessarily establishing privy or knowledge. In re St. Louis, etc., River Packet Co., (E. D. Mo. 1920) 266 Fed. 919.

4. Unseaworthiness of Vessel (p. 347)

Defective boiler.—Where a boiler was in all respects in good condition with a fusible plug in position and a supply of fusible plugs on board to be used in case of necessity when the boat left her home port and there was nothing to show that any appliance was not in good condition after the last visit of inspection by the manager of the owner a few weeks before the explosion, it was held that there was no knowledge or privy on the part of the owners which would operate as a denial of the right to limit liability. Patton-Tully Transp. Co. v. Turner, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 334.

VIII. PROCEDURE

11. Payment into Court (p. 357)

Assignment of insurance money as condition precedent to limitation.—A libellant is not obliged to turn over insurance money collected on the boat as a condition precedent to a decree for limitation of liability. In re St. Louis, etc., River Packet Co., (E. D. Mo. 1920) 266 Fed. 919.

Vol. VI, p. 371, sec. 1. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 854.]

Liability of vessel—Negligence in stowage.—The fact that bills of lading contain the exception, "Leakage of contents at owner's risk," does not absolve the carrier from liability arising from negligence, or want of the exercise of due diligence, in properly stowing cargo. The Korea Maru, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 509.

Limitation as to baggage—In general.—Where by the tariff of a steamship company duly filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission its liability in case of checked baggage is limited to a specified sum such limitation of liability is binding and must be enforced. The Virginia, (D. C. Md. 1920) 266 Fed. 437.

Applicability.—A limitation of liability as to checked baggage has no application to hand baggage not checked or to clothing or other articles worn on the passenger's person. And no recovery can be had for articles lost and claimed as personal effects where they are not included within the necessary baggage and effects which a traveller may be expected to carry with him. The Virginia, (D. C. Md. 1920) 266 Fed. 437.

Limitation of value of package.—A provision in a bill of lading limiting the liability of a vessel in case of loss to a fixed amount per package unless a higher value be declared by the shipper and extra freight paid thereon, is valid and binding and takes precedence over other provisions for ascertaining damages to goods in case of loss. Stevens v. Cunard Steamship Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 306.

Loss not within limitation.—The act was referred to without a definite holding in respect thereto in Sunny Point Packing Co. v. Alaska Steamship Co., (Wash. 1921) 196 Pac. 642, wherein the court stated the facts as to a shortage in delivery and its conclusion as follows: "The voyage, as the captain's log shows, was somewhat tempestuous. Salmon cases of another shipment, loaded in that part of the vessel in which these cases were loaded, went overboard. No check of the number of cases unloaded was kept as the cases were taken from the vessel. The loss was ascertained by the count after they had been piled upon the dock. While the checker testifies that he kept track of the longshoremen who were performing the work, and was careful to see that none of the cases were misplaced or intermixed with other piles of salmon cases on the dock, it seems to us that the chance of error was here much greater than was the chance of error at the place of shipment. A loss caused by either of the reasons suggested will not excuse a failure to deliver on the part of the carrier. A carrier was at common law an insurer, save as against the act of God or of the public enemy. While by the Harter Act its liability has been somewhat more limited, still nothing is here shown to bring the carrier within the excepted causes."

Burden of proof.—An exception in bills of lading "leakage of contents at owner's risk," casts upon the libelants the burden of establishing negligence or want of diligence in stowage which conduces, as the proximate cause, to the injury complained of. The Korea Maru, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 509.

Vol. VI, p. 377, sec. 3. [First ed.,
vol. IV, p. 857.]

- I. In general.
- II. Properly manned and equipped.
- III. Due diligence.
- IV. Seaworthy vessel.
- V. Navigation or management of ship.
- VI. Burden of proof.

I. IN GENERAL (p. 378)

Prior to the passage of this Act vessel owners would have been answerable for a loss caused by the negligence of the master or crew. The Mary F. Barrett, (E. D. Pa. 1921) 270 Fed. 618.

Owner's liability.—There is no right to limit liability unless the vessel was seaworthy and reasonable care was exercised by the owner to see that she was properly manned, equipped and supplied. The Bessie J., (D. C. Mass. 1920) 208 Fed. 66.

General average.—"The doctrine of general average is the equitable one that the loss caused by a sacrifice made for the common benefit of all should be borne ratably by all. It has no application, however, when the necessity for the sacrifice was caused by the negligence of the master or crew." The Mary F. Barrett, (E. D. Pa. 1921) 270 Fed. 618, wherein the court further said: "The right to invoke the law of general average is a defense pro tanto if there is a stipulation in the charter party to this effect, but in the absence of such a contract there is no such right if the loss was due to the negligence of master or crew."

(p. 382)

Duty to provide competent crew.—In the case of a tug contracting to tow vessels the rule has been applied that it is the duty of the owners of the tug not only to provide a seaworthy vessel, but also to provide the vessel with a crew adequate in number and competent for their duty with reference to all the exigencies of the intended voyage. Myloie v. British Columbia Mills Tug, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 449.

Barge captain absent from boat at night.—A petition for limitation of liability has been denied where during the absence at night of the barge captain a vessel sank at a pier and it appeared that the petitioner's fleet manager knew or should have known that, notwithstanding instructions to the contrary, its barge captains not being followed up were likely to leave their vessels at night. The Bessie J., (D. C. Mass. 1920) 268 Fed. 66.

III. DUE DILIGENCE (p. 383)

Negligent navigation.—Holding a towing tug liable for damages resulting from sunken wrecks, the existence of which was known or should have been known to the master of the tug, the court, in McWilliams v. Director Gen. of Railroads, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 931, said: "It is elementary that in every contract of towage it is impliedly agreed that the tug will use proper skill and diligence, and that she will not unnecessarily by negligence or mismanagement imperil her tow. The highest degree of skill is not required, for she is not a common carrier; neither is she an insurer. She is merely a bailee for hire. As such she is simply bound to exercise reasonable skill, care, and diligence. Eastern Transportation Line v. Hope, 95 U. S. 297, 24 L. Ed. 477; The John G. Stevens, 170 U. S. 113, 126, 18 Sup. Ct. 544, 42 L. Ed. 969. From what has been said we must be understood as meaning that the degree of skill, care, and diligence for which the tug is liable is dependent upon the peculiar circumstances of each particular case and of the special hazards of the waters traversed. Societe des Voilers Francais v. Oregon R., etc., Co., (D. C.) 178 Fed. 324.

"The master of the tug is bound to know the channel and its usual currents, and dangers which are known generally to men experienced in its navigation. The Inca, (D. C.) 130 Fed. 36, aff'd 148 Fed. 363, 78 C. C. A. 273. And he must exercise that degree of care, caution, and maritime skill which prudent navigators usually employ in similar services. In all such cases the burden rests upon the libellant to prove affirmatively that the tug is in fault."

Leakage.—Where the leakage resulted from the structural defects, which manifested themselves under ordinary conditions of severe weather, it cannot be held that the damage caused thereby was due to perils of the sea, within the exemptions of this section, unless due care to render the vessel seaworthy be shown. The Lake Allen, (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 274 Fed. 873.

Failure to close stop cock.—The failure to close a stop cock in a pipe, which cock was essential to the seaworthiness of a vessel when loaded to a certain depth was a failure to use due diligence to make the vessel seaworthy within the meaning of this act, and the fact that coal was taken in after leaving port increased the draft so as to bring the opening in the pipe under the water was immaterial. The Viking, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 801.

IV. SEAWORTHY VESSEL (p. 384)

Obligation of owners as to seaworthiness of vessel.—Inherent in the shipping articles was the absolute obligation of the owners and operators to see that the vessel was seaworthy. To be seaworthy the vessel must be tight, staunch, and strong, and so equipped and the cargo so stored as to resist all ordinary action of the sea. But the requirement does not extend to perfect condition of the vessel or the most improved appliances. Hamilton v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 15.

The duty to use reasonable care in keeping the ship and her appliances in safe condition is a continuing duty resting upon the owners during the voyage. This is nondelegable, and for injuries resulting from its breach, the owners are liable to the seamen, even if there is an entire lack of that privity or knowledge which will deny to the owners the right to limit their liability. Patton-Tully Transp. Co. v. Turner, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 334.

The provisions of this section cannot be relied upon to relieve the shipowner from the obligation to furnish a seaworthy vessel, or to escape from responsibility for failure to do so; and especially is this true when the unseaworthiness existed at the time the charter party was entered into. Nor can the owner escape liability by the exercise merely of due diligence to perform his obligations in this respect. His duty is to furnish a seaworthy vessel, and by frequent examinations and thorough inspection to see that it was so maintained, having due regard to the service to be performed. The Pehr Ugland, (E. D. Va. 1921) 271 Fed. 340.

Implied warranty of seaworthiness.—In the absence of an express warranty of seaworthiness in a contract for the shipment of a cargo, the law will imply a warranty that the ship is seaworthy and fitted for the service in hand, and for the faithful performance of which it contracts and accepts compensation. The Pehr Ugland, (E. D. Va. 1921) 271 Fed. 340.

Presumption as to seaworthiness.—The presumption is in favor of seaworthiness, since the owners and officers ordinarily would not venture the risk of property or life in an unseaworthy ship, and from their superior ability and skill their judgment is entitled to much greater weight than that of the crew. Hamilton v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 15.

Liability where vessel is chartered.—“The general rule is that the owner of a vessel is bound to the charterer to see that she is seaworthy and suitable for the service in which she is employed. But the rule does not apply when the charterer undertakes by contract, either express or implied, to inspect the vessel and ascertain for himself her seaworthiness and fitness.” Portsmouth Fisheries Co. v. John L. Roper Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 586.

Where in the case of a buyer the damage done to the cargo greatly exceeded the value of the craft, it was held that the charterer was not entitled to limit his liability where the barge was unseaworthy for the work it undertook to do and the charterer had signed bills of lading himself and was the individual who actually inspected it before it sailed. The Nettie Moore, (D. C. Md. 1921) 270 Fed. 1005.

Official test.—The fact that a ship has passed official and other inspections is not conclusive of the fact of seaworthiness. The Viking, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 801.

Mere failure of machinery or failure to provide the best machinery does not prove unseaworthiness nor even negligence. Hamilton v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 15, holding that unseaworthiness was not established by the fact that the engine had to be repaired and that the ship lost three propeller blades.

Defective boilers.—As to the existence of defective boilers as rendering a vessel unseaworthy it has been said: “Proceeding to this question of fact, whether the master used reasonable care in maintaining the boat's appliances in seaworthy condition, we conclude that he did not. It is strenuously urged that the fusible plug did not pertain to the seaworthiness of the boat, that the water gauges and try cocks were all the appliances necessary to complete safety, and that the fusible plug was only the means of avoiding the fireman's possible negligence in using the devices which of themselves answered every requirement of safety on the theory that the operator would do his duty. We cannot accept this view as controlling. It appears that such plugs were in very common use; that they were required by the federal regulations (although this particular kind of boat was not within the regulations); and one of the witnesses for the boat gave the expert opinion that they were essential to safety. However, the case does not rest on this alone. The injector was in bad order, and was likely to fail to operate unless assisted, and the boiler was leaking. These conditions had continued for some time, and they must have been known to the master. In light of their existence, the office of the fusible plug as a safety device was emphasized. We think that to substitute a permanent for a fusible plug in a boiler, where it was abnormally difficult to maintain the proper water level, was a failure to exercise reasonable care to keep the boat in seaworthy condition, and that, therefore, the owners and the boat were liable for the explosion to which this combination of leaky boiler, defective injector, and nonfusible plug contributed." Patton-Tully Transp. Co. v. Turner, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 334.

Improper dunnage.—In The Tabor, (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 274 Fed. 880, damage to sugar was held to be caused by the poor character of the dunnage and the libellant was held entitled to a decree.

Negligence of crew as aggravating unseaworthy condition.—If the unseaworthiness was a contributing cause of the injury, without which it probably would not have happened, it makes no difference in the owner's liability that the negligence of these of the crew developed this unseaworthiness into action, and made it destructive when it would otherwise have been harmless. Patton-Tully Transp. Co. v. Turner, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 334.

V. NAVIGATION OR MANAGEMENT OF SHIP (p. 389)

Abandonment of vessel as error in navigation.—Where a vessel is abandoned when not past saving this constitutes an error in the navigation and management of the vessel for which the owners are not liable under this section if they have exercised due diligence to make her seaworthy. The Thessaloniki, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 67.

VI. BURDEN OF PROOF (p. 391)

Competency of officers and crew.—Where a vessel which was stranded, through negligence in the engine room, sets up this act it is necessary in order that she may have its protection to affirmatively show that her owner exercised due diligence to make her seaworthy and that proper care had been given to the selection of her engine room force. The Fort Morgan, (D. C. Md. 1921) 274 Fed. 734.

Unseaworthiness as contributing cause.—The burden of proof that the accident would have happened regardless of the unseaworthiness alleged is on the owner, and there is no presumption in his favor that that which was necessary to be done to make the vessel seaworthy, was done. The Viking, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 801.

Vol. VI, p. 392, sec. 4. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 863.]

Nature and effect of bill of lading.—A bill of lading is both a receipt and a contract, and if the owner's master signs the bill, he has receipted and contracted for his own principals. The Esrom, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 266.

MINERAL LANDS, MINES AND MINING

Vol. VI, p. 509, sec. 2319. [First ed., vol. V, p. 4.]

Effect of prior location.—Lands on which there are valid and subsisting locations are not open to exploration and purchase. Lehman v. Sutter, (Mont. 1921) 198 Pac. 1100.

Vol. VI, p. 523, sec. 2322. [First ed., vol. V, p. 13.]

- II. Possessory rights.
- III. Extralateral rights.

II. POSSESSORY RIGHTS (p. 524)

Exclusiveness of right.—"Section 2322, Rev. St. U. S., guarantees the exclusive right of possession to the prior locator, and thus excludes the idea that any one else may enter thereon for any purpose during the life of a prior location. . . . The law on this subject is well stated in volume 18 R. C. L. at page 1136, as follows:

"A valid location of a mining claim, so long as it is in full force and effect, operates as a bar to a second location of the premises so claimed. Hence it is a general rule that an attempted location of a mining claim based upon a discovery within a then valid and subsisting claim, is absolutely void for the purpose of founding an adverse claim, and does not attach upon the subsequent failure of the first locator to do the required annual assessment work; and a location of a mining claim at a time when a senior locator is not in default under state or federal laws is subordinate to a relocation by a stranger made after the rights of the first locator lapsed because of such default." Lehman v. Sutter, (Mont. 1921) 198 Pac. 1100.

III. EXTRALATERAL RIGHTS (p. 527)

Extent of right—Scope of mining operations.—Where a vein extending over a side line varies in width and is undulating and waving, the company mining it may extend its shaft in the footwall and immediately under the vein and may make excavations in the country rock for stations, ore pockets and chutes connecting with its shaft. This is especially true where it appears from the evidence that the country rock encountered in such excavations is entirely barren and worthless. Twenty-One Min. Co. v. Original Sixteen to One Mine, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 547.

Course of vein—Side and end lines.—If a lode mining location lies across instead of along the strike of a vein, the side lines become the end lines for the purpose of defining the right of the owner, under this section, to follow a vein apexing within the surface boundaries on its dip downward outside the vertical side lines of such claim. Silver King Coalition Mines Co. v. Conkling Min. Co., (1921) 256 U. S. 18, 41 S. Ct. 426, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1916) 230 Fed. 553, 144 C. C. A. 607.

Side lines and end lines do not depend on the mere act of the locator; those lines which are crosswise of the general course of the vein are the end lines, although the locator may have termed them side lines. Northport Smelting, etc., Co. v. Lone Pine-Surprise Consol. Mines Co., (E. D. Wash. 1920) 271 Fed. 105.

Lode bisected by lines of adjoining claims.—Where a lode or vein is bisected by the lines of two adjoining claims it belongs to the one having priority. Star Min. Co. v. Federal Min., etc., Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 881.

Vol. VI, p. 533, sec. 2324. [First ed., vol. V, p. 19.]

V. Annual assessment work.

2. Work, labor and improvements.

3. Forfeiture of claim.

IX. Relocation of claims.

V. ANNUAL ASSESSMENT WORK

2. Work, Labor and Improvements (p. 544)

Erection of stamp mill as assessment work.—Expenditures made for work performed, labor done, and repairs made upon a stamp mill do not tend to develop the mineral claim, or facilitate the extraction of ore therefrom, and consequently do not constitute any part of the sum required to be expended for annual assessment or improvement work under this section. Golden Giant Min. Co. v. Hill, (N. M. 1921) 198 Pac. 276.

3. Forfeiture of Claim (p. 548)

Estoppel to claim forfeiture.—Where one enters into possession of a mineral claim under a contract with a locator, by which the person entering undertakes to do the required assessment work, or do other work which would have been sufficient to constitute assessment work, he will not be heard to assert the forfeiture of the claim for non-performance of the assessment work, where such nonperformance was the result of his own default, nor will he be permitted to take advantage, at any time, of the information obtained by him on account of such relation. Golden Giant Min. Co. v. Hill, (N. M. 1921) 198 Pac. 276.

Necessity of relocation.—The failure to do the annual assessment work upon a mining claim does not of itself forfeit the claim, a relocation by a third party being essential to work a forfeiture of the original locator's rights. Golden Giant Min. Co. v. Hill, (N. M. 1921) 198 Pac. 276.

IX. RELOCATION OF CLAIMS (p. 552)

Right to relocate.—The locator or claimant may, at any time, relocate his own claim for any purpose except to avoid the doing of annual labor thereon required by this section. Lehman v. Sutter, (Mont. 1921) 198 Pac. 1100.

Effect on right of cotenant.—That some of the locators relocate their claim does not operate as an abandonment by those who do not, and as to the latter the claim remains valid and subsisting, forbidding the location of another claim. Lehman v. Sutter, (Mont. 1921) 198 Pac. 1100.

Patent as relating to date of relocation.—Where a mining claim is located and several years later relocated by the same parties and a patent issued therefor, the patent relates back only to the date of its relocation. Star Min. Co. v. Federal Min., etc., Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 881.

Vol. VI, p. 573, sec. 2327. [First ed., vol. X, p. 235.]

Monuments prevail over courses and distances.—A patent for a lode mining claim which, after reciting the deposit in the General Land Office of field and plat notes of a survey of such claim, which is designated by the Surveyor General as lot No. 689, describes its boundaries as platted as beginning at corner No. 1, a pine post, running thence by a described course 600 feet to corner No. 2, a pine post, thence by a described course 1,500 feet to corner No. 3 thence by a described course 600 feet to corner No. 4, and thence by a described course 1,500 feet to the place of beginning, and which, in granting "said mining premises hereinbefore described," assumes such premises to be the lot designated as lot No. 689, does not represent an adjudication by the Land Department that the claim is 1,500 feet long and 600 feet wide, without regard to the location of the posts and corners 3 and 4, which the field notes showed to exist, but which the patent does not mention, and evidence is admissible to show that there were monuments at corners 3 and 4, and, if established, the monuments as fixed control the courses and distances of the patent, and exclude from the grant land outside the monuments, though comprehended by the courses and distances. Silver King Coalition Mines Co. v. Conkling Min. Co., (1921) 255 U. S. 151, 41 S. Ct. 310, 65 U. S. (L. ed.)

—, reversing (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1916) 230 Fed. 553, 144 C. C. A. 607.

Vol. VI, p. 575, sec. 2329. [First ed., vol. V, p. 42.]

Priority between placer and timber patents.—In Adams v. C. A. Smith Timber Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 652, it was held under the facts of the case that a conflict between a placer and a timber patent must be resolved by requiring the patent for the placer to yield to the timber patent theretofore issued to the predecessors of the appellee.

Vol. VI, p. 580, sec. 2332. [First ed., vol. V, p. 44.]

Scope of section.—This statute "is a part of the statutory chapters on mineral and mining resources, having to do with the evidence which will be regarded as sufficient to establish the right of one in possession and who has worked a mining claim to obtain a patent. The statute is based upon the premise that the lands had been open to entry and could be patented under the mining laws of the United States. It was not enacted as a statute of limitation, and has no application in the case of a trespasser on land, title to which cannot be acquired under the laws of the United States." Chanslor-Canfield Midway Oil Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 145.

Adverse possession.—Where plaintiffs allege possession of a placer claim, it is the rule that one claiming by adverse possession must establish that the property is held and used as a mining ground. Appropriate use must be shown. Adams v. C. A. Smith Timber Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 652.

Vol. VI, p. 587, sec. 2336. [First ed., vol. V, p. 50.]

Pleading in suit to determine adverse claims.—"The amended complaint is not a model pleading. It would have been entirely sufficient if plaintiff had confined himself to appropriate allegations showing his right to the ground covered by his locations, and left it to the defendants to disclose the nature of their claim. It was not necessary for him to go further, and show that defendants' adverse claim is without foundation. Woody v. Hinds, 30 Mont. 189, 76 Pac. 1. Since, however, he has assumed to do this, and the demurrer admits the truth of his allegations in this behalf, the question submitted for decision is whether, assuming the plaintiff's allegations to be true, they so far impeach the validity of the Sutter locations, or any of them, as to put the defendants upon the defensive." Lehman v. Sutter, (Mont. 1921) 198 Pac. 1100.

Price.—A price in excess of $20 an acre may be exacted by the Secretary of the Interior for coal lands within 15 miles of a railroad, entered under this section. Friedman v. U. S., 255 U. S. 468, 41 S. Ct. 380, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 54 Ct. Cl. 225.

Conclusiveness of decision as to whether land is vacant.—A decision that land is not vacant is one entirely within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior and not subject to control by the courts. Payne v. U. S., (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 269 Fed. 198.

Vol. VI, p. 602. [Entry of petroleum, etc.] [First ed., vol. V, p. 47.]

Federal jurisdiction—Equitable relief.—Where there is a serious controversy as to the title and the party in possession is holding adversely, plaintiff's remedy is at law and not in equity. But where the title and right to possession is clear, and the defendant is wrongfully in possession, extracting mineral from the land, and thus is practically consuming the substance of the estate, jurisdiction is in a court of equity to stop such waste, and, after having interfered to stop the waste, the court will determine the rights of the parties before it. Remedy at law for possession and to recover damages for the trespass is in plaintiff, but such remedy is not adequate, by no means as practical and as efficient as a remedy in equity. Chanslor-Canfield Midway Oil Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 145.

Validity of location made in names of third persons.—Where a location was made by a person in the name of his mother-in-law and seven others and the alleged locators did not know of the location at or prior to the time it was made and when subsequently advised thereof declined to assume or pay any part of the expense or to accept or ratify the same but on the suggestion of the one making the location they executed a deed conveying their interests to his mother-in-law who subsequently made an assignment to him, it was held that the location was invalid and that no title passed. Chanslor-Canfield Midway Oil Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 145.

Action of secretary as conclusive.—The action of the Secretary of the Interior in refusing to approve an entry is not subject to review where he has not acted arbitrarily. Payne v. U. S., (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 269 Fed. 198.

1918 Supp., p. 461. [Mining claims, etc.]

Effect of failure to file notice of desire to hold claim.—A failure to file the notice required by the resolution does not forfeit a claim where it was due to a mistake as to county boundaries, a diligent effort in good faith having been made. Donoghue v. Tonopah Oriental Min. Co., (Nev. 1921) 198 Pac. 553. The court said:

"If the proviso is solely for the benefit of the individual claim owner, we are not in accord with an interpretation that nullifies its beneficent purposes. We think that reflection inevitably leads to the conclusion that exceptions, which are present and concurring in this case, arise from a failure to comply literally with the terms of the proviso. First, there is no fraud or deceit; second, no intention, shown by competent, clear, and satisfying proof, to abandon the claims; third, there is good faith, and an open and honest effort to comply; and, fourth, excusable neglect or omission of others to file the notice, not attributable to the claim owner.

"This interpretation is supported, in a measure, by that of the Interior Department in a case arising under the Suspensory Act of 1893 (28 U. S. Stat. 6). The act of 1893, suspending the assessment work for that year, came before the department in Cain et al. v. Addenda Mining Co., 24 Land Dec. 18. The owner was permitted to hold the ground under the resolution, though the company had not filed any declaration of intention whatever. It is true that it was in a contest which involved fraud of the worst kind, still the ruling indicates that each case arising between claim owners and third parties for failure to comply with the resolution is to be controlled and decided upon its own particular facts and circumstances.

It is true, from the situation developed from the trial of this case, that the representatives of the true owners of the ground in dispute, though acting in good faith, upon their own showing, could have taken the precaution, being in doubt, to file the notice in both Nye and Esmeralda counties; but their omission so to do, under the particular circumstances, should not be visited upon the owners. In arriving at this conclusion, we are mindful that it is not the province of courts to concern themselves with the injustice and inconvenience or hardships of a law where its meaning is plain. Such a matter is addressed to Congress. But where it is clear that a strict and literal interpretation of a public resolution, concerning land in which the government has a proprietary interest, will result in manifest injustice, we may scrutinize it closely to see if it will not admit of some other interpretation. We take it that Congress is presumed to have intended an interpretation which would avoid results of this character. We freely admit that the language of the proviso is susceptible of the interpretation that it is mandatory in terms, but we are of the opinion that its resulting effect is doubtful and susceptible of two interpretations, and under the well-settled rule we give it that interpretation which best comports with reason and justice."

NATIONAL BANKS

Vol. VI, p. 654, sec. 5136. [First ed., vol. V, p. 82.]

II. Contracts in general.

V. "Incidental powers as shall be necessary," etc.

4. Indorser, guarantor or surety.

II. CONTRACTS IN GENERAL (p. 656)

Purpose of limitations in section.—The limitations contained in this section were intended to insure the safe management of the affairs of a national bank, so as to protect the owners thereof in the safe conduct of its affairs, and as a guaranty that the management of such bank should at all times be free from speculation, the assumption of undue risks, or the doing of anything else calculated to injure the public by impairing the credit of the bank. It also confers upon the directors "all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business of banking." Parkersburg Second Nat. Bank v. United States Fidelity, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 489.

V. INCIDENTAL POWERS AS SHALL BE NECESSARY

4. Indorser, Guarantor or Surety (p. 665)

Indemnity bond.—It has been held that a national bank may in some cases execute an indemnity bond to protect its interest in a bankrupt's estate. Thus, it was so held where it seemed that if contracts of the bankrupt could be completed a large profit could be realized but the surety company which was on the contractor's bond refused to turn the matter over to the trustees unless it was protected by an indemnity bond. Parkersburg Second Nat. Bank v. United States Fidelity, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 489.

Powers of management other than those of directors.—This section provides that the affairs of each national banking association shall be managed by not less than five directors, who shall be elected by the shareholders. This rule, however, is not without many exceptions. For instance, the vice-president, cashier or other officer of the bank may act without the scope of his authority, and in a matter to which he is not authorized, and yet the bank may subsequently act in such a manner with reference to the particular transaction or subject-matter as to amount to a ratification of the unauthorized action of such officer, or it may take such affirmative action in accepting the benefits and fruits of the transaction as to preclude it from thereafter questioning or denying the authority of the officer to act for it. It may also remain silent and inactive at a time when good faith would have impelled it to have spoken up and disclaimed the unauthorized act of its officer. In these and many other instances that might be mentioned, the unauthorized action of such officer of the bank may become, in presumption and contemplation of law, the act of the bank itself. Smith v. First Nat. Bank, (Okla. 1921) 198 Pac. 103.

IV. ENFORCEMENT OF LIABILITY (p. 725)

Costs.—The costs in an action under this section against several defendants may be apportioned among them. In reaching this conclusion the court said:

"The act of 1876 permits a joinder of all shareholders of a national bank to enforce each shareholder's individual liability. That liability is restricted by the statute which creates it; shareholders being individually responsible, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for debts of the bank, to the extent of the amount of their stock therein. R. S. § 5151. The dominant idea is the limitation of the liability of the shareholder to the amount of his stock. It would seem that the spirit of this restrictive liability would be violated by awarding judgment for costs in solido. Suppose there should be only five stockholders in a bank, holding, respectively, the following number of shares: One, 5, 10, 50, and 250, of the par value of $100, and the costs should aggregate $1,000. Would it be equitable and right to make the holder of one share pay the same as the holder of 250 shares? If such be the case, the shareholder with one share would pay in costs double the par value of his stock, and the holder of 250 shares would pay less than $1 per share on his holding. Moreover, the holder of the 250 shares might be insolvent, and his burden would be cast on the minority stockholders, multiplying the liability of the holder of the single share of stock almost to the extent of oppression. Such a result would be repugnant to the spirit of the statute, that the extent of the stockholders' liability was gauged by the amount of their stock, ratably, and not as surety for one another.

"If all the defendants were solvent, of course, the plaintiff could have no reasonable objection to an apportionment of the costs. But it is argued that, where some of the defendants may prove insolvent, the plaintiff, though recovering judgment against such insolvent defendants, would have to pay the costs assessed against them. This argument is urged against the contention that apportionment of costs would be equitable. The circumstance that the plaintiff will lose some of his costs is no more a hazard of litigation than that he will lose his judgment on account of the defendant's insolvency.

"There is another consideration. Suppose, when the decree adjudicating the several shareholders' liability is entered, some shareholders desire to pay, and others wish to prosecute an appeal. If the costs have been apportioned, then a defendant could settle the judgment against him, and leave his more litigious codefendants to prosecute appeal proceedings.

"So that on the whole I think that it is within the power of the court, and that it is neither inequitable nor unjust to the plaintiff, that the costs be apportioned among the defendants, the basis to be as follows: All the costs at the time the case was at issue to be apportioned between all defendants at the ratio of their several holdings of stock. Costs subsequently accruing, brought about by reason of litigation on issues made by pleas, to be apportioned among litigating defendants at the ratio of their respective holdings of stock.

"A judgment on the motion to apportion costs may be taken in accordance with the views herein expressed." American Nat. Bank v. Commercial Nat. Bank, (S. D. Ga. 1920) 268 Fed. 688.

Vol. VI, p. 761, sec. 5200. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 353.]

Nature of loan.—Where a violation of this section is charged by a loan in excess of the statutory ten per cent, it seems that it should appear from the complaint whether or not the defendants are charged with such violation by reason of the indorsement or discount of commercial or business paper, or by reason of direct borrowing. Curtis v. Metcalf, (D. C. R. I. 1918) 265 Fed. 293.

Vol. VI, p. 762, sec. 5201. [First ed., vol. V, p. 140.]

Who may assail purchase.—A purchase of its own shares by a national bank in failing circumstances can be questioned only by the United States and not by private persons. Iowa State, etc., Bank v. City Nat. Bank, (Neb. 1921) 183 N. W. 982, following Thompson v. St. Nichols Nat. Bank, 146 U. S. 240, 13 S. Ct. 66, 36 U. S. (L. ed.) 936.

Vol. VI, p. 766, sec. 5204. [First ed., vol. V, p. 142.]

Necessity of description of bad loans.—In an action by a receiver of a national bank against its directors to recover damages for payments of dividends in violation of this section, it is not necessary "that the plaintiff in his bill should set forth what loans depleted the capital, though it may become necessary for him to charge this before the master. Neither is it necessary to show that the depletion was caused by debts due on which interest was past due and unpaid for a period of six months; the same not being well secured. It does not follow, because section 5204 makes these bad debts, that it makes all other debts good, or that debts which are otherwise bad are not to be deducted to determine the unimpaired capital and surplus." Curtis v. Metcalf, (D. C. R. I. 1918) 265 Fed. 293.

The estate of a shareholder when holding the shares is responsible though insolvency occur and the assessment on the shares be made after his death. Miller v. Hamner, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 891, reversing (D. C. Del. 1920) 263 Fed. 956.

Liability of executor.—An executor who settles an estate without making provision for or disposing of a liability imposed by statute may, in a proper action seasonably brought, be held personally liable for devastavit. Miller v. Hamner, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 891, reversing (D. C. Del. 1920) 263 Fed. 956.

Decision of comptroller conclusive.—The action of the comptroller in ordering an assessment on the shares of an insolvent national bank is conclusive on the shareholders. Miller v. Hamner, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 891, reversing (D. C. Del. 1920) 263 Fed. 956.

Nature of action.—When a fractional part of a shareholder's liability to assessment is sought the action, though on the statute, is in equity. Miller v. Hamner, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 891, reversing (D. C. Del. 1920) 263 Fed. 956.

State statutes of limitations apply to suits brought to enforce the payment of an assessment, in the absence of federal provisions. Miller v. Hamner, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 891, reversing (D. C. Del. 1920) 263 Fed. 956.

II. EMBEZZLEMENT

1. Definition and Scope (p. 774)

"Embezzlement was a crime known to the common law, and was classed as a felony of the same grade as larceny. 4 Bl. Comm. 231; United States v. Cadwallader, (D. C.) 59 Fed. 677. The word 'embezzle' is constantly used in the Criminal Code of the United States. It has a technical significance, and conveys the idea of wrongful appropriation of the property of another by one intrusted with it, or who has possession of it under some trust duty or office. 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2354. The word 'embezzle' of itself implies a fraudulent and unlawful intention on the part of the person charged. No one can 'lawfully' or 'honestly' embezzle money or other property, and hence the use of the word 'embezzle' in an indictment against an employee of the Post Office Department, charging him with embezzling and secreting valuable letters, is sufficient to charge the offense; it is not necessary to allege that the same was done with fraudulent intent. United States v. Atkinson, (D. C.) 34 Fed. 316. A fraudulent intent may be presumed from the criminal act done. 1 Bishop's Criminal Procedure, §§ 278-290. The word 'embezzle,' as used in section 5209, Rev. St., or the words 'steal, take, and carry away,' as used in the common law, have a technical meaning. They do not, therefore, of themselves fully set forth every element of the offense charged. United States v. Britton, 107 U. S. 655, 2 Sup. Ct. 512, 27 L. Ed. 520." U. S. v. Davenport, (W. D. Tex. 1920) 266 Fed. 425.

I. POWER OF STATE TO TAX

1. Rule Stated (p. 797)

National banks are governmental agencies of the United States and are not subject to taxation by the states on their general property. Hannan v. Council Bluffs First Nat. Bank, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 527.

2. Federal Decisions as Controlling (p. 797)

A decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals as to the power of a state to tax a national bank is controlling in a state court. Des Moines Nat. Bank v. Fairweather, (Ia. 1921) 181 N. W. 459.

II. PROPERTY TAXABLE

1. Stock and Real Property (p. 797)

Taxation of shares.—Where a statute purports to tax the shares of national banks "it cannot be assumed unless the language used plainly requires it, that the Legislature intended to tax the property generally of national banks, which it could not do, and not to tax the shares of national banks, which was the only thing it could tax, apart from the real estate of the banks. It must be assumed that the Legislature was familiar with the United States statutes creating national banks and granting and limiting the power of the state in taxing them. It is the more to be assumed because the Legislature of the state has constantly recognized this limitation of the taxing power over national banks, and its statutes have directed the taxing of national bank shares and not the taxing the general property of such banks." Hannan v. Council Bluffs First Nat. Bank, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 527, wherein it was said: "It is undoubtedly true that, in practical effect, a taxation of shares of stock results in much the same financial loss to the individual owners as if the corporation had been taxed on its property, but in legal contemplation the shares and the corporate capital are separate things."

An assessment against a bank, rather than against its shareholders, of taxes on its stock, is void. Allen v. Bilyeu, (Ore. 1921) 198 Pac. 208, holding that where a tax so levied had been paid and a part of it refunded for an insufficient reason, the county could not recover the amount so refunded though the bank had by laches lost the right to complain of the assessment of the tax against it.

V. DISCRIMINATION

2. "Moneyed Capital" (p. 801)

A state tax upon bank stock, state and national, at a higher rate than is imposed upon intangible personal property in general, including bonds, notes, and other evidences of indebtedness, violates the provisions of this section that state taxation of shares in national banks "shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of such state," where moneyed capital in the hands of individuals, invested in bonds, notes, and other evidences of indebtedness, comes into competition, relatively material in amount, in the loan market, with the moneyed capital of national banks. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Richmond, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 619, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —(reversing (1919) 124 Va. 522, 98 S. E. 643), wherein the court said: "By repeated decisions of this court, dealing with the restriction here imposed, it has become established that while the words 'moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens' do not include shares of stock in corporations that do not enter into competition with the national banks, they do include something besides shares in banking corporations and others that enter into direct competition with those banks. They include not only moneys invested in private banking, properly so called, but investments of individuals in securities that represent money at interest and other evidences of indebtedness such as normally enter into the business of banking."

A systematic and intentional omission to tax a material portion of other moneyed capital of the kind designated in this section, may be a violation of that section equally with a similar omission to tax by legislative enactment. Hannan v. Council Bluffs First Nat. Bank, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 527.

3. Different System or Method of Taxation (p. 802)

A state statute taxing shareholders of national banks on their shares should in order to be valid impose a like tax on state bank shares, representing similar moneyed capital. Hannan v. Council Bluffs First Nat. Bank, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 527. The court said: "The fact that individuals, such as private bankers, may deduct from the amount of their assessable property the amount of United States securities held by them, is not a discrimination forbidden by section 5219, as against the owners of national bank shares, assessed at their full value, because section 5219, in requiring other moneyed capital to be assessed at an equal rate, only refers to such moneyed capital as the state has the power to tax, and not to that property which the national power has exempted from taxation."

8. Shares Taxed to Owners (p. 804)

Effect of exemption of bank property.—A state statute assessing against the owners of shares of stock in a national bank the value thereof, regardless of the tax-exempt character of the assets of the bank, is valid. Des Moines Nat. Bank v. Fairweather, (Ia. 1921) 181 N. W. 459, following Hannan v. Council Bluffs First Nat. Bank, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 527.

VI. EXEMPTIONS AND DEDUCTIONS

3. Municipal, State, and Federal Bonds (p. 806)

Investment of bank capital in exempt securities.—Shares in a national bank are subject to taxation by the states, in accordance with the grant of power conferred by this section, and the fact that a part or all of the capital of the national bank is invested in United States bonds or securities, which are exempt from taxation, does not entitle the shareholder to any deduction from an assessment upon the full value of his shares. Hannan v. Council Bluffs First Nat. Bank, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 527.

4. Real Estate (p. 807)

Deduction of actual value.—Where a statute provides that in assessing the value of the stock of private unincorporated banks the actual value of its real estate must be deducted, a general statute relating to corporate taxation and providing for the deduction of the assessed valuation of real estate will be construed as not being applicable to national banks, since a different construction would invalidate the tax statute as being in violation of the federal act because of the resultant discrimination. Security Sav. Bank v. Board of Review, (1a. 1920) 178 N. W. 562.

Vol. VI, p. 817, sec. 1. [First ed., 1914 Supp., p. 260.]

Purpose of act.—“The broad purpose of the Federal Reserve Act was to incorporate under federal control, as members of federal reserve banks, all national banks, as well as banks other than national banks. By force of the law all national banks, though still national banks, are members of federal reserve banks. National banks cannot exist and continue to operate alone as such within one year after the passage of the Federal Reserve Act of December, 1913, because of the mandate of the statutes.” U. S. v. Davenport, (W. D. Tex. 1920) 266 Fed. 425.

Vol. VI, p. 831, sec. 13. [First ed., 1914 Supp., p. 273.]

Accumulating checks in state country banks as ultra vires transaction.—Federal reserve banks exceed their powers by accumulating checks on state country banks, not members of the federal reserve system, until they reach a large amount, and then causing them to be presented for payment over the counter, or, by other devices, requiring payment in cash, so as to compel such banks to maintain so much cash in their vaults as to drive them out of business, or force them, if able, to submit to the scheme to compel them to become members of the federal reserve system, or at least to open a nonmember clearing account, which necessitates the maintenance of a larger reserve, and hence diminishes the lending power of such banks, so that, with the loss of the profit caused by the clearing of bank checks and drafts at par, some of such banks will be driven out of business, and the income of all will be diminished. American Bank, etc., Co. v. Federal Reserve Bank, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 499, 85 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 4.

Vol. VI, p. 850, sec. 5234. [First ed., vol. V, p. 170.]

V. ENFORCEMENT OF INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS

1. Determination and Assessment by Comptroller (p. 859)

Judgment of court as taking place of assessment.—The judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction against a national bank takes the place of an assessment against it by the comptroller of the currency where it has gone into voluntary liquidation because of insolvency, and a cause of action accrues against the shareholders as of the date of the return of an execution unsatisfied. Warner v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 661.

Vol. VI, p. 873, sec. 5239. [First ed., vol. V, p. 180.]

III. Statutory liability of directors and enforcement thereof.

3. “Knowingly violate or knowingly permit,” etc.
7. Excessive loans.

III. STATUTORY LIABILITY OF DIRECTORS AND ENFORCEMENT THEREOF.

3. “Knowingly Violate or Knowingly Permit,” etc. (p. 880)

To same effect as original annotation, see Curtis v. Metcalf, (D. C. R. I. 1918) 265 Fed. 293.

7. Excessive Loans (p. 881)

Necessity of description of specific transactions.—In an action by a receiver against directors of a national bank to recover damages for loans made by them in excess of the ten per cent limitation, each defendant is entitled to be informed as to the extent of the charge of liability and which specific transactions are charged against them. Curtis v. Metcalf, (D. C. R. I. 1918) 265 Fed. 293, wherein the court said:

“I am of the opinion that each defendant is entitled to be informed as to the extent of the charge of liability under the statute for loans in excess of 10 per cent., so that it will appear whether he is charged for the entire amount of the loans to a particular borrower, or only for the amount by which said loans exceeded the statutory limit, and so that he may raise an issue as to his liability under the statute distinct from the issue as to his liability upon grounds other than those fixed by statute. Though section 5239 furnishes the exclusive rule applicable to a loss resulting solely from a violation of the Banking Act, it does not follow that a defendant may not be liable on common law principles for the entire amount of the aggregate loans to a borrower, including the excess over the statutory limit. Allen v. Luke (C. C.) 163 Fed. 1018, 1020; McCormick v. King, 241 Fed. 737, 743 et seq., 154 C. C. A. 439; Williams v. Brady (D. C.) 232 Fed. 740. But the two grounds of liability are distinct and raise distinct issues of fact and law.

"It seems to have been held that the liability under section 5239 is applicable only to the amount of damages resulting from the excess of a borrower's obligations over the statutory limit, and is inapplicable to that portion of the gross indebtedness which did not exceed the specific limit. Witters v. Sowles (C. C.) 43 Fed. 405; Rankin v. Cooper (C. C.) 149 Fed. 1010, 1017; Stephens v. Overstolz (C. C.) 43 Fed. 771, 775. The bill should show clearly whether the defendant is charged with the whole loan or only with the excess.

"As was said in Allen v. Luke (C. C.) 141 Fed. 694, 696, the defendants 'are entitled to know the kind of alleged negligence upon which the complainant will rely.' * * * The complainant must specify the action or inaction relied on.' So, also, the defendants are entitled to know, respectively, which specific transactions are charged against them as violations of the statute involving liability under section 5239.

"As a basis of the charges of statutory liability it will be necessary for the plaintiff to show the amount of the bank's unimpaired capital stock and unimpaired surplus fund from time to time, in order to determine if the total liabilities of any borrower exceed one-tenth part thereof. R. S. § 5200, as amended June 22, 1906. This is unnecessary to establish the charges of negligence and of liability upon common-law grounds."

Vol. VI, p. 915, sec. 2. [First ed., vol. V, p. 106.]

Limitations of action under state statute.—In view of the requirements of the federal statute that an action to enforce the liability of shareholders shall be commenced in any court of the United States having original jurisdiction in equity for the district in which such association may have been located or established, the commencement of such an action in a state court does not give them the benefit of a state act providing that "if any action be commenced within due time, and a judgment thereon for the plaintiff be reversed, or if the plaintiff fail in such action otherwise than upon the merits, and the time limited for the same shall have expired, the plaintiff, or, if he die, and the cause of action survives, his representatives, may commence a new action within one year after the reversal or failure." Warner v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 661.

Power to act as trustee and use name.—The name of a national bank must be approved by the Comptroller of the Currency. It can be changed, or, its use interfered with, by no other authority. In the case of a national bank, empowered by the laws of the United States to act in a fiduciary capacity, and bearing a name confirmed by national authority, clearly, any act on the part of the state which impairs, hampers, embarrasses, restricts, or in effect, wholly prevents, the discharge of its functions as a national banking institution with the incidental powers enumerated, must be void, because in express conflict with the paramount laws of the United States. Fidelity Nat. Bank, etc., Co. v. Enright, (W. D. Mo. 1920) 264 Fed. 236.

A state statute providing that only corporations organized under a certain state law shall be appointed as trustee, etc., must yield to this amendment. Matter of Stanchfield, (1920) 178 Wis. 553, 178 N. W. 310.

1919 Supp., p. 261, sec. 7.

Liberty bonds as "funds."—Liberty bonds delivered by the Treasury Department to a federal reserve bank to be held by it for exchange for other bonds, are a part of the funds of the bank as between the bank and its employees, so as to justify an indictment under this section for a conspiracy to embezzle the bank funds. U. S. v. Jenks, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 264 Fed. 697. The court said:

"It is contended that a verdict should have been directed for the defendants, upon the ground that the bonds alleged to have been embezzled did not constitute part of the funds and credits of the federal reserve bank. The arrangement under which the bonds were deposited in the bank constituted a bailment, under which the bank was to render the service to the United States of delivering the 4½'s in exchange for the 4's, and it was accountable to the Treasury Department for carrying out its part of the transaction.

"The evidence showed Patton's employment was such that the bonds came into his possession, and in taking them out he committed a breach of the confidence or trust reposed in him by reason of his employment. It is not material that the bonds belonged to the United States, or that the bank was responsible to it for the bonds, for between the defendants and the bank the bonds belonged to the bank, and a wrongful appropriation of the bonds was an appropriation of funds of the bank, and the defendants cannot be heard to say in their defense that the bonds which their principal authorized them to deliver to holders of the 4's for the purpose of conversion belonged to any one but the principal."

Defenses.—On the trial of an indictment for conspiracy by employees to embezzle bank funds in the form of Liberty bonds deposited with the bank by the Treasury Department for exchange for other bonds, where the evidence showed that the bonds were secretly taken away and sold and the proceeds converted to defendants' own use, it is no defense that the defendants intended to purchase other bonds of an equivalent amount and replace them in the bank. The natural and probable consequences of the act caused a presumption of intent to injure and defraud. U. S. v. Jenks, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 264 Fed. 697.

Evidence.—On the trial of an indictment for conspiracy by employees to embezzle bond funds in the form of Liberty bonds, in order to prove the division of the alleged proceeds among the conspirators evidence is admissible of the checks given by the brokerage company which conducted the transaction to one of the defendants, the deposit of such checks in the bank by the drawee, the giving of checks by the latter to the other defendant for one-half the amount thus received, and the deposit in the bank of such checks by the other defendant. U. S. v. Jenks, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 264 Fed. 697.

NATURALIZATION

Repeal of section.—This section was not repealed by implication by the act of June 29, 1906 [6 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) p. 952 et seq.]. Petition of Easurk Emsen Charr, (W. D. Mo. 1921) 273 Fed. 207.

This section in so far as it embraces the words "white persons" was not repealed by the Act of Feb. 5, 1917, ch. 29. [1918 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. 212 et seq.] In re Bhagat Singh Thind, (D. C. Ore. 1920) 268 Fed. 683, wherein the court said:

"Repeals by implication are not favored, and, unless there is manifest repugnancy between the later and the former act, the former must remain operative. The argument is that, as Congress eliminated the words 'white persons' from the Immigration Act, the act in question, it must be inferred that it intended to eliminate these words also from section 2169, and thus to amend that section accordingly. This does not necessarily follow. Congress was dealing with the subject of immigration, and not of naturalization, and it may well be that Congress designed thenceforth to exclude Hindus from entry into the United States, and still permit such as were domiciled here the privilege of being naturalized. In this light, I see no repugnancy between the act and section 2169 and other naturalization regulations."

"Free white persons"—In general.—In accordance with numerous holdings the term includes, as commonly understood, all European races and those Caucasians belonging to the races around the Mediterranean Sea, whether they are considered as fair whites or dark whites, and though certain of the eastern and southern European races are technically classified as of Mongolian or Tartar origin. Generally speaking, 'free white persons' includes members of the white or Caucasian race as distinct from the black, red, yellow, and brown races.

"Whether or not historically the term 'Caucasian' is accurate as a designation of the white race, it is a term which appeals to common understanding and to that of the lawmakers with practical definiteness, and the term 'white person' may now be said to have a well understood meaning." Petition of Easurk Emsen Charr, (W. D. Mo. 1921) 273 Fed. 207.

Hindu.—Section 3 of the Act of Feb. 5, 1917, (1918 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. 214) which excludes Hindus from admission into this country by territorial delimitations, does not deprive a high class Hindu of his right to be admitted to citizenship where it appears that he was a resident in this country prior to the time when such act was passed. In re Bhagat Singh Thind, (D. C. Ore. 1920) 268 Fed. 683.

Korean.—Koreans are admittedly members of the Mongol race. "Whatever their precise shade of color may be defined to be, they are confessedly not white persons, either in fact or in accordance with common understanding, and they are about as far removed from Europe and the Mediterranean Sea as could well be imagined." Petition of Easurk Emsen Charr, (W. D. Mo. 1921) 273 Fed. 207.

Vol. VI, p. 947, sec. 2170. [First ed., vol. V, p. 208.]

Purpose of section.—"While Congress, in dealing with the naturalization problem, recognized it to be impolitic to perpetuate the character of alien longer than was absolutely necessary, the law-making body still recognized that a reasonable probationary term should be prescribed to enable candidates to get rid of foreign and to acquire American attachments, to learn the principles and imbibe the spirit of our government, and to admit of a probability, at least, of their feeling a real interest in our affairs. A residence of not less than five years was, therefore, required of an alien before he might petition for citizenship, this to conciliate the feelings of the candidate to the manners, laws, and government of this country." In re Vasicek, (E. D. Mo. 1921) 271 Fed. 326.

I. INTRODUCTORY (p. 953)

Historical as to origin and growth of naturalization laws, see In re Goldberg, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 269 Fed. 392.

Naturalization as a matter of right.—"Aliens have no right, inherent or statutory, to be admitted to membership in the body politic of the United States of America. Naturalization, then, being solely and entirely a political privilege extended by sovereign grace to aliens resident within the United States, Congress has undoubted authority under the Constitution to prescribe the terms and conditions upon which such privilege shall be granted." Ex p. Eberhardt, (E. D. Mo. 1921) 270 Fed. 334; In re Tomarchio, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 269 Fed. 400; In re Sigelman, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 217.

Necessity of strict compliance with law.—"The provisions of the Naturalization Law must be strictly complied with in order to confer jurisdiction." Petition of Briesse, (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 267 Fed. 600.

Balancing benefit to country with obligations assumed.—"Since the status of citizenship involves reciprocal obligations as between state and citizen, it ought in fairness and in compensation for such obligations to be beneficial as well to the state as to the person who by naturalization seeks citizenship. To this end, the proofs exacted from the applicant, and the status and condition of the applicant, which these proofs disclose, ought to be considered in the light of what such status and conditions promise to the government for the future, and with only negligible regard for the past. Luria v. United States, 231 U. S. 23, 34 Sup. Ct. 10, 58 L. ed. 101. While the antecedent character of the applicant and his reputation and acts in the past are persuasive, as aiding the assumption of continuance upon a good course, yet the government is entitled, before it receives him, and before it assumes the obligation to protect him as a citizen, to consider whether the burdens entailed will not be so far greater than the benefits accruing to it as to make the naturalization of the applicant a bad or dangerous bargain, and a bargain utterly unfair to its other millions of citizens." Thus, where an applicant had left his wife and children in Russia in 1913 and had not been able to communicate with them for a period of seven years, his petition was denied where it appeared that he sought citizenship mainly for the purpose of returning to Russia under the protection of the American flag in order to get his family and bring them to this country, and it further appeared that he secured deferred classification in the draft for army service on his representation that his wife and children were "mainly dependent on his labor for support." The court, however, said it did not particularly stress the latter point, and it principally emphasized the fact that the benefits which the country would receive were entirely incommensurate with the obligations it would incur by reason of possible foreign complications. In re Sigelman, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 217.

A privilege not a right.—To the same effect as original annotation, see In re Roeper, (D. C. Del. 1921) 274 Fed. 490.

Terms and conditions to be strictly enforced.—"The terms and conditions specified and prescribed by Congress respecting the grant to aliens of the favor or privilege of naturalization as citizens of the United States of America must be strictly construed and enforced, and aliens are bound to strictly meet and conform to these terms and conditions upon which alone the right they seek can be conferred." Ex p. Eberhardt, (E. D. Mo. 1921) 270 Fed. 334.

Vol. VI, p. 958, sec. 4, par. first. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 366.]

"District in which such alien resides."—In New York it is held that the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is limited to the county in which the alien resides and makes his application. Petition of Briesse, (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 267 Fed. 600, wherein it was held that a declaration of intention was ineffectual where it incorrectly stated that the applicant was a resident of the county in which he filed his declaration.

Effect of subsequent acts on declaration.—It is said that there is not any statutory provision or controlling decision, or decision by any appellate court, which would warrant a holding to the effect that a declaration of intention, properly made, is "violated" or becomes "void" by reason of subsequent acts or conduct on the part of the alien in question, in the absence of a formal declaration withdrawing such intention to become a citizen, and in the absence of an express statutory provision to that effect. In re Miegel, (E. D. Mich. 1921) 272 Fed. 688. In this connection the court further said:

"By making his declaration of intention, petitioner took the first step toward citizenship. There were, to be sure, several other steps to be taken before the coveted goal of citizenship could be reached, and it might be that he could not, because of failure or inability to take such other steps, attain such goal. That, however, is a wholly different consideration and one which cannot change or effect the fact that the first step had actually been taken. The statute having prescribed the requisites of this first step, and the latter having been taken in strict conformity to such statute, this court cannot hold, and thereby in effect declare, that what has, in fact and according to the undisputed public record, been done by petitioner has not been done."

V. Certificate.

II. SIGNATURE AND VERIFICATION

2. Verification (p. 961)

The words "duly verified" as used in this section "mean a verification before the clerk of the court or his duly authorized deputy, and not before a notary public or other officer." In re Guary, (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 271 Fed. 968.

Substitution of witnesses.—A competent witness to a naturalization application cannot be substituted for an incompetent one. In re Kornstein, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 172.

Effect of insufficient verification.—A witness who testifies to the good character of a candidate, in a case where such candidate is not in truth and in fact a man of good character, is not a credible witness, such as the law calls for and a petition verified by such an incredible witness will be denied. In re Kornstein, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 172, holding also that the verification of a naturalization application by an incompetent witness renders it void.

III. FILING PETITION

1. Time of Filing (p. 962)

"Nor more than seven years."—As to the limitation of seven years on the life of a declaration of intention it is said: "Existing law places a limitation of seven years upon the life of a declaration of intention. The law excludes parts of days. A declaration is therefore valid, so far as its age is concerned, for the purpose of petitioning for naturalization, on its seventh anniversary. In re Babjak (D. C.) 211 Fed. 551. But there is no expedient that may be resorted to whereby the life of a given declaration of intention may be extended beyond said seventh anniversary." Ex p. Eberhardt, (E. D. Mo. 1921) 270 Fed. 334.

Necessity of filing.—As to the necessity of filing the certificate of arrival the court, in Ex p. Eberhardt, (E. D. Mo. 1921) 270 Fed. 334, said:

"It is particularly to be noted that 'at the time of filing his petition there shall be filed with the clerk of the court,' by the petitioner, the certificate of arrival called for by the statute. The same provision of law requires the candidate to make a part of his application, in the same manner, his declaration of intention. Where a valid declaration of intention is not attached to such a petition at the time of its filing, that fact renders the application void. United States v. Morena, 245 U. S. 392, 38 Sup. Ct. 151, 62 L. ed. 359. And the same rule prevails, as we have seen in the Ness Case, supra, where at the time of the execution of the petition, the same was not supported by a valid certificate of arrival. The fact that such a certificate was in existence, on the date petition was executed, and that the same was being mailed to St. Louis from Washington, does not in any manner alter the situation. The statute is specific in its requirement that at the time of the execution of the petition the certificate of arrival needed must be in the hands of the clerk of the court, who is required to make the same an integral part thereof. A later attaching of such a certificate of arrival to a given petition does not meet the requirements of the law. Such petition is a nullity. It is not voidable, but is void. . . .

"It is worthy of notice, also, that the administrative officer concerned with naturalization matters, to wit, the Secretary of Labor, has in naturalization regulations promulgated September 24, 1920, rule 5, declared that when a clerk of court executes a petition for an alien who arrived after June 29, 1906, and fails to attach thereto his certificate of arrival, then no valid petition is docketed. While the construction of a statute is a judicial function, the ultimate exercise of which must lodge in the courts, yet 'the construction placed upon a statute by the officers whose duty it is to execute it is entitled to great consideration, especially if such construction has been made by the highest officers in the executive department of the government.'"

Vol. VI, p. 967, sec. 4, par. third.

Reservations in taking oath.—Where it is manifest that the petitioner cannot, without reservations, mental or otherwise, take the oath of allegiance, such oath should not be administered or accepted. In re Roeper, (D. C. Del. 1921) 274 Fed. 490, so declaring in denying the petition of one who at the final hearing in open court testified, in substance, that he has conscientious scruples against the shedding of human blood, even in warfare, and that, if admitted to citizenship, he would not be willing to serve in the field in the military forces of the United States, if called upon to do so.

 III. "Good moral character."

I. SATISFACTION OF COURT (p. 967)

Acquaintance with American institutions essential.—As to qualification in this respect it has been said:

"While a candidate for naturalization is to be commended for having acquired material wealth, and for having lived a blameless life, during his period of residence here, nevertheless such a state of affairs does not relieve him in any way of the necessity of possessing a working knowledge of the form and general structure of our government, and of the responsibilities and duties, as well as the privileges of a citizen thereof. Lacking such qualifications, it is impossible for him to swear, either intelligently or conscientiously, that, as required by law, he is 'attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States,' or that he is 'well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same.' Under our form of government, the people, theoretically, at least, make, interpret, and execute the laws. Accordingly, their reasonable intelligence and education are indispensable prerequisites to the preservation and transmission of civil liberty and republican institutions.

"The requirements of law cannot be held to have been met on a mere showing of the candidate that he is peaceable, industrious, of good character, and law-abiding. By reference to decisions of the courts announced prior to the Naturalization Act of 1906 (34 Stat. pt. 1, p. 596), and during the period the government did not, as now, exercise supervision of the naturalization of aliens, we find declared in In re Naturalization, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 597, that no person will be naturalized who has not a general familiarity with the federal Constitution and with our method of government, state and national. The act of Congress requires each applicant to take an oath that he is attached to the principles of the Constitution. No applicant will be permitted to so swear unless he knows what these principles are. No person should be naturalized who has not some general comprehension of what the Constitution of the United States is and of the principles which it affirms. In re Bodek (C. C.) 63 Fed. 813.

Also see Rushworth v. Judges, 58 N. J. Law, 97, 32 Atl. 743, 30 L. R. A. 761; In re Conway, 9 Misc. Rep. 652, 30 N. Y. Supp. 835; In re Lab's Petition, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 728, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 597; In re Kanaka Nian, 6 Utah, 259, 21 Pac. 993, 4 L. R. A. 726. The applicant's oath to support the Constitution of the United States will not be accepted, if, upon examination, it appears that he does not understand its significance, or is without such knowledge of the Constitution as is essential to the rational assumption of an understanding to support it . . . even a casual consideration of such a case must, however, convince any thoughtful person that as an indispensable prerequisite to naturalization the candidate must possess an acquaintance with, and working knowledge of, the principles of the Declaration of Independence and Constitution of the United States. An intelligent sympathy with, and understanding of the purposes of these great charters of human liberty must be shown by the candidate, and he must have a comprehension of the obligations and responsibilities of citizenship arising from his taking the oath of allegiance forming a part of his naturalization proceeding." In re Goldberg, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 269 Fed. 392.

Understanding of terms "anarchy" and "polygamy."—A petitioner for naturalization who admits that he does not know the meaning of the words "anarchy" and "polygamy" as used in his petition must be held to have failed to meet the requirements prescribed in naturalization cases, as it cannot be said in such a case that the candidate is in truth and in fact "attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same." In re Vasicek, (E. D. Mo. 1921) 271 Fed. 326.

III. "GOOD MORAL CHARACTER" (p. 971)

The test in any given naturalization case is whether the candidate is in law and in fact actually entitled to citizenship. In re Kornstein, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 172.

Nature of testimony as to moral character.—As to the nature of the testimony required of witnesses in respect to moral character it is said:

"The spirit of the law requires that upon the hearing they shall, in person, in open court, positively support their preliminary affidavits to the effect that, in their opinion, the petitioner is in every way qualified to be admitted as a citizen. The requirement is not that they shall testify that he is qualified in every way considered necessary in the opinion of the court, but qualified in every way in their, the witnesses' opinion. The government wants no citizen whom his own selected friends cannot whole-heartedly recommend. Witnesses may feel that they know the petitioner sufficiently well to say of their own personal knowledge that he is a man of good moral character, but, in the very nature of things, in the vast majority of cases, the court must depend upon good reputation of the petitioner as vouched for by these witnesses, as the best evidence of good character, and, if the two witnesses of the petitioner, chosen by himself, plainly show themselves unwilling to positively and unequivocally state that the petitioner has a good reputation in the community where he lives, and that they themselves believe him to be a man of good moral character in all respects, and that his neighbors think well of him, and that he is in every way qualified in their opinion to be admitted, they have disqualified themselves as witnesses in his behalf, at least unless it develops that their reason for not so doing is entirely groundless or whimsical." U. S. v. Olsen, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 272 Fed. 706.

Maintaining place of bad repute.—One who has conducted a disorderly hotel for years cannot be considered a man of good moral character for naturalization purposes. Such an offense is one against morals which will permanently disbar him from citizenship and his application will be denied with prejudice to his right to renew it. In re Kornstein, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 172.

Member of I. W. W. organization.—In U. S. v. Olsen, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 272 Fed. 706, a certificate of naturalization, issued to a member of the I. W. W. organization, was cancelled.

Claiming exemption from military duty under a plea of alienage is a bar to citizenship under section 2 of the Selective Service Act as amended by section 4, ch. 12, of Act of July 9, 1918 (1918 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. sec. 4, p. 895). In re Tomarchio, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 269 Fed. 400. And In re Miegel, (E. D. Mich. 1921) 272 Fed. 688, the act of a petitioner in claiming exemption as an alien enemy from military service in the army of the United States during the war, was held to show in itself, that he was not "attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same," within the meaning of this section, and his petition for citizenship was therefore denied on that ground. This view, however, was held not to be applicable in the case of an alien who claimed an exemption to which he was not entitled. See also as to the second proposition In re Rubin, (E. D. Mich. 1921) 272 Fed. 697.

Registration for military service with German consul.—In In re Cuny, (S. D. Tex. 1920) 269 Fed. 464, the government objected to the admission of the petitioner to citizenship on the ground that, in the summer of 1914, he, having theretofore filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States, did register for military service with the German consul at Galveston.

The contention of the government was that this registration invalidated the declaration of intention, and therefore left the petitioner in the case of one without a declaration of intention, wanting in one of the essential formal requisites for admission.

The petitioner replied that, while it was true that he did register, he did so, not for the purpose of aiding Germany, but in order that, after the war should be over, if he should at any time in his future life have an opportunity to go to Germany to visit his mother, he could not be excluded or imprisoned, and sought to emphasize this position by the proof, uncontradicted, that while he was technically a German subject, because born in Alsace, he was born of French parents, educated in France, and always cherished a lively antipathy toward the Germans; that he knew, when he registered, that it would not be possible for him to return to Germany for service, and he registered, not with the intention of serving, but merely to preserve his standing.

The petitioner was of high moral character, and the only objection to his admission is grounded on the point above stated. The court said: "In view, therefore, of the fact that at the time of his registration the United States was not at war with Germany, and that the evidence not only fully acquits petitioner of any disloyalty to the United States, but furnishes a record of loyalty and efficient helpfulness in the war work of this government after the United States became a party to the conflict, it is my opinion that the order in this case should be that the petition of the applicant be dismissed without prejudice, with the right to refile, or, if he is so disposed, to withdraw the declaration as a basis for filing the petition in any other district to which he may remove, with the right to the petitioner to be admitted upon showing that for a period of five years prior to the filing of his new petition he conducted himself in the manner which the statute requires this five years to be arrived at, without taking into consideration any time prior to the registration with the German consul; and it will be so ordered."

Attempt to enlist in British army.—In In re Watkiss, (S. D. Tex. 1920) 269 Fed. 466, which was a hearing on the petition for citizenship of John Walford Watkiss, a subject of Great Britain, whose papers were in proper form, and who stood accredited in every respect for the award of citizenship, except for the objection raised by the government, through its examiner, that petitioner did, subsequent to the date of the execution of his declaration of intention, endeavor to enlist in the British armies for service in the World War. The court declared:

"The record containing no proof of a provision for compulsory military service in the British army applicable to petitioner at the time when he undertook to enlist in it, his act must be held to be that of a volunteer, which neither in fact nor in law was a recognition of the authority of the British government, or an act of allegiance thereto. This being true, I find nothing in the conduct of petitioner which could be said to be contrary to the Constitution of the United States, or other than well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same.

"In the Case of John Peter Cuny, 269 Fed. 464, opinion filed the 3d day of November, 1920, where the applicant registered with the German consul, I have set out the reasons which induced me to hold that that petition should be denied, and to that opinion I refer for the general considerations controlling here. Applying those considerations to this case, I think it clear that this petition should be granted, and the applicant admitted, for, while the distinction at first blush between this and the Cuny Case may appear narrow, it is none the less clear, resting as it does upon the fact that the act of Cuny was a rendering allegiance to a compulsory requirement, and therefore an attorning or act of fealty to the German government, while the acts of Watkiss were merely voluntary acts of a person who felt the call of a righteous cause, and desired to do his part in it, with no attorning to or recognition of the authority of the British government over him.

"It is therefore my judgment, and it will be so ordered, that the petitioner be admitted."

A denial of a candidate's petition for naturalization on the ground that he is not a man of good moral character will debar him again seeking citizenship for at least five years. In re Kornstein, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 172.

VII. VACATION OF PROCEEDINGS (p. 980)

Procuring passport as citizen of foreign country.—A petition for naturalization will be denied where it appears that the applicant subsequent to his declaration of intention presented himself before the diplomatic officer of his native land and procured a passport as a subject of that country. In re Aldani, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 269 Fed. 193.

The court said: "Some three months after filing the petition for naturalization in question, the candidate, on his own testimony, returned to Italy, the country of his nativity. He was unable to procure a passport from the American authorities. He accordingly presented himself before the diplomatic officer of his native land, stationed here in St. Louis, and procured a passport as an Italian subject. Therein he renewed his oath of allegiance to the monarch governing that country.

"Such action is inconsistent with the avowal contained in the declaration of intention of the candidate. His petition for naturalization will accordingly have to be denied for the reason that the declaration of intention has been nullified. A petition for naturalization not predicated on a valid declaration of intention, is void."

II. CONSTRUCTION IN GENERAL (p. 990)

"Illegally."—A narrow meaning will not be attached to the word "illegally" by paraphrasing it with "unlawfully." U. S. v. Olsen, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 272 Fed. 706.

Certificates of citizenship affected.—The provisions of this section apply not only to certificates of citizenship issued under the act but to all certificates of citizenship which may have been issued heretofore by any court exercising jurisdiction in naturalization proceedings under prior laws. Schurmann v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 917.

III. GROUNDS FOR CANCELLATION

2. Fraud (p. 991)

Disloyalty at time of making application.—In U. S. v. Herberger, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 272 Fed. 278, the certificate of naturalization issued to the defendant, a person of German birth, was cancelled on the ground of disloyalty existing at the time of making his application. The court said: "Loyalty or allegiance is, necessarily, of slow growth; therefore, somewhat involuntary, not fully subject to the will. Those who lightly, for temporary advantages, undertake to change their allegiance, are liable to overlook the deep-seated nature of this feeling; but the fact that not until afterwards, in times of stress, is it made manifest that the desires, suffered to lie dormant, are stronger for their native than their adopted country, although this fact may not be fully realized at the time of their naturalization, renders it none the less a legal fraud for the applicant to fail to disclose his true, although latent, feeling in such a matter."

3. Illegal Procurement (p. 982)

In general.—Where an alien engaged in an immoral and illegal business procures naturalization he will on proper proceedings be stripped of his citizenship on the ground that he fraudulently and illegally procured the same. In re Kornstein, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 172.

False swearing in renouncing allegiance.—Original fraud in renouncing allegiance to a foreign sovereign may be determined by later conduct of the person. Schurmann v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 917, so holding in the case of a person of German birth who before and during the war with Germany showed his allegiance to that nation by his remarks and conduct.

Membership in organization to promote anarchy.—In U. S. v. Olsen, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 272 Fed. 706, a certificate of naturalization to a member of the I. W. W. organization was cancelled as illegally procured.

Vol. VI, p. 1001, sec. 30. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 379.]

Section as repealing R. S. sec. 2169.—The act did not repeal by implication section 2169 of the Revised Statutes (see 6 Fed. Stat. Ann. 2d ed. p. 944). Petition of Easurk Emsen Charr, (W. D. Mo. 1921) 273 Fed. 207.

Purpose.—This act was passed in order "to make possible the naturalization of citizens of the Philippine Islands and of Porto Rico, who were theretofore generally excluded because, first, the naturalization laws of the United States applied only to aliens, and, second, they required a renunciation of former allegiance. It was contended that this provision of the act of 1906 removed the inhabitants of those islands from the limitation of section 2169. A native of the Philippine Islands applied for citizenship upon that ground. Ethnologically he was found to be one-fourth white and three-fourths brown or Malay. His application was denied for the reason that he was not a white person, and section 2169 controlled and limited the provisions of the act of 1906 as part of the general naturalization statute of the United States." Petition of Easurk Emsen Charr, (W. D. Mo. 1921) 273 Fed. 207.

1918 Supp., p. 488, sec. 1, par. seventh.

Purpose and scope of act.—"The purpose of this act is well understood. It was to reward those aliens who had entered the military or naval service of the United States, as therein described, by admitting them to citizenship without many of the slow processes, formalities, and strictness of proofs which were rigidly provided and enforced under the law affecting naturalization as it existed then, and as it exists now. The amendments made were not to the title as a whole, but primarily to section 4 of the Act of June 29, 1906, 34 Stat. 596. This section deals, not with persons eligible to become naturalized, but with the procedure to be taken and the showing to be made by those elsewhere defined to be eligible. This in itself is significant in its bearing upon the specific interpretation we are required to make. * * *

"It should be borne in mind that the policy of our law, from 1802 down to the present time, has had in view the prevention of all aliens, not free white persons, from becoming citizens. The first exception was introduced by the act of July 14, 1870, at which time persons of African nativity and African descent were included, in view, as has been stated, of the peculiar situation of inhabitants in this country of that race. The revisers of the laws of the United States, at the first session of the Forty-Third Congress from 1873 to 1874, inadvertently omitted the words 'free white persons' from section 2169; but this was immediately corrected, upon discovery, by Act of February 18, 1875, entitled 'An act to correct errors and to supply omissions in the Revised Statutes of the United States,' and the language of that section was restored to its present reading. The repealing section of the act of 1906 did not include section 2169, and the present act of 1918 expressly preserves it in force, 'except as specified in the seventh subdivision of this act and under the limitation therein defined.' The history of legislation upon this subject convincingly demonstrates the purpose of Congress to limit applicants for naturalization to free white persons and those of African nativity and descent." Petition of Easurk Emsen Charr, (W. D. Mo. 1921) 273 Fed. 207.

"Any alien."—The words "any alien," appearing in the Act of May 9, 1918, are subject to prior judicial interpretation, and embrace only such aliens as could theretofore have been admitted to citizenship, and merely provide more expeditious and favorable terms of admission than before existed. In re Geronimo Para, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 269 Fed. 643.

The privilege granted by this section is limited to those races otherwise eligible to naturalization and has been held not to extend the privilege to a Korean. Petition of Easurk Emsen Charr, (W. D. Mo. 1921) 273 Fed. 207.

Effect of military service by aliens.—It may be added that the provisions of the draft law clearly did not contemplate the incorporation of those not eligible to citizenship into the land and naval forces of the United States. That such may have been inducted into the service through voluntary enlistment or inadvertence of draft boards cannot affect the purpose of Congress, in regard to naturalization. Petition of Easurk Emsen Charr, (W. D. Mo. 1921) 273 Fed. 207, wherein it was said:

"What are the specifications referred to in the seventh subdivision, and what is the limitation therein defined? As has been said, the only reference to race contained in that section was as to Filipinos and Porto Ricans. For this reason, it may well have been deemed necessary, or at least expedient, to reaffirm the binding force and effect of section 2169. It has already been shown that Filipinos, in certain cases, have been adjudged inadmissible to citizenship because of racial disqualification. Some citizens of Porto Rico may be conceived to present similar disabilities. Congress, in passing this law, must be presumed to have acted with knowledge of all previous legislation and of its interpretation by the courts. The exceptions referred to must have been the races especially mentioned in the seventh subdivision, and the limitation was the military or naval service performed. In other words, under the general law, neither a Filipino nor a Porto Rican could necessarily have been admitted to citizenship. Under this subdivision, he may be, irrespective of race, if he has performed the service specified.

"If, as contended by the petitioner, the exception reserved was intended to mean any alien who should perform military service, it is difficult to perceive why the provision as to the continuing force of section 2169 was necessary at all; the limitation of military or naval service being sufficient to preserve that section intact in all its general features. This view is corroborated and emphasized by the fact that, throughout the original title 30, Revised Statutes of 1878, the term 'any alien' is used repeatedly without qualification, the limitation to free white persons and those of African nativity and descent being raised entirely from section 2169; and the same is true of section 2166 and other acts conferring special privileges upon soldiers and sailors. Moreover, as has been previously stated, the Act of May 9, 1918, was chiefly intended to modify section 4 of the Act of 1906 as to procedure merely, shortening the time and smoothing the way to citizenship. Section 2169 has to do only with racial qualification, and out of abundance of caution it was expressly reaffirmed."

"Merchant vessel" defined.—A merchant vessel is a ship that is engaged in a carrying trade in connection with trade and commerce, and not merely engaged in the transportation of such goods as may be necessary for repairs of cable lines of a privately owned concern, and which goods are not designed for the general trade. In re Jupp, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 274 Fed. 494.

1918 Supp., p. 491, sec. 1, par. tenth.

Act available to supply record evidence of naturalization.—In State v. Superior Ct., (1920) 113 Wash. 54, 193 Pac. 226, this act was referred to arguendo in sustaining a state statute prescribing the proof of citizenship to be furnished by a naturalized citizen. Answering an argument that it disfranchised citizens who might be unable to furnish record evidence of their naturalization, the court quoted the act and said:

"It will be noted that this statute provides that any person not an alien enemy, who has resided uninterruptedly in the United States during the 5 years next preceding July 1, 1914, and was on that date otherwise qualified to become a citizen of the United States, and because of misinformation regarding his citizenship status erroneously exercised the rights, and performed the duties of a citizen in good faith, may file a petition for naturalization prescribed by the law, without making the preliminary declaration of intention required of other aliens, and upon satisfactory proof may be admitted as a citizen of the United States. Even if the naturalization papers or a copy thereof cannot be produced, it is no great hardship upon a naturalized citizen, who has previously in good faith exercised the rights and performed the duties of a citizen of the United States, to comply with that act, and thereby be able to furnish the proof required by the registration act of this state."

1919 Supp., p. 274, sec. 1.

Scope of section.—In Petition of Easurk Emsen Charr, (D. C. W. D. Mo. 1921) 273 Fed. 207, the court said, regarding this section:

"Because of the importance of the question involved and the earnestness of counsel, the court has made further investigation of the proceedings in Congress attending this legislation, in order, if possible, to ascertain the intent and purpose of that body in view of the claimed ambiguity in the language employed. This enactment appears in the naturalization section of the Sundry Civil Act Public No. 21, 66th Congress. It is not mentioned in the report on the bill, and a search of the Congressional Record discloses that it was not mentioned in any of the debates either in the House or Senate, and therefore there is nothing in the records of Congress to show the intent of Congress as to this particular section. It is worthy of note in this connection that a bill of similar purport, H. R. 6804, entitled 'A bill to facilitate the naturalization of persons who served in the military or naval forces of the United States since April 6, 1917, who have been, or who may be, honorably discharged therefrom,' introduced June 27, 1919, by Congressman Rogers, and referred to the committee on immigration and naturalization, failed to pass. It would seem, therefore, that this clause of the naturalization section of the Act approved July 19, 1919, was simply attached as a rider to an appropriation bill, and went through without scrutiny or debate by either house. It cannot, therefore, in the absence of language clearly expressing that purpose, be held to relax the provisions of the prior Act of May 9, 1918, which have been duly considered.

"The court has also received a copy of the report of the Senate committee on immigration upon the Act of May 9, 1918, aforesaid. It contains this significant language:

"It [section 2 of the act] also declares that nothing in the act shall enlarge or repeal in any way section 2169 of the Revised Statutes, except as specified in the seventh subdivision and under the limitation therein defined. This means that Filipinos may be naturalized who are enlisted in the army or navy of the United States and are honorably discharged therefrom."

"This confirms the purpose and intent of Congress as deduced and declared in the foregoing memorandum. The words 'any person of foreign birth' occurring in the Act of July 19, supra, do not enlarge the word 'alien' as contemplated by these acts, in view of their specific reservations. A reason for the later legislation, if one is necessary to be advanced, is found in the further limitation of the application of the provisions of section 7 to a period of one year after all the American troops are returned to the United States, which provision is not found in the earlier act."

NAVY

Vol. VI, p. 1141, sec. 1496. [First ed., vol. V, p. 295.]

Promotion as of what date.—Where an ensign in the Navy entitled to promotion to the grade of junior lieutenant on January 31, 1910, successfully passes his examination as required by this section, but is found temporarily disqualified by the medical board acting under R. S. sec. 1493, and afterwards successfully passes the medical examination, he is entitled to the pay of lieutenant, junior grade, from the date when he was eligible to promotion to that grade. Wadsworth v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 383.

Vol. VI, p. 1154, sec. 5. [First ed., vol. V, p. 302.]

Effect of authority to sell given by President.—The effect of authority thus given to the Secretary of the Navy to sell a vessel for such price as he shall approve is only to relieve him of the restriction of the act of 1883 that a bid, to be accepted, must be more than the appraised value and to permit him to reject all bids, if they be wholly inadequate. U. S. v. Levineon, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 692.

Highest bidder not selected.—Where by mistake the highest bid for a vessel is not known to the Secretary of the Navy owing to its having been placed with bids for another vessel and he executes a bill of sale to a lower bidder who had apparently made the highest bid, the government is not bound by his act, as he was bound to deliver the bill of sale to the highest bidder. U. S. v. Levinson, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 692.

Vol. VI, p. 1168, sec. 9. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 395.]

Effect of setting aside sentence.—Where one is dismissed from the United States navy pursuant to a sentence of a summary court-martial with what is known as a bad conduct discharge, his service in the navy is terminated and the fact that the sentence of the court-martial is subsequently set aside and that he reports for duty under protest when directed but does not re-enlist, gives the navy no further control over him. Ex p. Harrie, (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 268 Fed. 911.

1918 Supp., p. 541, par. (b).

Power to modify or cancel held not applicable as to subcontracts in West, etc., Co. v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp., (D. C. Mass. 1920) 266 Fed. 557.

1918 Supp., p. 551. [Uniform gratuity for training, etc.]

What constitutes severance of connection with service.—Where an ensign in the Naval Reserve Force receives an order from the Navy Department stating that he is discharged from the U. S. Naval Reserve Force, and the next day accepts a commission as temporary ensign in the Regular Navy, his connection with the service is not severed within the meaning of this paragraph. Price v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 499.

1918 Supp., p. 555. [Clothing gratuity to members, etc.]

Effect of checking account by Treasury officers.—This paragraph does not prevent a member of the Naval Reserve Force from recovering his uniform gratuity even though his account had already been checked by the accounting officers of the Treasury. Price v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 499.

OFFICERS OF MERCHANT VESSELS

Vol. VI, p. 1252, sec. 4438. [First ed., vol. V, p. 398.]

Failure to have government license as defense to civil action.—Where a canal company licensed a person to act as pilot of vessels through the Cape Cod canal and he undertook to pilot a boat through a channel which had been dredged in Buzzard's Bay and which formed an approach to the canal, when an accident happened, the canal company cannot set up in defense to an action against it for the pilot's alleged negligence the fact that he has not obtained a government license to act as pilot in Buzzard's Bay. Boston, etc., Canal Co. v. Chadwick, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 775, wherein it was said:

"The canal company, by granting a license to McBride, held him out as one who had such special knowledge, and if it issued him such a license without his having obtained a government license as a pilot for Buzzard's Bay, it cannot take advantage of its wrong by claiming that it should be relieved from the consequence of his negligence because he did not have a government license."

PATENTS

Vol. VII, p. 11, sec. 4883. [First ed., vol. V, p. 417.]

- I. Nature of patent.
- II. Validity of patent.

I. NATURE OF PATENT (p. 11)

Authority to issue.—The patent laws of the United States are addressed to no one in particular, but dictated by public policy, restrained only by the Constitution, that the patent "secure for limited time to inventors the exclusive right to their discovery." U. S. v. United Shoe Machinery Co., (E. D. Mo. 1920) 264 Fed. 138.

Power of Congress—Contracts, sales, leases and licenses.—There is nothing in the laws relating to patents which in any wise affects contracts for license, use, sale, or lease of patented articles. They are subject to the same governmental and legislative control as other contracts. The court said:

"While it is true, as claimed by counsel, that by the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution the police power is reserved to the states, it is now well settled that, as the Constitution vested in Congress the exclusive power to regulate commerce among the states and grant patents, it possesses what is akin to the police power of the states, the right to regulate acts relating to them, including licenses, sales, contracts, and leases of patented articles, especially when employed in commerce among the states or foreign states."

And later in the same case the court further declared:

"The conclusion reached is that, while Congress cannot deprive a patentee of the exclusive use of the patent, or reduce the time for which it is granted by existing law, without violating the Fifth Amendment, a patentee has no vested right in conditions of contracts for use, license, or lease of his patented invention, which Congress may not prohibit, if in its judgment they are injurious to the public welfare, though he may have possessed that right under the common or municipal law, as theretofore construed by the courts. A patentee may exclude all others from the use of it; he may withhold it entirely from the public, if he so desires; but, when he enters into contracts for the use of it, his contracts are subject to regulation by legislative act, if deemed necessary for the protection of the public, though subject to judicial review. But this review by the courts is limited to only one matter: i. e., is there any reasonably substantial ground for the regulation, or is it arbitrary and without any substantial reason? The wisdom of the act is beyond the power of the courts to question." U. S. v. United Shoe Machinery Co., (E. D. Mo. 1920) 264 Fed. 138. Hence, articles of commerce, notwithstanding they are covered by valid patents become when manufactured, sold and placed in the ordinary channels of trade, subject to the same limitations and stand on the same footing as ordinary unpatented articles of commerce; and whatever would be an illegal combination in restraint of trade having for its subject-matter unpatented articles will be an illegal combination if the articles are patented. U. S. v. Schrader, (N. D. Ohio 1919) 264 Fed. 175, wherein it was held that agreements between a manufacturer and jobbers for the sale to them of the manufacturer's own patented product on condition or with the understanding on their part that they will resell that product only at certain prices fixed or listed by the manufacturer were not per se contracts or combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade in violation of the provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

Nature and privileges of patent right.—A patent is a contract made by acceptance by the government of the proposition made by the inventor in his application. Tompkins-Hawley-Fuller Co. v. Holden, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 424. And is in the nature of property. U. S. v. United Shoe Machinery Co., (E. D. Mo. 1920) 264 Fed. 138.

Purpose and effect of patent right.—It has long been settled that the patentee receives nothing from the law which he did not have before, and that the only effect of his patent is to restrain others from manufacturing, using or selling that which he has invented. The patent law simply protects him in the monopoly of that which he has invented and has described in the claims of his patent. Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., (1917) 243 U. S. 502, 37 S. Ct. 416, 61 U. S. (L. ed.) 871, Ann. Cas. 1918A 959, L. R. A. 1917E 1187.

Construction.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Tompkins-Hawley-Fuller Co. v. Holden, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 424; I. T. S. Rubber Co. v. Essex Rubber Co., (D. C. Mass. 1920) 270 Fed. 593.

Patents are to be liberally construed so as to secure to an inventor the real invention which he intends to secure by his patent. Tompkins-Hawley-Fuller Co. v. Holden, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 424.

II. VALIDITY OF PATENT (p. 12)

Presumption.—To same effect as original annotation, see Window Glass Mach. Co. v. Smethport Window Glass Co., (W. D. Pa. 1917) 266 Fed. 85.

The validity of a patent depends on novelty, utility and invention. Tompkins-Hawley-Fuller Co. v. Holden, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 424.

IV. GRANT TO PATENTEE (p. 20)

Expiration of patent — Rights of public.—In Lenox v. Jones, etc., Corp., (D. C. Mass. 1921) 271 Fed. 511, it was said: "That rights of monopoly, under patents based upon machines, instrumentalities, designs, etc., expire at the end of the term expressed in the patent (except, perhaps, as to exact copies, or something in striking similitude, in bad faith), and that things covered by the patent become public property—provided they are reasonably marked, by the name of the manufacturer who adopts them, and are reasonably and properly designated as something made by one, other than the original patentee, or producer, or manufacturer, by giving the true name of the one who makes them, and puts them into the trade, except perhaps in cases in exact like, or perhaps something in very close similitude, of the original in bad faith, to the end that purchasers shall not be deceived into buying a particular thing as an original, when it is not, and thus deceived into buying something they are not getting—seems to have been settled by decisions."

- III. What may be patented.
- IV. Invention.
- V. Utility.
- VI. Novelty and anticipation.
- VII. Prior use or sale.
- VIII. Abandonment.

I. IN GENERAL (p. 23)

The limitation of two years within which claims may be taken from a patent arises from the application of a sound principle of public policy for the prevention of the undue extension of monopoly by procrastination in the assertion of adverse rights against one already in possession. De Ferranti v. Har-matta, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 357.

II. WHO MAY OBTAIN PATENTS (p. 23)

Person entitled to patent — Invention at request of another.—Where the agent of a film manufacturing company requests a manufacturer of carbon paper, who is highly skilled in the art, to invent a special kind of such paper which shall have certain properties, but does not disclose any means of attaining the result, and the latter complies with the request and manufactures paper fulfilling the requirements, he is entitled to a patent as the inventor. Pembroke v. Sulzer, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 265 Fed. 996.

Employer and employee—Conception of employer carried out by employee.—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original annotation, see Laughlin v. Burry, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 270 Fed. 1013.

Effect of suggestions by employees.—"Suggestions as to improvements during experimentation may be made by workmen or associates of the inventor, but do not thereby deprive the inventor of the sole right to claim invention, if they are not of themselves patentable, or if they have to do with mere details in the work which were pointed out to the inventor and accepted and worked out by him, so that his own independent effort is actually responsible for the complete device. It is frequently difficult in a simple structure to determine whether there was participation by other people in what is claimed as invention, or whether the inventor has received ideas from his workmen and associates, under such circumstances that his own mind has been working with these associates, and has arrived at the result without independent invention on their part. Frequently this question must be determined by the acts of the parties. A share of credit for an invention does not mean that there has been joint invention in the legal sense, nor is an inventor to be deprived of his property in the invention because subsequently those who have voluntarily assisted him decide that they should have demanded recognition as coinventors in applying for a patent." Cline v. Horton, (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 274 Fed. 728.

Where an employee is the actual inventor the employer is not entitled to any rights in the patent by reason of the relation of employer and employee in the absence of some contract right. Ingle v. Landis Tool Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 464.

III. WHAT MAY BE PATENTED (p. 35)

Process.—A process patent is void where it represents only the functions of a machine. United Shoe Machinery Co. v. L. Q. White Shoe Co., (D. C. Mass. 1919) 270 Fed. 650.

Patent for product as barring process patent.—A patent for an article does not bar a patent for the process by which it was produced, where the application for the process patent was a division of, and was co-pending with, the application which resulted in the patent for the article. In re Zenk, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 327.

Improved combination.—The fact that there is no exact combination like the one sought to be patented, and that the new combination produces a better result than any prior one, has been held not to be conclusive of patentability. Rosenwasser v. B.

E. Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 114.

Imitation.—Where claims disclose not a mere imitation of an existing patent, but a new construction, whereby an imitation is made, the invention is patentable. Scott v. Aristo Hosiery Co., (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 266 Fed. 382. The court said: "If the dealer deceives by statement, or by some tricky method of sale, then he who is injured may have a cause of action. But where a patentee contributes a new construction, whereby an imitation is made, it cannot be presumed, at the threshold, that the purpose of the imitation is to deceive. Indeed, imitations may prove of great utility. They may serve the public just as acceptably and effectively as the real article at less cost."

A patent on a mere difference of degree in the use of a principle shown in the prior art is invalid. Minnesota, etc., Co. v. Eibel Process Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 540.

IV. INVENTION (p. 44)

Determining invention.—Invention is not determined by the extent of the advance in any art which the inventor makes. Bestwall Mfg. Co. v. U. S. Gypsum Co., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 542.

Evidence of the state of the art is admissible in actions at law under the general issue without a special notice, and in equity cases, without any averment in the answer touching the subject. Brown v. Piper, (1875) 91 U. S. 37, 23 U. S. (L. ed.) 200; Kauffmann v. Sodemann Heat, etc., Co., (E. D. Mo. 1920) 267 Fed. 435.

Invention shown by new combination.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see St. Louis Electrical Works v. Fore Electrical Mfg. Co., (E. D. Mo. 1920) 267 Fed. 440.

Functions of natural substances.—Patentable invention cannot be made to depend upon well-known inherent qualities, attributes, and functions of natural substances, such as wood, iron, or steel. Luten v. Kansas City Bridge Co., (W. D. Mo. 1921) 272 Fed. 533.

"The production of a new result which meets a recognized need and goes immediately into general use is held to disclose invention, though there would be no invention in the adoption of any one of the successive steps by which the result was attained." Tompkins-Hawley-Fuller Co. v. Holden, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 424.

A change of well-known material.—To same effect as original annotation, see Jennison-Wright Co. v. Hempy, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 372.

Bringing art to highest degree of perfection.—A device does not lack invention merely because the inventor did not successfully bring his art to the highest degree of perfection, nor because, without changes in or additions thereto, it could not be successful commercially. Sparks-Withington Co. v. Jay, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 449.

But an invention which adds nothing to the knowledge of the art, and does not accomplish its purpose practically when applied in industry, or is so negligible in its nature as to be wholly immaterial in results, is necessarily invalid. Houston v. Brown Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 445.

Product of mechanical skill.—To same effect as first paragraph of original annotation, see Pfeffer v. Western Doll Mfg. Co., (N. D. Ill. 1920) 271 Fed. 124.

What is obvious to a person skilled in the particular line of mechanics is not invention. Troy Wagon Works Co. v. Ohio Trailer Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 612.

Mechanical improvements as "invention."

—The claim of a patent, for improvements in scaffold supporting means, discloses no invention, where the changes therein made in a device, described in an earlier patent are simply mechanical, easy to discern and as easy to make, incidental entirely to the main idea of the earlier patentee, which was, as declared by him, to provide a scaffold that would "permit of adjustment at any height during the construction of a building or the repairing thereof," one which might "be readily moved from one position to another by the workmen without interfering materially with the work being performed," and one "in which different supports are employed," and "in which the shifting from one set of supports to another set" might "be accomplished without interfering in any degree with the workmen thereon, or their work." New York Scaffolding Co. v. Liebel-Binney Constr. Co., (1920) 254 U. S. 24, 41 S. Ct. 18, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1917) 243 Fed. 577, 156 C. C. A. 275. Followed in New York Scaffolding Co. v. Chain Belt Co., (1920) 254 U. S. 32, 41 S. Ct. 21, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1917) 245 Fed. 747, 158 C. C. A. 149.

Where an improvement produces a new and useful result and efficiency where there has been inefficiency there is invention. In re Coffield, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 270 Fed. 695.

Substitution of material.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co. v. Fornica Insulating Co., (S. D. Ohio 1920) 270 Fed. 632.

The test of equivalency.—To same effect as original annotation, see Superior Skylight Co. v. Kuhnla, (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 265 Fed. 282.

The difference between aggregations and combinations is not academic; the comparison frequently affords a valuable test of invention when the subject is cumbrous if not complicated machinery. Bryant Electric Co. v. Harvey Hubbell Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 572.

Construction of patent for combination.—A patent for a combination should be more strictly construed than a pioneer patent.

Handel Co. v. Jefferson Glass Co., (N. D. W. Va. 1920) 265 Fed. 286.

Combination of old devices.—Invention may lie in the adaption of old intermittent tools to a continuous machine. Juengst v. Hill Pub. Co., (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 267 Fed. 428.

"A mere aggregation of old and well-known devices may or may not be patentable, depending upon the circumstances of the particular case. If the combination claimed is an obvious one for attaining the advantages proposed, and one which would occur to any mechanic skilled in the art, it would not be patentable; and, if otherwise, it may be." Tompkins-Hawley-Fuller Co. v. Holden, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 424.

A combination of old devices entirely through the intelligence of the user does not constitute a valid combination. In re Smithey, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 265 Fed. 1014.

New combination of old elements.—To same effect as original annotation, see Carnes Artificial Limb Co. v. Didworth Arm Co., (D. C. Conn. 1921) 273 Fed. 838.

The mere fact that each element of a claim is old and in the same art does not necessarily preclude invention in the combination of these claims. Sparks-Withington Co. v. Jay, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 449.

In Handel Co. v. Jefferson Glass Co., (N. D. W. Va. 1920) 265 Fed. 286, the court said that where a patent "is sought for a combination of old elements not only a new and useful result must be attained, but it must be such as 'amounts to discovery or invention'—'not of a trifling character, but a step in advance in the useful arts'—that 'mere mechanical skill can never rise to the sphere of invention. The latter involves higher thought and brings into activity a different faculty. Their domains are distinct.' That 'to be patentable the invention covered must consist of a new and useful means of accomplishing the result, and if the means consist of a mere adaptation, by the application of mechanical skill, of devices previously well known, there can be no valid patent.' That merely making the parts of a machine or device adjustable with respect to each other does not constitute invention, but is within the ordinary ingenuity of a skilled mechanic. Fraser v. Gates Iron Works, 85 Fed. 441, 29 C. C. A. 261 (C. C. A. 7th Cir.), certiorari denied 171 U. S. 687, 18 Sup. Ct. 942. That 'an improvement consisting in taking a material well known and long used for the purpose, and using it in a method well known and long used, involves merely the skill of the workman, and not the genius of the inventor, and lacks the novelty of a patent.' That 'the substitution of a known equivalent for one of the elements of a former structure is not patentable.' That 'the mere carrying forward or extending the application of a prior device, with a change only in degree, does not amount to invention."

Patented device as element of combination.

—One who selects and combines elements from the inventions of others into a new structure adapted to accomplish the old results is entitled to a patent only for his own particular form of adaptation. There is room for such an adapter to have only a specific patent for his particular form of adaptation and he is not privileged to exclude others from gleaning in the same general field. Dalton Adding Mach. Co. v. Rockford Milling Mach. Co., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 422.

Combination producing new result.—To same effect as original annotation, see Ohio Rake Co. v. Buckner, etc., Plow Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 891.

New and useful result necessary.—To same effect as original annotation, see Application of Moore, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 265 Fed. 462.

In order to render a combination patentable the elements comprising it must so coact that, as a consequence thereof, a new and useful result, and not a mere aggregation of several results, follows. Egry Register Co. v. Standard Register Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 186.

Applying known processes in a different art with a new and different result is invention. Wenborne-Karpen Dryer Co. v. Rockford Bookcase Co., (N. D. Ill. 1921) 269 Fed. 144.

Using repair methods for new construction.

—The use for new construction of a method previously used in repair jobs, does not constitute invention. Bellows v. New York Cent. R. Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 532.

Old process applied to new material.

—A patent for a lard-like food product consisting of a vegetable oil partially hydrogenized to a homogeneous whitish, yellowish product, must be deemed void for lack of invention, since it was previously known that a vegetable oil could be changed into a semi-solid homogeneous substance by a process of hydrogenation arrested before completion, and that the product might be edible, and the product of this process was also known and open to public use. Berlin Mills Co. v. Procter, etc., Co., (1920) 254 U. S. 156, 41 S. Ct. 75, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 256 Fed. 23, 167 C. C. A. 295.

New use of old device.—The adoption of common expedients in adapting an existing machine to a new use constitutes invention, the thought of the utility and of the result being new. Cincinnati Milling Mach. Co. v. Oakley Mach. Tool Co., (S. D. Ohio 1920) 263 Fed. 257.

Reduction to practice.—Necessity of practical test.—It is the actual test that is essential to establish reduction to practice. The patent law recognizes no such thing as reduction to practice nunc pro tunc. Smith

v. Warnock, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 271 Fed. 556.

Lack of diligence.—Where an applicant's early efforts do not amount to reduction to practice, and he does nothing thereafter for almost two years, during which time a competitor enters the field, he must be regarded as lacking in diligence and as not entitled to an award of priority in an interference proceeding. Du Rell v. Haley, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 351.

Commercial success.—To same effect as original annotation, see Tweedie v. Royal Co., (E. D. Mo. 1920) 267 Fed. 224.

The fact that a patent was not commercially adopted is not inconsistent with the conclusion that it was completely operative. Republic Iron, etc., Co. v. Youngstown Sheet, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 386.

In Wire Wheel Corp. v. Silver, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 266 Fed. 221, affirmed (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 229, regarding commercial success as evidence of invention, the court said: "As in all successful patents, the patentee, properly enough, relies upon the supposed proof of invention arising from commercial exploitation. It is a most hazardous test. Commercial success, as the courts have repeatedly observed, may arise from many other reasons than a new inventive idea. Without trying to lay down any exhaustive definition of the conditions where it may be helpful, I can very generally say that its main value is in cases where the existing means have for some time been unsatisfactory, and where the new step has at once answered the need and displaced what went before. When to this is added the fact that others have earlier tried to reach the same result, the proof becomes telling, and we hesitate to substitute our own judgment for the objective evidence that the new thing was not so easy to make as it looked."

General and extensive use.—Practical use and extensive growth will outweigh laboratory tests in determining whether an invention is patentable. Medusa Concrete Waterproofing Co. v. Ceresit Waterproofing Co., (N. D. Ill. 1920) 271 Fed. 122, wherein it was said: "Laboratory tests cannot turn the balance in the scale against practical use. The testimony of experts that a device will not work is of no value, if it does work. In the light of the practical use of plaintiff's process, and its increasing growth, I must assume that Newberry discovered 'something worth while.'"

V. UTILITY (p. 79)

Utility as evidence of invention.—The evident utility of a device, its extensive use and the absence of other competing devices strongly attest its patentable merit. Tompkins-Hawley-Fuller Co. v. Holden, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 424.

Commercial utility is available only when a doubt as to patentability arises and commercial success must be approached with caution when the subject matter is an article of wear. Bonnie-B. Co. v. Giguet, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 269 Fed. 275.

Vogue and general testimony showing a device to be commercially successful has been held sufficient. Sandusky Foundry, etc., Co. v. DeLavaud, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 607.

"It is the experience of the courts that some of the most troublesome cases in which to determine whether invention resides in the patent are those which involve the simplest expedients. The reason is that the more easily a patent is understood the more difficult it is to relate the mind back to the state of the art as it existed at the time of invention. Thus it happens that invention is often found by the aid of commercial utility in resolving the doubt as to patentability, or by the fact, inter alia, that an article of manufacture long known is so rearranged as to be adapted to an entirely new use, which no one disclosed up to the time in question." Bonnie-B. Co. v. Giguet, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 269 Fed. 272.

Infringement as evidence of utility.—Utility of an invention is established by the fact that defendants have persisted in infringing it. Morgan Constr. Co. v. Donner Steel Co., (W. D. N. Y. 1920) 269 Fed. 389.

Better than other inventions.—To same effect as original annotation, see Tompkins-Hawley-Fuller Co. v. Holden, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 424.

VI. NOVELTY AND ANTICIPATION (p. 83)

Test of novelty.—If there is any doubt as to patentable novelty this doubt may well be resolved in favor of the patent by its commercial utility. Eibel Process Co. v. Minnesota, etc., Paper Co., (D. C. Me. 1920) 267 Fed. 847.

Accidental production.—Accidental and unappreciated results and functions in prior uses are not anticipation. Minnesota, etc., Paper Co. v. Eibel Process Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 540.

Unintended feature.—The principle that patentees may obtain advantages in patents which they did not discover applies to prior art uses. Minnesota, etc., Paper Co. v. Eibel Process Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 540.

Reduction to practice—In general.—The person to first conceive an invention, though the last to reduce it to practice, is entitled to priority where he has used diligence. Smith v. Warnock, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 271 Fed. 556. But where he is lacking in diligence he will be denied priority. Smith v. Warnock, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 271 Fed. 559.

Application as reduction to practice.—An application for a patent is a constructive reduction to practice. Republic Iron, etc.,

Co. v. Youngstown Sheet, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 386.

Unsuccessful device.—It cannot be said that a patent for a device, which fails to accomplish the desired end, is an anticipation of one which successfully accomplishes it." Carnes Artificial Limb Co. v. Dilworth Arm Co., (D. C. Conn. 1921) 273 Fed. 838.

"The law is that prior invention or discoveries, relied on to anticipate or limit the claim of a later invention, must disclose a method capable of producing the result designed to be obtained." One-Piece Bifocal Lens Co. v. Stead, (W. D. N. Y. 1921) 274 Fed. 667.

Imperfect device.—If the mechanism made under a prior art patent is capable of producing the same results, is designed, adapted or used to produce the same results or perform the same function, it may be successfully set up as an anticipation although there are imperfections in it. Barber v. Otis Motor Sales Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 171.

Novelty of proportions in the case of metals in the sense of the patent law involves something more than figuring out proportions differing from any that were known before. It involves new results from new proportions, developing a new metal, or, it may be, an old metal with new characteristics of structure or performance, embracing entirely new, or at least substantially enhanced, qualities of utility. Bethlehem Steel Co. v. Churchward International Steel Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 361.

Elements of new combination found in older patents.—To same effect as original annotation, see Carnes Artificial Limb Co. v. Dilworth Arm Co., (D. C. Conn. 1921) 273 Fed. 838.

Reference to prior application.—A prior application although not allowed until after another's application was filed, may be considered in determining the question raised by the answer, whether the patentee was the first inventor. Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co. v. Formica Insulating Co., (S. D. Ohio 1920) 270 Fed. 632.

Prior foreign patent.—A prior patent in order to be anticipatory "must be so clear and definite as to enable any mechanic skilled in the art to reach the patented invention certainly, directly, and without the necessity of any experiment, and this rule is enforced with peculiar strictness when the alleged disclosure is found in a foreign patent or publication." Selectasine Patents Co. v. Prest-O-Graph Co., (D. C. Ore. 1920) 267 Fed. 840.

Foreign publications.—Foreign publications, to constitute them anticipations of a later invention, must disclose a complete and operative structure, and, indeed, the description given must be sufficiently clear and definite and understandable to enable persons skilled in the art or science to which the invention or device belongs to practice and construct it. Drawings or exhibits, if any, shown in connection with prior publications, must be considered with the published description of the device, which the law requires must be in "full, clear, and exact terms," so that those desiring to manufacture the article or reduce it to practice may do so without either independent experiments or the exercise by them of the inventive faculty. If the prior description and drawings relied on do not conform to that rule, a subsequently issued patent in this country for the same invention is not defeated. Permutit Co. v. Harvey Laundry Co., (W. D. N. Y. 1921) 274 Fed. 937.

Date of invention.—"An invention does not date from the conception in the mind of the inventor nor from unsuccessful experiments abandoned by the inventor. He must represent it in some physical form or impart his conception to another." Yates v. Smith, (D. C. N. J. 1920) 271 Fed. 27.

Date of issuance of patent as controlling.—"For the purpose of anticipation, a patent speaks, not from the date of the application, but from the date of its issuance." Perfection Disappearing Bed Co. v. Murphy Wall Bed. Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 698.

Date of foreign anticipating patent.—In order to constitute anticipation by a foreign patent, the date of such patent must be previous to the date of the invention of the domestic patent or more than two years prior to the application for the domestic patent. Barber v. Otis Motor Sales Co., (N. D. N. Y. 1920) 265 Fed. 675, holding that the foreign patents did not become patents more than two years prior to the date of the application for the domestic patent.

Process—Anticipation.—A process patent can only be anticipated by a similar process. Window Glass Mach. Co. v. Smethport Window Glass Co., (W. D. Pa. 1917) 266 Fed. 85.

Successful adoption and use.—In the case of a lighting fixture the presence of novelty was held to be met by evidence that the design, viewed as a whole, was new; that it produced a pleasing sensation on the aesthetic sense; that it imparted a sense of uniqueness and character; that it created an enlarged demand for the goods, and that it attained great popularity. Bayley v. Krich, (D. C. N. J. 1920) 264 Fed. 978.

Patent as evidence of novelty.—The granting of a patent raises a strong presumption of novelty and in case of a doubt it will be resolved in favor of the patent. This rule is said to be especially applicable where the commercial utility of the apparatus is beyond dispute. Permutit Co. v. Harvey Laundry Co., (W. D. N. Y. 1921) 274 Fed. 937.

Burden of proving priority.—To the same effect as second paragraph of original annotation, see Barber v. Otis Motor Sales Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 171.

Disproof of asserted anticipation.—"As against the statutory defense of anticipation, the patentee may show, if he can, the fact of his prior invention by drawings, sketches, models, or by any other competent proofs." Barber v. Otis Motor Sales Co., (N. D. N. Y. 1920) 265 Fed. 675.

VII. PRIOR USE OR SALE (p. 117)

For patents held void because of anticipation and prior use, see E. H. Mumford Co. v. Mumford Molding Mach. Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 80.

VIII. ABANDONMENT (p. 127)

Discontinuance of experiments.—Abandonment after making experiments which did not amount to a reduction to practice operates to deprive a person, who was inadvertently granted a patent while another's application was pending, of priority in interference proceedings. Jay v. Coulombe, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 270 Fed. 703.

In Halbleib v. Bendix, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 270 Fed. 683, the facts were held to show an abandoned experiment, there never having been an attempt to resurrect or commercialize his device after it was tested until after another person's device was tested.

Delay in filing application.—The failure of an inventor to file his application for a patent until ten months after reducing it to practice, will not be regarded as an abandonment where it appears that such delay was due to financial embarrassment. Hoenig v. Parker, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 323.

Burden of proof.—To same effect as original annotation, see Hoenig v. Parker, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 323. See also Hoenig v. Kendig, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 326.

Vol. VII, p. 138, sec. 4887. [First ed., vol. X, p. 250.]

Date of foreign patent.—British and French patents do not become "patents" nor "printed publications" within the meaning of the patent statutes of this country, until the enrollment or sealing of the complete specifications. Barber v. Otis Motor Sales Co., (N. D. N. Y. 1920) 265 Fed. 675.

Presumption of validity from issuance of foreign patents.—The presumption of validity arising from the granting of foreign patents is strengthened by decisions of foreign courts upholding such patents. Such a presumption, however, is at best rebuttable and is overcome by a decision of a domestic court holding the patent invalid. Wire Wheel Corp. v. Madison Motor Car Co., (W. D. Wis. 1920) 267 Fed. 220.

Effect of filing within time limitation.—Where the application for a United States patent was filed within the limitations provided in this section this gives the United States application the same force and effect as it would have if it had been filed on the date the foreign application was filed. Kisovitz v. Rosenberg, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 866.

Reduction to practice.—The date of filing a British application has been held a constructive reduction to possession where the same disclosure appears in each application and each contains a claim broad enough to include the issue. Kisovitz v. Rosenberg, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 866.

II. SPECIFICATIONS AND DESCRIPTION

1. In General (p. 146)

Necessity of disclosure.—"Even a pioneer patent must be accompanied with a disclosure, which will show the art how the idea stated in the claim may be realized in an operable structure. It is, of course, not enough merely to conceive abstractly of a combination of elements which will together do something new. Invention requires the added elements of showing how the idea may be actually incorporated, and without such a disclosure as would enable a skilled artisan to embody the idea it remains sterile, and makes no advance in the art, from which the man conceiving the idea should be entitled to a monopoly." Manhattan Book Casing Mach. Co. v. E. C. Fuller Co., (S. D. N. Y. 1912) 274 Fed. 964.

2. Construction (p. 147)

Patent not limited by specifications.—A claim as granted is not limited by a representation in the drawing; nor can it be enlarged by such reference. Hubbell v. General Electric Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 564.

3. Sufficiency (p. 148)

In general.—"If the faults were merely in the diagrammatic representations, that would not be a defense, for diagrams or descriptions are not meant for working drawings. Crown Cork & Seal Co. v. Aluminum Stopper Co., 108 Fed. 845, 48 C. C. A. 72. But such drawings must at least show enough for the ordinary skilled mechanic to build the machine, correcting the discrepancies and the difficulties appearing in the drawings, by means of that store of expert information which such men will bring to the task in a bona fide effort to make the machine work." Manhattan Book Casing Mach. Co. v. E. C. Fuller Co., (S. D. N. Y. 1912) 274 Fed. 964;

Sandusky Foundry, etc., Co. v. De Lavaud, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 607.

Substantial description is an elastic term, and it may be restricted by prior act or by a limitation arising in the patent office. Hubbell v. General Electric Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 564.

III. CLAIMS

1. Object (p. 158)

To the same effect as first paragraph of original annotation, see I. T. S. Rubber Co. v. Essex Rubber Co., (D. C. Mass. 1920) 270 Fed. 593.

2. Construction (p. 158)

The necessity for construction of a claim does not arise until uncertainty is encountered. Blaine v. White (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 340.

Limiting claim.—The scope of the claims allowed must be limited to the prior art, the specifications and drawings and the record made in the patent office in securing their allowance. Mechanical Constr. Co. v. Locomotive Stoker Co., (W. D. Pa. 1921) 274 Fed. 411. And an applicant for a patent is bound by the voluntary limitation of his claim, and the fact that such limitation was unnecessary is of no importance, if it was intentional. Schulz v. Jackson Cushion Spring Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 665. Thus, in I. T. S. Rubber Co. v. Essex Rubber Co., (D. C. Mass. 1920) 270 Fed. 595, the court said: "When we consider that a patent is nothing but a contract between the nation and the patentee, in the main couched in the patentee's own language, granting the inventor a monopoly, it is utterly inadmissible to extend this monopoly beyond the limits fairly defined by the inventor himself. What an inventor does not plainly claim he cannot have—unless we are to make patent construction a trap—a fraud upon the general public."

But limitations not expressed and not intended cannot be read into an unambiguous claim in order to save it. Republic Iron, etc., Co. v. Youngstown Sheet, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 386.

Limiting claims as abandonment.—Where broad and general claims are limited so as to cover the claimed invention more particularly, this does not constitute an abandonment and prevent a suit for infringement. General Electric Co. v. Nitro Tungsten Lamp Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 994.

Construed with specifications and description.—A claim is to be construed in the light of the specifications. W. Bickford Co. v. Merrill, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 540. And while it is presumed that broader claims were intended to and do cover equivalent forms of construction described in other and narrower claims yet these claims must be read in connection with the description of the invention filed with the application for the patent, in order to determine the scope and effect that should be given to them. Troy Wagon Works Co. v. Ohio Trailer Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 850.

Construction of claims for improvements.—To same effect as second paragraph of original annotation, see Marconi Wireless Tel. Co. v. Kilbourne & Clark Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 644.

Enlargement of claims by specification or description.—To the same effect as second paragraph of original annotation, see Yates v. Smith, (D. C. N. J. 1920) 271 Fed. 27.

Claims substituted for cancelled claims.—Where certain claims as originally filed were cancelled the construction of the claims substituted therefor cannot be as broad as the claims cancelled. Mechanical Constr. Co. v. Locomotive Stoker Co., (W. D. Pa. 1921) 274 Fed. 411.

Where a claim is made for a "continuous strip" of metal, the word "continuous" may be taken in a mechanical sense, "and two pieces of metal contiguously placed and soldered together may be considered as a continuous piece when together they function like one piece." Whitlock Coil Pipe Co. v. Mayo Radiator Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 215.

3. Essentials and Scope (p. 161)

Indefinite claims.—Claims which are indefinite and do not point out the invention, should be rejected. In re Duncan, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 265 Fed. 1012.

Claim includes mechanical equivalents.—"Within the rule of equivalents, the thing thought to be the equivalent must be shown to perform the same function and to do it in substantially the same manner as the thing of which it is alleged to be the equivalent." Superior Skylight Co. v. Kuhnla, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 482.

5. Effect of Claim (p. 170)

Invention limited by claims.—An intentional limitation of a claim is binding on a patentee although entirely voluntary. McCallum v. Pittsburgh, etc., Coal Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 331.

Failure to claim.—"When an applicant for a patent to cover a new combination is compelled by rejection or submission to narrow his claim by the introduction of a new element, he cannot, after the issue of the patent, broaden his claim by dropping the element which he was compelled to include in order to secure his patent." Superior Skylight Co. v. Kuhnla, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 482.

Estoppel by language of claim.—Where an applicant put into his claim, whether originally or by amendment, language which distinguished it from that of another and without which he would not have received his patent he will be held to the language employed. Tee Pee Rubber Co. v. T. S. Rubber Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 250.

6. Amendment of Claim (p. 173)

Amendments to meet objections of patent office.—Where a patent is not obtained until after numerous objections and amendments of claims on reference to prior patents, the law is well settled that the patentee is limited to the precise form and language of the claims allowed. W. F. Schultheiss Co. v. Phillips, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 971. And an applicant who has yielded to an objection of the patent office and modified his claim by adding a limitation suggested is bound thereby. Nisbet v. Perkins Tonneau Wind Shield Co., (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 261 Fed. 633.

8. Rejection of Claim (p. 175)

Estoppel by acquiescence in rejection.—An applicant who has acquiesced in the rejection of some of his claims is bound thereby and is estopped to assert a different or a broader construction. Elliott Mach. Co. v. P. B. Appeldoorn's Sons Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 983; Hubbell Inc. v. General Electric Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 564.

But the fact that a patentee acquiesces in the rejection of certain claims as originally presented, does not estop him from subsequently relying upon such claims when they are used as a part of a combination. Egry Register Co. v. Standard Register Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 186. And "under all usual conditions, acquiescence in the rejection of a claim is of no importance, unless the court is called upon to determine whether the claim, as issued, has a scope sufficiently broad to include defendants' somewhat variant device." Jennison-Wright Co. v. Hempy, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 372.

Doubt as to patentability.—To same effect as original annotation, see In re Coffield. (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 270 Fed. 695; In re Zenk, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 327; In re Sorum, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 265 Fed. 1000.

Constructive notice by issuance.—A person who files an application for a patent has constructive notice of the issuance of a patent more than two years prior thereto, and is estopped to make claims against the prior patentee. De Ferranti v. Harmatta, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 357.

Effect of granting patent.—The grant of the patent by the Patent Office makes out a prima facie case for the successful applicant, and one who attacks it has the burden of showing that the Patent Office reached a wrong conclusion concerning it. Knapp v. Will, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 380.

As between two patents the one for which the earlier application was made has priority nothing to the contrary being indicated, although the patent was issued on the later application prior to that on the earlier one. Excelsior Steel Furnace Co. v. Williamson Heater Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 260 Fed. 614.

The senior applicant derives no benefit in an interference proceeding from the granting of the patent where, when it was granted, the other party's application was pending. Ransdell v. Jahns, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 365.

Vol. VII, p. 181, sec. 4894. [First ed., vol. V, p. 488.]

Delay of attorney.—A delay of less than three months by attorneys in preparing an application after the case is turned over to them, is not of itself evidence of lack of diligence on the part of the client which will defeat priority. Olson v. Pospeshil, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 698.

Vol. VII, p. 184, sec. 4895. [First ed., vol. V, p. 492.]

Historical.—"The subject-matter of section 4895 was first dealt with by Congress in section 6 of the Act of March 3, 1837 (5 Stat. at Large, 193). It then read:

"Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, that any patent hereafter to be issued, may be made and issued to the assignee or assignees of the inventor or discoverer, the assignment thereof being first entered of record, and the application therefor being duly made, and the specification duly sworn to by the inventor. * * *

"In section 33 of the Act of July 8, 1870 (16 Stat. at Large, 202), section 6 of the Act of 1837 was amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 33. And be it further enacted, that patents may be granted and issued or re-issued to the assignee of the inventor or discoverer, the assignment thereof being first entered of record in the Patent Office; but in such case the application for the patent shall be made and the specification sworn to by the inventor or discoverer; and also if he be living, in case of an application for reissue.' Under either section 6 or section 33 an inventor could assign his right to obtain a patent, prior to filing an application and specification verified by his oath. Section 33 was amended in the Revised Statutes of 1878, and as now found in section 4895 authorizes an assignee to make application for the issue of a patent, and provides how he shall do it." Becker v. General Chain Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 419.

Title of assignee.—"It has been held time and again that an assignee of the entire interest in an invention and right to a patent obtains full title, when the patent is issued, and that this is so whether the patent is issued directly to him a request to that effect having been made in the assignment, or whether it is issued to the inventor, no such request having been made in the assignment." Becker v. General Chain Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 419.

Vol. VII, p. 188, sec. 4897. [First ed., vol. V, p. 494.]

Effect of issuance of patent to third person.

—The right to make a renewal of an application is not affected by the fact that during the period of forfeiture a patent was issued to a third party, where an abandonment in fact has not been established. Wells v. Honigmann, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 743.

Effect of disclaimer.—A disclaimer as to claims made on the original application does not preclude a party from making a renewal of application provided it was made before the public or a third party has come into possession of the invention. Wells v. Honigmann, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 743.

Question of fact.—To same effect as original annotation, see Wells v. Honigmann, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 743.

Vol. VII, p. 193, sec. 4904. [First ed., vol. V, p. 499.]

Language claim broadly construed.—A prior applicant is entitled under the law to a construction of the claim in issue as broad as the language will permit. Speed v. Kirby, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 270 Fed. 699. See also Dewson v. Tomlinson, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 879.

Third party as inventor.—In an interference proceeding the issue is the priority between the parties to the proceeding, and the losing party has no standing to contend that a third party is really the prior inventor. Erben v. Yardley, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 345.

Dates in preliminary statement — Effect.—"It is always a suspicious circumstance in a case of interference that, after the claim of one of the parties has been fully disclosed and fixed as of a specified date, the other should then seek by amendment of his preliminary statement to show a date of invention different from that in the original statement and prior to it and to the date of his opponent. Amendment upon so important a point should not be allowed in such a case, unless it is shown that the interests of justice plainly demand it; for upon the determination of these dates it depends, in the majority of cases, which party is entitled to the patent, and a change of memory is comparatively easy, when self-interest dictates a different date." Earles v. Gomber, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 353.

Omission.—Where the junior applicant failed to allege in his preliminary statement a date of conception prior to the senior party's filing date it has been held proper to award priority to the senior party, cause not being shown, after notice why such a course should not be pursued. Wright v. Halle, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 355.

Sole issue in interference.—To same effect as original annotation, see De Forest v. Miller, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 718.

Issues construed in light of application.—To same effect as original annotation, see Cox v. Headley (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 265 Fed. 981; White v. Cottrell, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 270 Fed. 877.

Reduction to practice.—The fact that one of the parties to an interference proceeding was the first to conceive the invention and the first to reduce it to practice is sufficient ground upon which to base an award of priority to him. Erben v. Yardley, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 265 Fed. 345.

A decision will be made awarding priority to the senior applicant in an interference proceeding where it appears that he first conceived the invention and that his application for a patent was filed before the junior party reduced the invention to practice. Brown v. McIntosh, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 265 Fed. 1011; Jenks v. Geiger, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 360.

Priority will be accorded a senior applicant where it appears that by completion he must be accorded conception and there was a constructive reduction to practice and the junior applicant did not claim a reduction to practice until several months later. Smurr v. James, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 269 Fed. 673.

A person who was the first to conceive and the last to file, if he succeeds must do so by proving an actual reduction to practice prior to any date accorded to the other party for reduction to practice, or by showing diligence on his part running from a time just prior to that when the other party entered the field down to his own date of filing. Bissell v. Phelps, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 270 Fed. 697.

To base a holding of a constructive reduction to practice of an invention upon a drawing in the face of a positive statement in the specification contrary to what was contended for, the drawing should be certain and conclusive. Allen v. Hill, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 270 Fed. 691.

Where two inventions both meet the standard set up by the issue, the poorer one, if prior in point of time, will prevail. But if either one fails to meet the required standard of the issue, it is not a reduction to practice. Liebmann v. Newcomb, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 701.

Experiments after disclosure as affecting priority.—Where in an interference proceeding it clearly appears that the party first to conceive and disclose the invention, was in good faith engaged in perfecting it at the time the junior party entered the field and filed his application, he should not be deprived of the fruits of his discovery and an award of priority because his experiments were not as successful as had hoped and because he filed his application at a later date. Gammeter v. Backdahl, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 347.

Issuance of individual patent during pendency of joint application.—Where during the pendency of a joint application for a patent, one of the applicants make an individual application and obtains a patent, he gains nothing by the issuance of such patent and in a subsequent interference has the burden of proof as the junior party. Lambert v. Hope, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 342.

The losing party in an interference proceeding is not entitled to claims that would dominate the claims given to his successful rival. In re Henderson, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 707.

Duty of commissioner.—It is the duty of the commissioner in interference proceedings to protect the public as well as the litigant. In re Henderson, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 707.

Attack on reissue application.—A question cannot be raised in interference proceedings that a reissue application is barred by intervening rights, in that it seeks to broaden the claims more than two years after the original patent was granted and is for a different invention. Earles v. Gomer, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 353.

Burden of proof.—To same effect as original annotation, see Blaine v. White, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 340; Lambert v. Hope, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 342; Grus v. Eynon, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 350; Pembroke v. Sulzer, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 265 Fed. 996; Maremont v. Olson, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 265 Fed. 1009.

A junior party whose application was filed two months after the opposing party's patent was issued has a heavy burden to show priority. Replogle v. Kirby, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 862.

Where in interference proceedings an applicant, whose application was filed later than the applications of the others, proves conception and disclosure earlier than they do, he must in order to prevail also show that he was exercising diligence just before the other parties came into the field. Halbleib v. Bendix, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 270 Fed. 683.

Procedure as to trial and appeal.—When two or more parties apply for the same invention, provision is made for the declaration of an interference by the Commissioner of Patents. The procedure for taking testimony, trial and appeal through the tribunals of the Patent Office to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia is provided by statute or rules which have the force of statute. Snelling v. Whitehead, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 712.

Suspension of proceedings.—An interference being for the sole purpose of determining priority, will not be suspended, after testimony has been taken, for the purpose of considering public use or intervening rights. Hayes v. Davison, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 325.

Estoppel by judgment.—A judgment in interference proceedings operates as an estoppel as to the things passed on. In re Henderson, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 707.

Jurisdiction on review.—While the question of patentability will not be considered by the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia in an interference appeal, the question of abandonment is always available as affecting the right of priority. Snelling v. Whitehead, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 712.

Vol. VII, p. 199, sec. 4909. [First ed., vol. V, p. 501.]

Rejection condition precedent to appeal.—Under this section claims must have been twice rejected before starting the claim of appeals which ends in the Court of Appeals. Clements v. Kirby, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 575.

Vol. VII, p. 202, sec. 4914. [First ed., vol. V, p. 506.]

Appeal or certiorari to Supreme Court.—A decision of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia on an appeal from the Commissioner of Patents, which reverses the latter's decision not to cancel certain certificates of registration of a trademark, and directs the clerk of the court to certify the courts decision to the commissioner, as required by law, is not final for the purpose of appeal to or certiorari from the federal Supreme Court under Jud. Code §§ 250, 251 (see 5 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 913, 917). Baldwin Co. v. R. S. Howard Co., (1921) 256 U. S. 35, 41 S. Ct. 405, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, dismissing appeal to review (1919) 48 App. Cas. (D. C.) 437, and denying writ of certiorari.

Vol. VII, p. 204, sec. 4915. [First ed., vol. V, p. 507.]

Historical.—"The subject-matter contained in section 4915 first appeared in section 16 of the Act of July 4, 1836 (5 Stat. at Large, 123). Section 16 was amended by section 10 of the Act of March 3, 1839 (5 Stat. at Large, 354). . . . It was re-enacted in section 52 of the Act of July 8, 1870 (16 Stat. at Large, 205), in the language now found in section 4915." Becker v. General Chain Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 419.

Finality of decision of District of Columbia Court of Appeals.—The District of Columbia Court of Appeals in exercising its jurisdiction in patent cases becomes, for this purpose, one of the tribunals of the Patent Office, and its decision is in no sense a final decree, which cannot be collaterally attacked, though it will be followed unless the contrary is established by convincing testimony. Clements v. Kirby, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 575.

Mandamus to the commissioner to compel him to receive and consider claims is not a prerequisite to the right to bring a suit under this section. Clements v. Kirby, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 575.

Expenses of proceeding.—The provision in this section that "all the expenses of the proceeding shall be paid by the applicant whether the final decision is in his favor or not," applies only to those cases "where there is no opposing party" and the papers are served on the commissioner only. Clements v. Kirby, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 575.

Time for bringing suit.—The provision in R. S. section 4894 as to a claim being regarded as abandoned where there is a failure to prosecute the same within one year after any action thereon, is held to be inapplicable to a suit under this section begun more than a year after a decision in interference proceedings by the District of Columbia Court of Appeals. Clements v. Kirby, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 575.

Parties—Assignee.—"Rule 17 of the Patent Office provides that 'an applicant or an assignee of the entire interest may prosecute his own case,' and rule 5 that 'the assignee of the entire interest of an invention is entitled to hold correspondence with the office to the exclusion of the inventor.' Under the latter rule it is held that upon the request of such an assignee the inventor shall be excluded from participation in the proceedings. See Stoddard's Annotated Patent Office Rules, pp. 10, 11.

"Instead, therefore, of an assignee being unable to prosecute an application in the Patent Office under section 4895, as the defendant contends, the contrary is true, for the law authorizes and the practice and rules of the Patent Office permit it; and, as a proceeding under section 4915 is in reality a continuation of the prosecution of the original application, there would seem to be no reason why the assignee of the entire right to a patent, who is permitted to prosecute an application in the Patent Office under section 4895, should not be allowed to do so in this court under section 4915." Becker v. General Chain Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 419.

Effect of delay—Unreasonable delay.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see In re Lees, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 269 Fed. 679.

Reissue claims, which seek to broaden the claims of the original patent, will not be allowed, except for unusual circumstances, which excuse delay. The determination of this question is one largely within the discretion of the commissioner, and will not be disturbed unless manifest error has been committed. In re Hoiland, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 270 Fed. 704.

A reissue should not be granted where several years have elapsed during which time other inventions relying on the same state of the art have patented new inventions which have gone into use and would infringe the reissue. Diamond Drill Contracting Co. v. Mitchell, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 261.

Inadvertence or mistake—In general.—“It is obvious that the words ‘inadvertence or mistake’ are used in the statute as the antitheses to ‘fraudulent intent,’ and that in the absence of fraud the failure of an inventor or his solicitor to put the claims in such form as will cover the entire invention is ‘inadvertence,’ within the meaning of the statute, and that to justify a reissue it is not necessary that the original patent shall be inoperative, but it is sufficient if it fail to secure to the patentee the whole of his invention.” Perfection Disappearing Bed Co. v. Murphy Wall Bed. Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 698.

Right to disclaim.—The power to disclaim is a beneficial one, and should not be denied to an inventor, except where the power is used for a fraudulent or deceptive purpose. Permutit Co. v. Harvey Laundry Co., (W. D. N. Y. 1921) 274 Fed. 937.

Time of filing disclaimer.—“It is well established that a disclaimer as to part of a patent, in good faith relied upon as valid, is effective, if made after the final decision and as a condition to granting relief. In such case, ‘unreasonable delay to file a disclaimer will not begin until that question is finally settled by the courts.’” Excelsior Steel Furnace Co. v. Williamson Heater Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 614.

Vol. VII, p. 242, sec. 9. [First ed., vol. V, p. 502.]

Conclusiveness of decision of patent office.—To same effect as second paragraph of original annotation, see Maremont v. Olson, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 265 Fed. 1009.

To same effect as third paragraph of original annotation, see Brown v. Tomlinson, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 265 Fed. 460; Doyle v. Tomlinson, (App. Cas. 1920) 265 Fed. 461; Wahl v. Wright, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 766.

The rule that the court will hesitate to disturb concurrent decisions of the patent office does not apply where they do not agree either on the facts or the conclusion to be drawn therefrom. Laughlin v. Burry, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 270 Fed. 1013.

Proper characteristics.—Rights secured under the grant of letters patent by the United States are property protected by the constitutional guaranties, and therefore not subject to be appropriated, even for public use, without adequate compensation. William Cramp, etc., Ship, etc., Bldg. Co. v. International Curtis Turbine Co., (1918) 246 U. S. 28, 38 S. Ct. 271, 62 U. S. (L. ed.) 560.

III. ASSIGNMENTS

3. Form and Requisites (p. 259)

Oral contract.—Patent rights or a license may be transferred orally, and parties may enter into an agreement by which they may act as partners without the making of a written contract. Cline v. Horton, (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 274 Fed. 728.

4. Recording (p. 263)

Validity of unrecorded assignment.—One who holds an unrecorded assignment of a patent may show that a subsequent assignment of the patent is invalid. Burgess Battery Co. v. Solar Light Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 368.

5. Nature and Effect (p. 264)

Assignment as constituting license.—Where a patentee on assigning his rights to certain patents, reserves to himself the right to decide whom he will sue as infringer, and the assignee is entitled to only a portion of the damages recovered in such suits, the latter must be deemed to be a nonexclusive licensee and not entitled to maintain an action for infringement against the assignor. Jockmus v. London, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 12.

An assignment of an interest may be made and the extent of the interest is immaterial. Nye Tool, etc. Works v. Crown Die, etc., Co., (N. D. Ill. 1921) 270 Fed. 587.

Previous licenses.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Keystone Type Foundry v. Fastpress Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 242.

Conveyance of right to sue.—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original annotation, see Nye Tool, etc., Works v. Crown Die, etc., Co., (N. D. Ill. 1921) 270 Fed. 587.

Liability of assignee for royalties.—An assignee of a license contract is under no obligation to pay royalties to the patentee in the absence of evidence of the assumption of such obligation by him. Loose v. Bellows Falls Pulp Plaster Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 81.

IV. LICENSES

4. Construction (p. 275)

Construction of patent as to licensee.—A patent is entitled to a generous construction as against a licensee. Loose v. Bellows Falls Pulp Plaster Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 81.

License to manufacture.—A license giving the licensee the right to manufacture patented articles also gives him the right to use and sell them. Curtiss Aeroplane, etc., Corp. v. United Aircraft Engineering Corp., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 71.

A license giving the licensee a right to manufacture a patented article, the patent on which is owned by the licensor, by which the licensee agrees to purchase all materials to be used in making the article from the licensor or persons designated by him, is not violative of section 3 of the Clayton Act (9 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) p. 733). Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co. v. Diamond State Fibre Co., (D. C. Del. 1920) 268 Fed. 121.

Stipulation not to infringe.—Where an agreement recites that the licensee has agreed not to evade or attempt to evade the patented device, this is only another way of saying that the licensee will not hereafter resort to colorable differences of construction with a view to escaping infringement and the clause is contractual. Pressed Steel Car Co. v. Union Pac. R. Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 518.

Payment of royalties by licensee.—A licensee, paying royalties, pays on what he has agreed to manufacture. Loose v. Bellows Falls Pulp Plaster Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 81.

5. Operation and Effect (p. 279)

Estoppel of licensee.—To same effect as original annotation, see Loose v. Bellows Falls Pulp Plaster Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 81; Hewitt v. American Telephone, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 392.

While a licensee under a patent may not refer to the prior art for the purpose of showing that the patent is anticipated or invalid, he may do so to show that what he uses does not infringe the patent. Pressed Steel Car Co. v. Union Pac. R. Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 518.

Where some one other than the patentee grants a license, the licensee is not estopped to dispute the validity of the patent. Kohn v. Eimer, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 900.

6. Duration, Expiration and Renewal (p. 280)

Dissolution of corporation.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Keystone Type Foundry v. Fastpress Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 242.

Liability for royalties.—It is a general rule that liability to pay royalties terminates on the expiration of the patent. The parties may, however, contract to the contrary. Pressed Steel Car Co. v. Union Pac. R. Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 518.

Vol. VII, p. 283, sec. 4900. [First ed., vol. V, p. 547.]

Effect of notice.—When a person has been notified that what he is doing is an infringement of the patented right, and the person notified then disclaims any purpose to infringe, and declares his intention to desist from such infringement, if he afterwards continues or repeats it, he cannot escape the payment of damages on the plea that he was an innocent infringer without notice. Shapiro v. Franklin Brass Foundry, (E. D. Pa. 1921) 272 Fed. 176.

Profits not excluded.—It has been held that the word "damages" as used in this section does not have its generic meaning and that a recovery of profits which were made before notice was given may be recovered. Shapiro v. Franklin Brass Foundry, (E. D. Pa. 1921) 272 Fed. 176.

Finding as to compliance with section.—When there is a controversy with respect to a compliance with this section two facts must be found by the court. One is that the notice, constructive or actual, required by the statute, has been given, and the other that acts of infringement followed the notice. The duty of making neither of these findings can be delegated to a master. The finding is a judicial act, which cannot be delegated. Shapiro v. Franklin Brass Foundry, (E. D. Pa. 1921) 272 Fed. 176.

Vol. VII, p. 288, sec. 4919. [First ed., vol. V, p. 552.]

- I. Who may sue for infringement.
- II. Who liable for infringement.
- V. Recovery.

I. WHO MAY SUE FOR INFRINGEMENT
(p. 289)

Right of assignee to appeal.—If one who purchases a patent after a decree for the defendant in an action for infringement is not the real owner of the patent, and of the right to prosecute the appeal, or purchase the right for an ulterior purpose, with a view to carrying on vexatious litigation, the Circuit Court of Appeals is not without power to make inquiry into such matters itself, or to direct an inquiry to be made in the district court. F. A. Mfg. Co. v. Hayden, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 374.

When motion to dismiss suit will be denied.—A motion to dismiss a suit for infringement on the ground that the patent is void on its face will be denied, when the motion is really arguable. Scott v. Aristo Hosiery Co., (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 266 Fed. 382.

II. WHO LIABLE FOR INFRINGEMENT (p. 296)

In general.—Where defendants manufacture a device capable of an infringement use and sell it with the intent that it shall be so used, they infringe the patent, even though their device is capable of a noninfringing use, and even though they go through the form of instructing that it shall be used in a noninfringing way. Sandusky Foundry, etc., Co. v. De Lavaud, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 607.

Intervening defendant.—The manufacturer of a patented article may be permitted by the court to intervene in a suit against a dealer for an alleged infringement of a patent. Continuous Extracting Press Corp. v. Eastern Cotton Oil Co., (E. D. N. C. 1920) 264 Fed. 340.

V. RECOVERY (p. 302)

Interest.—In Dunkley Co. v. Vrooman, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 468, the court said regarding the allowance of interest: "The fact that payment had been long delayed was one of the factors entering into the master's fixing of a reasonable royalty as of the date of his report. Since this was true, and since interest is not ordinarily computable on damages before liquidation, there was no error in not awarding to plaintiffs interest before the date of the master's report. The final decree might well have awarded interest after the date of the master's report, but it did not; the interval between the report and the decree was brief, and the decree, by state statute, draws interest from its date." See also Metallic Rubber Tire Co. v. Hartford Rubber Works Co., (D. C. Conn. 1920) 266 Fed. 543.

Vol. VII, p. 309, sec. 4920. [First ed., vol. V, p. 567.]

- I. Pleading and proof in general.
- II. Statutory defenses.

I. PLEADING AND PROOF IN GENERAL (p. 310)

Prior patents as anticipations.—On the question of anticipation of a later patent by an earlier one, as arising in a suit on the later patent, the criterion is the same as upon the question of validity of the earlier patent in a suit brought thereon. If the structure is inoperative, the patent upon it is not good, and it does not anticipate a later patent; but mere failure to get commercial recognition, or, indeed, failure to deserve that recognition until somewhat improved, is not inconsistent with full validity as a patent or full effect as an anticipation. Where the question is not one of full anticipation, but is whether the advance shown by the later over the earlier device is of an inventive character, the failure of the earlier to get recognition in the trade may be persuasive evidence that an apparently slight advance was more important than it seems. Republic Iron, etc., Co. v. Youngstown Sheet, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 386.

Nonuser not defense.—"Under our laws a patentee was not obliged to manufacture the apparatus described in the patent. Its nonuse does not deprive him of the protection of the patent laws." Morgan Constr. Co. v. Donner Steel Co., (W. D. N. Y. 1920) 269 Fed. 389.

Any change in the order of steps as designated in a patent does not operate to avoid an infringement. "A patent for a process is infringed by one who, without ownership or license, uses substantially the process which the patent claims; identity, whether of apparatus or materials, not being necessary to constitute infringement; but no process patent is infringed where any one of the series of acts which constitute the process is omitted, unless some equivalent act is substituted; reason seeming to indicate that one act is the equivalent of another when it works in substantially the same way to accomplish the same result." Los Angeles Lime Co. v. Nye, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 155.

Deviation in line not observable by general public.—If there is a slight deviation in a line, which could be pointed out by measurements of an expert, the fact that it would not be detected by observation of the general public will not avoid the infringement. Bayley v. Krich, (D. C. N. J. 1920) 264 Fed. 978.

The rule of shop right is stated as follows: "Where an employee makes an invention, and allows his employer to develop it with his own resources, and to market it, and establish a trade in it, he cannot, after he leaves the employer, prevent him from going on, and so compel him to lose all the investment that he has put in, and the trade he has established, unless at the outset he gives him some warning. The rule is entirely equitable; the books put in the form of an estoppel." Beecroft v. Rooney, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 268 Fed. 545, holding the rule to be inapplicable in the case under consideration.

Infringement question of fact.—The matter of an infringement is in the final analysis a question of fact. Laclede Christy Clay Products Co. v. St. Louis, (E. D. Mo. 1921) 270 Fed. 338.

Burden of proof.—The burden is on defendants in a suit to enjoin infringement of letters patent to prove anticipation beyond a reasonable doubt. Permutit Co. v. Harvey Laundry Co., (W. D. N. Y. 1921) 274 Fed. 937.

Dismissal of bill.—As to the dismissal of a bill in a suit for a patent infringement it is said: "It may be conceded at the outset that the motion to dismiss will not be sustained, except in a case sufficiently clear. Such a motion is proper practice, and may be sustained by the clear disclosures of the bill itself, the exhibits attached thereto, and the letters patent, of which profert is made. Where there is sufficient certainty that such disclosures cannot be substantially aided by testimony, it is the duty of the court to sustain the motion to obviate the necessity of increasing the expense and performing the labor of taking proofs." Luten v. Kansas City Bridge Co., (W. D. Mo. 1921) 272 Fed. 533.

II. STATUTORY DEFENSES (p. 317)

The state of the art.—"Evidence of the state of the art is admissible in actions at law under the general issue without a special notice, and in equity cases without any averment in the answer touching the subject. It consists of proof of what was old and in general use at the time of the alleged invention. It is received for three purposes, and none other, to show what was then old, to distinguish what was new, and to aid the court in the construction of the patent." Brown v. Piper, (1875) 91 U. S. 37, 23 U. S. (L. ed.) 200; Kauffman v. Sodemann Heat, etc., Co., (E. D. Mo. 1920) 267 Fed. 435.

Public use.—That "public use," within the meaning of the statute, is a very different thing from "use by the public," is well settled. Los Angeles Lime Co. v. Nye, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 155.

Burden of proof.—The burden of proof is on the defendants in an infringement suit to show that the process or product of the complainant was in public use within the meaning of the statute for two years prior to the filing of his application. Los Angeles Lime Co. v. Nye, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 155.

Vol. VII, p. 326, sec. 4921. [First ed., vol. V, p. 577.]

- I. General equitable jurisdiction.
- II. Joinder of causes of action.
- III. Pleadings.
- IV. Injunctions.
- V. Decree and award.
- VII. Limitations and laches.

I. GENERAL EQUITABLE JURISDICTION (p. 326)

Constitutionality.—This section is not violative of the Seventh Amendment to the Constitution as depriving a person of his right to trial by jury. Filer, etc., Co. v. Diamond Iron Works, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 489.

Jurisdiction.—Equity has a place in the administration of the patent law and shields the innocent from the consequences of practices that are unfair. In re Henderson, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 707.

II. JOINDER OF CAUSES OF ACTION (p. 332)

Where there are several claims which may have been infringed it is the duty of the plaintiff to put forth all the claims that have been infringed. And the rule is the same in respect of damages and profits arising from infringements, not presented to the trial court, but which might have been so presented. Panoualias v. National Equipment Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 630.

III. PLEADINGS (p. 334)

Supplemental bill to set up new infringements.—In Minerals Separation Co. v. Miami Copper Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 265, it was held that there was no right of appeal from the court's order denying leave to file a supplemental bill after decree on the merits praying relief against new practices charged to infringe.

Dismissal of bill.—A motion to dismiss a bill for patent infringement on the ground that it is invalid on its face is to be determined solely from the face of the patent and does not bring up questions of infringement. "The general principles governing the dismissal of bills for patent infringement, where the patent is invalid on its face, are sufficiently familiar not to require elaborate restatement. Richards v. Chase Elevator Co., 158 U. S. 299, 15 Sup. Ct. 831, 39 L. ed. 991; Fowler v. City of New York et al., 121 Fed. 747, 58 C. C. A. 113; Kuhn et al. v. Lock-Stub Check Co., 165 Fed. 445, 91 C. C. A. 389; Fernald v. Oneida Nat. Chuck Co. (C. C.) 167 Fed. 559, affirmed Fernald v. Oneida Nat. Chuck Co., 174 Fed. 1020, 98 C. C. A. 664; Mallinson et al. v. Ryan

(D. C.) 242 Fed. 951; Bayley & Sons v. Blumberg, 254 Fed. 696, 166 C. C. A. 194. For such a motion to prevail, the invalidity must be obvious and the question must not be fairly arguable. Where there is a really debatable pro and con, the motion must be denied." Bonnie-B. Co. v. Giguët, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 269 Fed. 272.

IV. INJUNCTIONS (p. 340)

After expiration of patent.—To same effect as original annotation, see Excelsior Steel Furnace Co. v. Williamson Heater Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 614.

Ceasing infringement and promises to abstain.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see General Electric Co. v. Independent Lamp, etc., Co., (D. C. N. J. 1920) 267 Fed. 824.

Injunction against circulars.—Where although a circular is too broad yet if the defendant agrees to change it in accordance with directions by the court an injunction will not be granted. Bonnie-B. Co. v. Giguët, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 269 Fed. 272.

Agents of infringer.—An injunction will be granted to restrain the sale of an infringing article by one who is selling it for another by whom it is being manufactured. Patton v. Clegg, (E. D. Pa. 1921) 274 Fed. 118.

Infringement after decree.—"Infringement after final decree and in violation of injunction is just as much infringement as is the same act committed before suit brought; all infringers are tort-feasors, and a plurality of infringers are joint tort-feasors, and are also liable severally." Schey v. Giovanna, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 515.

Supplementary injunctive relief.—It is declared that supplementary injunctive relief against past infringing practices is not allowable, the remedies against infringement after decree being damages and profits on accounting, attachment for contempt and original bill in which last remedy the right to injunctive relief is fully preserved. Minerals Separation v. Miami Copper Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 265.

Contempt.—Where, after the issuance of an injunction in an infringement proceeding prohibiting the defendant from manufacturing and selling certain infringing devices, he manufactures another device substantially similar to the one covered by the injunction, he is guilty of contempt. Eureka Tool Co. v. Wire Rope Appliance Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 673. Likewise, where after an injunction has been granted the defendant makes no change in the patented device except by a substitution which is a merely colorable evasion he is guilty of contempt. Schey v. Giovanna, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 515.

An order dismissing a proceeding in which it is sought to have a defendant adjudged guilty of contempt for the violation of an injunction against the infringement of a patent, is not appealable. Minerals Separation v. Miami Copper Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 266.

Questions on appeal.—An order denying a supplementary injunction in a patent infringement suit will not be disturbed by the appellate court except for an abuse of discretion. Minerals Separation v. Miami Copper Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 265.

V. DECREE AND AWARD (p. 355)

Relief in general.—While the inventor of a very substantial advance should receive as broad a measure of protection as the language of his grant justifies, it is equally true that the defendant who has manufactured or used a device in reliance upon an express limitation in the patent, voluntarily inserted or accepted by the patentee, should be protected in his investment. Republic Iron, etc., Co. v. Youngstown Sheet, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 386.

Estimated by advantage gained over other modes.—"The rule of comparison is settled law, and contemplates that the infringer had a choice of processes, chose that of the patent, and gained an advantage over what would have been his had he chosen otherwise. Obviously his choice is made from processes existing at the time of choice; that is, at the time of infringement, from day to day, and as alternative presents itself. He is not limited in fact to the process of the patent and processes existing only at the date of the patent, and the principle of standards does not require nor sanction that he be so limited in theory. For the advantage he actually gains, and which as profits or savings he must render to the patentee, is only that of the invention over other processes he might have chosen in lieu of the invention and did not.

"What the infringer thus gains is also what the patentee is presumed to thus lose, so far as accounting for profits is concerned, and equity is done when all such gains are taken from the infringer and given to the patentee; for thus the former loses nothing, he is not penalized, the latter is made whole, and he is not given gratuities nor rewarded beyond his present deserts, as otherwise would be the case." Minerals Separation v. Butte, etc., Min. Co., (D. C. Mont. 1921) 274 Fed. 878.

Profits lost.—Where it appeared that the defendant was an old customer of the plaintiff for the patented articles and had sold many of them it was held that profits lost to the plaintiff by sales which he had lost as a result of defendant's acts were recoverable. Filer, etc., Co. v. Diamond Iron Works, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 489.

Effect of failure to ask for profits and damages.—In reply to the proposition that the plaintiff by not demanding profits and damages while insisting on an injunction which restrained the manufacture, sale and use of the infringing device, reserved the right to sue elsewhere, it has been said: "No authority exists for such splitting of action, and it is opposed to fundamental rules; for a cause, once properly in a court of equity for any purpose, will ordinarily be retained for all purposes. Camp v. Boyd, 229 U. S. 552, 33 Sup. Ct. 785, 57 L. Ed. 1317. A 'waiver' of pecuniary recovery made at trial, while insisting on injunction, cannot be construed as a lawful segregation for future litigation of the recovery waived. Indeed, waiver implies abandonment, not reservation for future use." Panoulas v. National Equipment Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 630.

Measure of damages based on royalties.—In Metallic Rubber Tire Co. v. Hartford Rubber Works Co., (D. C. Conn. 1920) 266 Fed. 543, the court said: "Manifestly the plaintiff has been entitled to all profits realized from the infringement by the defendant, and the defendant should be held to pay those profits over, and its own conduct estops it, in my judgment, from any consideration, but the strict application of the established rules; so that, in view of the facts abundantly disclosed, under the application of rule, reason, or justice, it cannot expect to have applied the lesser punishment of assessing 1½ per cent. royalty as the measure of what this plaintiff is fairly entitled to recover, rather than the exact amount of the profits disclosed by the master's report."

Order for accounting.—The court will determine, on such preliminary inquiry as seems fitting, whether the recovery of any substantial damages or profits is so improbable as to justify declining to make the usual order for an accounting. Sandusky Foundry, etc., Co. v. DeLavaud, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 607.

Judgments against litigant on part of claims.—Where a litigant is defeated on some of his claims he will not be permitted to go against the same defendant and try out the other claims against the device alleged to be infringed at the time the original suit was brought. Union Steam Pump Co. v. Manton-Gaulin Mfg. Co., (D. C. Me. 1921) 272 Fed. 773.

Effect of consent decrees.—"Consent decrees as to validity, scope, and infringement in patent cases are regarded as constituting no adjudication of such matters which will affect other than the parties consenting thereto. But they are intended by the parties to control their rights in respect to the matters covered thereby, and they do have that effect. The method of enforcing this result is by estopping either party from denying the binding effect of the decree so procured. When, as here, a patent is, in a consent decree, adjudged valid, and infringed by a certain machine, that decree has, as between those parties, settled that that patent is valid, and that machine is an infringement. When thereafter complainant desires by a supplemental bill to extend the relief to another machine, which he claims is essentially the same as the one held to be an infringement, the issue thus presented is whether, in the light of the patent as valid, the new machine is essentially the old infringement." Roberts Cone Mfg. Co. v. Bruckman, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 986.

VII. LIMITATIONS AND LACHES (p. 370)

Laches within period of statutory limitation.—To the same effect as original annotation, see Yates v. Smith, (D. C. N. J. 1920) 271 Fed. 27.

Vol. VII, p. 375. [Recovery, etc.] [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 286.]

Government not made general licensee.—The provisions of this act do not constitute the United States a general licensee to use patent rights when necessary for its governmental purposes, so as to preclude the owner of a patent from enjoining a contractor with the government from making and delivering articles contracted for, alleged to infringe his patent. William Cramp, etc., Ship, etc., Bldg. Co. v. International Curtis Marine Turbine Co., (1918) 246 U. S. 28, 38 S. Ct. 271, 62 U. S. (L. ed.) 560; Marconi Wireless Tel. Co. v. Simon, (1918) 246 U. S. 46, 38 S. Ct. 275, 62 U. S. (L. ed.) 568; Electric Boat Co. v. Lake Torpedo Boat Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 670.

Articles furnished to government.—Under this act no illegal interference with the right of a patentee can arise from the mere furnishing to the government of the apparatus which is not per se an infringement, even though its use by the government will infringe the patent. Marconi Wireless Tel. Co. v. Simon, (1918) 246 U. S. 46, 38 S. Ct. 275, 62 U. S. (L. ed.) 568.

Intent of section.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Faris v. Patsy Frok, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 900; Knapp v. Will & Banner Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 380; Shapiro v. Franklin Brass Foundry, (E. D. Pa. 1921) 272 Fed. 176.

Necessity of invention.—Design patents are on as high a plane as utility patents and require as high a degree of exercise of the inventive or original faculty. Knapp v. Will, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 380.

Under this section no patent can be issued for a mere shape, configuration, or outline of a design or pattern, unless such shape, configuration, or outline or pattern is in and of itself an ornamental design. Faris v. Patsy

Frok, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 900.

Novelty.—"A design, in order to be patentable, must be 'new, original, and ornamental.' These words convey the thought that the design must possess artistic merit and be above the commonplace." Shapiro v. Franklin Brass Foundry, (E. D. Pa. 1921) 272 Fed. 176.

In order that there may be novelty the thing must not have been known to any one before. Knapp v. Will, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 380.

Amount of novelty.—Mere change in construction, displaying no originality and no added beauty, cannot be the subject of a design patent. Baker v. Hughes-Evans Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 97.

Mere novelty of form is insufficient. Thus, a square candle is not the subject of a design patent, the requirement as to novelty being lacking. Knapp v. Will, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 380.

Test of artistic merit.—"The judgment delivered, with respect to any design or any work of art, that it possesses artistic merit, is founded almost solely on taste. Such merit could not very well be denied to any work of art which called forth the applause of a large number of people. Mere commercial success, it is true, is not a very satisfactory test of artistic merit; but, unless the question is to be determined altogether in accordance with the tastes of the one who is pronouncing judgment, it is the best test we have, because it is the practical equivalent of the fame which attaches to a work of art. If the design satisfies the tastes of many people, by whom it is pronounced to have artistic merit, such merit cannot very well be denied to it for patent purposes, without a denial of the very reward which by the law is held out to designers. The thought is that any one who designs something which is different from the designs which have preceded it, and which, because of its attractiveness to the eye, commands a ready and large sale, shall be rewarded by the exclusive right to make and sell. The commercial success may mean lack of artistic appreciation on the part of purchasers, or it may mean artistic merit in the design. By analogy to patented articles, it is regarded as evidence of the latter. The fact finding, made and adhered to, is that the patentee, in the language of the law, invented such a design, and to him, in consequence, belongs the reward." Shapiro v. Franklin Brass Foundry, (E. D. Pa. 1921) 272 Fed. 176.

New combination of old elements.—While invention may reside in a new combination of old elements, yet every new combination of old elements is not patentable. "The test for invention is to be considered the same for designs as for mechanical patents; i. e., was the new combination within the range of the ordinary routine designer?" Knapp v. Will Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 380.

Design patent as trade-mark.—A design patent cannot be used to identify a device with the purpose of operating as a trade-mark. Hence, an anti-skidding device is not the subject of a design patent as it is exhibited on a mechanical device whose appearance cannot matter, the real question being can it accomplish what is claimed for it. North British Rubber Co. v. Racine Rubber Tire Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 936.

Test of identity.—To same effect as original annotation, see Borgfeldt v. Weiss, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 268.

Equivalents.—The patentee of a design patent is entitled to the usual range of equivalents with respect to known prior unessential details. Borgfeldt v. Weiss, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 268.

Evidence of infringement.—Where a question of an infringement of a design patent is presented, oral evidence is never so satisfactory as the judgment of the eye, upon actual view of the original design patent and the one claimed to be an infringement thereof. Standard Computing Scale Co. v. Detroit Automatic Scale Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 281.

Vol. VII, p. 383, sec. 1. [First ed., vol. V, p. 603.]

Right to accounting.—When a defendant admits infringement, this is evidence from which infringement can be found; and, infringement having been found, an accounting cannot be denied on the ground of a finding that the infringement was negligible in extent merely because the defendant has accompanied, or sought to qualify, his admission of infringement by loose and indefinite statements with respect to the extent of it. When a patent is found to be valid and infringed, a plaintiff has the right to a full inquiry into the extent of the infringement, and the practice is not to make this inquiry previous to the findings of validity and infringement, but to defer it until these preliminary findings have been made. Shapiro v. Franklin Brass Foundry, (E. D. Pa. 1921) 272 Fed. 176.

Only one penalty recoverable.—The statutory penalty cannot be recovered for the sale of each article to which the design has been applied unless there is some measuring of the infringing sales by subordinate units. Young v. Grand Rapids Refrigerator Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 966.

Measure of profits recoverable.—Where the measure of profits cannot be ascertained a recovery of the penalty may be had. Young v. Grand Rapids Refrigerator Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 966.

PENAL LAWS

Vol. VII, p. 423, sec. 6. [First ed.,
1909 Supp., p. 406.]

Forcible resistance essential.—Something more than setting the law at defiance is essential to the commission of the offense designated in this section. There must be a forcible resistance to the authority of the United States while endeavoring to carry the laws into execution. Anderson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 20.

Overt act.—This section does not require an overt act as an element of the crime which it denounces. Anderson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 20.

Conspiracies to violate Selective Service Act and Espionage Act are not subject to terms of this section. Haywood v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 795; St. John v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 808.

Sufficiency of indictment.—The indictment must charge that the purpose of the conspiracy was the exertion of force against those charged with the duty of executing the laws of the United States, or the language used in the count must be such that from it the inference reasonably follows that that was the purpose and object of the conspiracy; and unless the count can be so construed it is bad and fails to charge the offense. Anderson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 20.

I. ORIGIN, PURPOSE AND CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE

1. Origin and Purpose (p. 460)

Purpose of enactment.—The thing at which this section is directed is the prevention of military or naval expeditions or enterprises against governments with whom the United States is at peace. The several things mentioned herein are merely different ways of accomplishing the general object. Jacobson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 399.

III. INGREDIENTS OF OFFENSE

1. In General (p. 462)

What constitutes offense.—"While the substantive thing aimed at in the statute is the prevention of a military enterprise within the United States against a territory or people of a friendly nation, yet the things actually punishable under the statute are very different. It is not necessary, to warrant a conviction under the statute, that there shall at any time be in existence a military expedition or enterprise. So far as a military enterprise is concerned, it is sufficient if a military enterprise was a part of the intent and purpose of those engaged in the conspiracy in the one case, and of the person or persons engaged in the doing of the things prohibited by the statute in the other case. The statute makes it an offense to 'begin' a military expedition or enterprise. Manifestly the thing that is only begun is not the completed thing. Another clause makes it an offense to 'provide or prepare the means.' Manifestly any offense under the statute may be committed by an individual." Jacobson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 399.

V. PROSECUTION OF OFFENSE

2. Sufficiency of Indictment (p. 472)

Charging offense in language of statute.—An indictment is sufficient which charges the offense in substantially the language of the statute. Jacobson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 399.

Consolidation of indictments.—An indictment for committing the offense specified in this section may be consolidated with an indictment for conspiracy to commit such offense. Jacobson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 399.

6. Admissibility of Evidence

a. In General (p. 473)

Evidence showing relation existing between defendants.—Evidence may be received of acts and circumstances showing the relation existing between the defendants, though it is sufficient to determine whether such evidence has any bearing on the conspiracy or the carrying out of it. Jacobson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 399.

7. Sufficiency of Evidence (p. 475)

In general.—Where the question was raised that there should have been no conviction because the evidence did not show that all that was done by the defendants did constitute a military enterprise, the court said: "Whether what the defendants did actually reached the dignity of a military expedition or enterprise is not deemed material, if the evidence shows that, under the conspiracy charge, the conception, the thing they intended, amounted to a military expedition or enterprise, and if under the other charge the defendants did in the way charged any one or more of the things charged." Jacobson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 399.

II. CONSTRUCTION (p. 486)

The origin of this section was in the Act of May 31, 1870 (16 Stat. 141), which was re-enacted as section 5508 of the Revised Statutes. Foss v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 891.

III. PERSONS PROTECTED (p. 486)

Witness in land office contests.—If one is protected under the statute while in the lawful custody of a United States marshal, or in giving information to a United States marshal for a violation of the laws of the United States, or in giving information to a collector of internal revenue, for violation of the revenue laws of the United States, it follows that one is protected in giving testimony before the land office in a contest which involves the rights of entrymen under the land laws of the United States. The power which is delegated to the federal government to dispose of the public lands includes the power to hear and determine contests in the land office, and the power to compel witnesses to testify in such contests, and the power to protect them while so doing, and in all such contests the United States is a party. Foss v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 881.

IV. "RIGHT OR PRIVILEGE" PROTECTED (p. 486)

Freedom to perform contracts.—In a case where defendants were charged with conspiracy to prevent by strikes and sabotage certain citizens from fulfilling their contracts with the government for war munitions and supplies the court declared that "to produce, to sell, to contract to sell to any buyer, are not rights or privileges conferred by the Constitution and laws of the United States." Haywood v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 795; St. John v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 808.

VII. INDICTMENT (p. 490)

An indictment for a conspiracy to prevent and hinder furnishing of munitions, etc., to the United States government was held sufficient in Anderson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 269 Fed. 65.

II. CONSTRUCTION AND APPLICATION

3. Intent to Defraud (p. 519)

Purpose of section.—This section should be construed in harmony with its aim which is not merely to protect innocent persons from actual loss through reliance on false assumptions of federal authority, but to maintain the general good repute and dignity of the service itself. Russell v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 684.

III. PROSECUTION FOR OFFENSE

4. Evidence (p. 522)

False personation—Sufficiency of evidence.—Evidence that the accused went to the home of the prosecuting witness and after stating that he was "from the federal government" pulled back the lapel of his coat and showed a badge, and stated that he had been informed that the prosecuting witness had intoxicating liquor on his premises and that he had come to search for the same, whereupon he was paid a sum of money to desist, has been held to be sufficient to sustain a conviction under this section; and furthermore the fact that the accused was in fact an officer employed by the United States Navy Department was no defense, as an employee of one department of the government may be held guilty of falsely impersonating an officer of another department. Russell v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 684.

V. INDICTMENT

- 1. For Making and Presenting False Claim
 - a. Joinder of Counts (p. 528)

In a prosecution against an agent of General Land Office for making and presenting false claims against the United States by means of an itemized statement of expenses, several items of which are alleged to be false, each item may be regarded as a separate claim and violation of this section, and set forth in separate counts in the same indictment. Fain v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 473.

VI. TRIAL

2. Evidence and Variance

a. Evidence (p. 532)

Admissibility.—The admission in evidence of a written confession made by one of several defendants charged with conspiracy under this section has been held not to be error where the court instructed the jury that the confession was not to be "considered evidence against any one in the case" except the one by whom it was made. Hagen v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 344.

In a prosecution under this section against a special agent of the General Land Office for making and presenting false claims against the United States, there is no error in excluding testimony, offered by a special land agent called as a witness for the defense, that the rules and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior were not technically observed and followed by the agents in the field and that in the Forest Service and Agricultural Department of the United States it was the custom to use cars in the transaction of field work and to charge the expense thereof to the government. Fain v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 473.

b. Variance (p. 533)

The fact that an indictment alleges that the defendant presented false claims and vouchers against the United States for certain amounts, where as the proof shows that the claims presented were for larger amounts but that only the amounts alleged in the indictments were false, does not constitute a fatal variance. Fain v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 473.

Vol. VII, p. 533, sec. 36. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 415.]

Constitutionality.—It has been held that this section is inoperative as a criminal statute because of the indefiniteness of the punishment presented in that the preceding section to which reference is made prescribes different punishment for different offenses. Holmes v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 529. The court said:

"In the instant case, who can say what punishment the lawmakers intended? The section itself is silent as to that punishment, and refers us to section 35 to ascertain it. When we look at the last-named section, we find two punishments prescribed of very different severity: One, a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment of five years, or both; and the other a fine of not more than $500 and imprisonment of not more than two years. It is contended for both plaintiffs in error that the lesser punishment must have been intended, because the subject-matter of the last portion of the section is germane to the subject treated of in section 36. But this contention is in our judgment untenable. In a criminal statute the citizen must not be left in uncertainty or to speculation or argument as to what acts constitute a violation, or what punishment, if any, is visited upon a violation when the terms are definite. There was no error in the view taken by the trial court."

Indictment.—An indictment which alleges that the defendant applied to his own use "certain property" of the United States government which had theretofore been furnished for military service but which in no way indicates the nature, character or value of the property is insufficient. Edwards v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 848.

I. CONSPIRACY, IN GENERAL

1. Definition and Nature of Conspiracy (p. 536)

Conspiracy defined.—A conspiracy is an agreement between two or more parties to do an unlawful thing, or to do a lawful thing in an unlawful manner. Cumberland Telephone, etc., Co. v. Stevens, (S. D. Miss. 1921) 274 Fed. 745.

Accomplishment of object of conspiracy.—It is not necessary to a conviction for conspiracy that the object of the conspiracy be accomplished. Grayson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 553.

II. CONSPIRACY TO COMMIT OFFENSE

1. In General (p. 537)

As including attempt to commit crime.—A conspiracy to commit an offense, and an act done in pursuance and to effectuate the object thereof, may easily, if it does not necessarily comprehend an attempt to commit the crime as to which the conspiracy relates. It has been the practice where more than one person has been engaged upon an attempt to commit an offense against the United States, to use the conspiracy section of the Penal Law as a medium of prosecution of persons whose efforts at law breaking fall short of the successful accomplishment of their ultimate object. U. S. v. Rachmil, (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 270 Fed. 869.

Proof of names of persons unknown at time of indictment.—The names of persons, unknown to the grand jury, who participated in a conspiracy to violate certain statutes of the United States, need not be proved in order to obtain a conviction, if the conspiracy charged among the defendants and the overt acts alleged are proven. Nee v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 84.

Appointment of commission to take newly discovered evidence as discretionary.—The granting of the prayer of a petition of defendants in a prosecution under this section for the appointment of a commissioner to take newly discovered evidence, is within the discretion of the court, and its refusal to grant such petition does not constitute error where it appears that the court has not abused its discretion. Nee v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 84.

2. "Offense Against the United States" (p. 537)

Offense punishable by suit for penalty.—A conspiracy to commit any offense which, by an act of Congress, is prohibited in the interest of the public policy of the United States, although not of itself made punishable by criminal prosecution, but only by suit for a penalty, is a conspiracy to commit an "offense against the United States," within the meaning of this section, and, provided there be the necessary overt act or acts, is punishable under the terms of this section. U. S. v. Hutto, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 541, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said:

"Section 37, Criminal Code, is violated by a conspiracy 'to commit any offense against the United States' accompanied or followed by an overt act done to effect the object of the conspiracy. It does not in terms require that the contemplated offense shall of itself be a criminal offense; nor does the nature of the subject-matter require this construction. A combination of two or more persons by concerted action to accomplish a purpose either criminal or otherwise unlawful comes within the accepted definition of conspiracy. Pettibone v. United States, 148 U. S. 197, 203, 37 L. ed. 419, 422, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 542. The distinction between a conspiracy and the contemplated offense that forms its object has often been pointed out. United States v. Rabinowich, 238 U. S. 78, 85, 86, 59 L. ed. 1211, 1213, 1214, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 682, and cases cited. And we deem it clear that a conspiracy to commit any offense which, by act of Congress, is prohibited in the interest of the public policy of the United States, although not of itself made punishable by criminal prosecution, but only by suit for penalty, is a conspiracy to commit an "offense against the United States" within the meaning of § 37, Criminal Code, and, provided there be the necessary overt act or acts, is punishable under the terms of that section." See to the same effect, U. S. v. Hutto, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 543, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

A post exchange established near or on a military post is not such a lawful department of the government as will make a conspiracy transaction with it subject to an indictment under this section. Keane v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 577.

III. CONSPIRACY TO DEFRAUD

1. Not Limited to Property Rights (p. 545)

To same effect as third paragraph of original annotation, see U. S. v. Amster, (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 273 Fed. 532.

IV. OVERT ACTS

2. Act of One, Act of All (p. 551)

That the overt act of one conspirator is the act of all.—To same effect as original annotation, see Grayson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 553; U. S. v. Bergdoll, (E. D. Pa. 1921) 272 Fed. 498.

5. Nature and Quality of Act (p. 552)

Necessity of criminality of overt act.—The overt act alleged in an indictment for conspiracy need not be a crime, but of itself may be innocent. Clark v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 104.

Act as tending to consummate conspiracy.—In an indictment for conspiracy it is not necessary to allege the exact method by which the overt act would tend to consummate the conspiracy. Clark v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 104.

VII. JURISDICTION AND VENUE (p. 556)

Venue of federal prosecution.—To same effect as fourth paragraph of original annotation, see Harrington v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 97.

Section 42 of the Judicial Code provides that an offense begun in one district and completed in another may be tried and punished in either district; "and it is settled that in view of this section of the Judicial Code, and of section 37 of the Criminal Code, prosecutions for conspiracy may be maintained either in the district in which the conspiracy was formed or in any district in which an act was done to effectuate its object." (Grayson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 553.

VIII. INDICTMENT

1. In General

a. Joinder of Offenses (p. 558)

It is proper to charge in different counts of an indictment a conspiracy to commit an offense against the United States where the offenses charged all belong to the same class of crimes. Anderson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 20.

b. Parties Defendant (p. 559)

Joinder of defendants.—All the conspirators need not be joined in a single indictment but only such as may well be tried in one case should be named in any one indictment. U. S. v. Heitler, (N. D. Ill. 1921) 274 Fed. 401.

It is not necessary to join all the co-conspirators in an indictment or to explain why any were not indicted. Katz v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 157.

2. Charging the Conspiracy

b. Relation to Charge of Overt Acts (p. 560)

The statement of overt acts cannot be used to supply deficiencies in the charge of conspiracy.

"The charging portion of the indictment must define all the necessary elements of the conspiracy, and also all the necessary elements of the acts which are alleged to constitute either an offense under the laws of the United States or a fraud upon the United States. But the defendant cannot, by misinterpreting or assuming according to his own ideas the crime or fraud charged, present successfully a demurrer upon the theory that the indictment fails to set forth all the elements which he thinks are necessary to support the charge which he has in mind." U. S. v. Amster, (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 273 Fed. 532.

3. Charging Overt Acts (p. 563)

In general.—On a prosecution for a conspiracy to defeat and evade the income tax it is necessary to allege and prove an overt act done in pursuance of and to effectuate the object of the conspiracy. Such an indictment sufficiently sets forth an overt act where it alleges the filing of a false return with the collector of internal revenue. By the filing of the return it is then placed beyond the control of the defendant and the collector in the usual course will use such return as a basis of assessing the tax. U. S. v. Rachmil, (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 270 Fed. 869.

4. For Conspiracy to Commit Offense

a. Sufficiency in General (p. 566)

Failure to allege division of district where offense was committed.—An indictment under this section for a conspiracy to commit an offense against the United States, is not defective because it fails to allege the division of the district where the offense was committed, except by reference to the caption. Harrington v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 97.

Conspiracy to violate Selective Service Act.—Indictment held sufficient, see Anderson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 269 Fed. 65.

Conspiracy to violate Lever Act.—A count in an indictment which charges a conspiracy under this section to violate subdivision (a) of section 9 of the Lever Act (1918 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. 185), charges a conspiracy to commit the offense of conspiracy and should be quashed. U. S. v. Armstrong, (D. C. Ind. 1920) 265 Fed. 683.

b. Duplicity (p. 566)

A count in an indictment for conspiracy against the United States is not duplicitous because the object and purpose of the conspiracy charged therein is the commission of more than one offense against the United States. Anderson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 20.

j. Scheme to Defraud by Use of Mails (p. 569)

An indictment setting forth fraudulent representations to induce the purchase of mining stock which representations were known to the defendants to be false and fraudulent and that to effect the object of the scheme the defendants placed or caused to be placed certain letters in the mail which letters are set forth, is sufficient under this section. Rowe v. Boyle, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 809. See also Tjosevig v. Boyle. (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 813.

p. Unlawfully Bringing in Chinese (p. 577)

In Kaphan v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 323, in which in one indictment it was charged that Kaphan and others conspired to bring into the United States, and to cause to be brought into and to aid and abet the bringing into and landing in the United States, through the port of San Francisco, Chinese persons who were not lawfully entitled to enter or remain in the United States; in the other (6273) he, with others, was charged with having conspired to willfully and unlawfully conceal, remove, mutilate, obliterate, and destroy records, papers, and other documents filed and deposited in a public office, to wit, the immigration office at Angel Island, Cal., the court said: "It is said that the indictment (6272) is defective, in that there is no allegation as to what Kaphan did with the records which he would use in bringing and causing to be brought into the United States Chinese persons not entitled to enter or remain in the United States. The point is not well taken. The indictment, after alleging that Kaphan with others conspired to do the things charged as heretofore stated, averred that in furtherance of the conspiracy and to effect the object thereof one of the defendants, Yow, delivered to another defendant, Akers, certain letters addressed to Chinese applicants for admission to the United States awaiting examination to enter the United States at the immigration station at Angel Island, Cal., and that the letters contained questions and answers to be used by the applicants as a means of gaining admission to the United States. The indictment was drawn under section 37 of the Penal Code, and section 11 of the Chinese Immigration Act (section 11, Act May 6, 1882, as amended by Act of July 5, 1884). Section 11 provides that any person who shall knowingly bring into or cause to be brought into the United States, or aid or abet the landing in the United States, from any vessel, of any Chinese person not lawfully entitled to enter the United States, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. Inasmuch as the charge was for conspiring to violate the section just referred to, it was unnecessary to allege in detail what Kaphan did with the records which were delivered, and which contained questions to be used by the applicants as a means of gaining admission to the United States. . . . In the charge of conspiracy to violate . . . section [128 of the Penal Code] it was unnecessary to set forth what was done with the files or whether the Chinese were actually entitled lawfully to enter the United States. The material matter was whether there was an unlawful conspiracy to conceal, remove, or destroy records and documents filed in the immigration office at Angel Island, Cal., and whether defendant was a guilty member of such conspiracy."

q. Interstate Shipment of Intoxicating Liquors (p. 578)

In Grayson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 553, it was held to be unnecessary to allege that the shipments constituting the overt acts were made for beverage purposes.

5. For Conspiracy to Defraud

h. Fraud in Public Contracts (p. 589)

Fraudulent bids.—In U. S. v. Amster, (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 273 Fed. 532, an indictment charging conspiracy to defraud the United States by collusively presenting three false and fraudulent bids for tea the highest of which bids was below the market price, was held sufficient.

IX. EVIDENCE

2. Admissibility and Competency in General (p. 591)

To same effect as first paragraph of original annotation, see Nee v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 84.

Acts in pursuance of conspiracy.—In a prosecution under this section for a conspiracy to violate the Act of December 17, 1914 (4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 177), evidence that one of the defendants sent a check to a person in Canada, who received from the custom officials there drugs of the nature specified in the indictment, either as agent of a drug company or as a principal, is admissible. Nee v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 84.

Effect of dismissal of indictments against part of defendants.—Where indictments against part of the defendants, charged with a conspiracy to commit an offense against the United States by a violation of the postal laws, have been dismissed the failure to prove either the necessary intent or action in respect of the use of the mail as to some of the defendants does not eliminate from the conspiracy or fraudulent scheme those who did not happen to go the statutory length of using or causing to be used the postal establishment of the United States in the execution of what all the defendants intended to accomplish, to wit, the defrauding of a portion of the public, and evidence showing their participation in devising the scheme is nevertheless proper. Lefkowitz v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 664.

3. Knowledge, Motive or Intent

b. Other Offenses (p. 594)

On the trial of an indictment for conspiracy to defraud the United States by the use of counterfeiting stamping devices in a factory engaged in the manufacture of shoes for the government, the general rule applies that on the trial for one offense evidence of another distinct and unrelated offense committed by the defendant is not admissible, unless it is offered for one of the purposes which constitute exceptions to this general rule. On such a trial evidence of other offenses is not admissible to show guilty knowledge where neither guilty knowledge nor intent are in issue. Macdonald v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 733.

But on a prosecution under this section for conspiracy to deal in and sell morphine sulphate, a derivative of opium, in violation of the registration and tax provisions of the Act of December 17, 1914 (4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 177), evidence is admissible of a violation of the state law, where it appears that the evidence of such violation was concealed in the same way and in the same place that evidence of the offense against the federal law was charged to be concealed. Nee v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 84.

5. Variance (p. 595)

Where an indictment charges persons named with having conspired "with divers other persons to said grand jurors unknown" it is not a fatal variance that evidence offered would have shown that the names of such persons were known to the grand jurors, where the means are set out with sufficient particularity and the various overt acts give dates, places and names with so much particularity that no defendant could be taken by surprise by any of the testimony offered by the government the defendant thus being informed of the nature and cause of the accusation as required by the Constitution of the United States. U. S. v. Heitler, (N. D. Ill. 1921) 274 Fed. 401.

10. Weight and Sufficiency (p. 598)

In general.—"A charge of conspiracy is one that is not easily susceptible of direct proof, nor is it essential to establish conspiracy that actual proof be offered of a definite plan or agreement entered into by conspirators. It is sufficient if the evidence shows such a concert of action in the commission of the unlawful act, or such other facts and circumstances upon which the natural inference arises, that the unlawful, overt act was in furtherance of a common design, intent, and purpose of the alleged conspirators to commit the same." Davidson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 285.

To establish a conspiracy to violate a certain criminal statute, the evidence must convince a jury that defendants did something other than participate in the substantive offense which is the object of the conspiracy. U. S. v. Heitler, (N. D. Ill. 1921) 274 Fed. 401.

See also Peterson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 929; Hardy v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 134; Clark v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 104.

Sufficiency of evidence on a prosecution under Reed Amendment, see Grayson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 553; Block v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 524.

X. TRIAL, ACQUITTAL OR CONVICTION, AND PUNISHMENT

3. Instructions (p. 601)

Testimony of accomplices.—In a prosecution under this section the failure of the court to instruct the jury as to the value of the testimony of an accomplice, and to call its attention to the danger of placing too much reliance upon such testimony, and to their rights to require corroborating testimony before giving credence to such evidence, is not error. Nee v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 84, wherein it was said:

"The point made by the defendants and refused by the court was as follows:

"The testimony of an accomplice should be received with caution and scrutinized with great care by the jury, who should not rely upon it, unless it produces in their minds the most positive conviction of its truth."

"In support of this point the defendants relied on Caminetti v. United States, 242 U. S. 470, 37 Sup. Ct. 192, 61 L. ed. 442, L. R. A. 1917F, 502, Ann. Cas. 1917B. We are not familiar with any rule warranting an instruction in this form. While the Supreme Court said in the case cited, that

"It is the better practice of a trial judge in instructing a jury to caution them to scrutinize the testimony of an accomplice," that court expressly ruled in the same case that mere failure so to do is not reversible error. Nor do we see the pertinency of the defendants' contention that the jury should have been cautioned not to credit the testimony of an accomplice unless sustained by corroborating evidence, in view of the proof of the overt acts averred. Gretsch v. United States (C. C. A. 3d) 242 Fed. 897, 898, 155 C. C. A. 485; Knoell v. United States (C. C. A. 3d) 239 Fed. 165, 152 C. C. A. 66.

"This we think disposes of this assignment. If, however, there was sufficient substance in the contention to embody it in an assignment of error, it disappears from the case on the evidence that Gamble, Smith and Acker, who purchased drugs from one or the other of the defendants, were not, under authority of Wallace v. United States, 243 Fed. 300, 156 C. C. A. 80, accomplices. They were purchasers, and as such were not amenable to the Act. In consequence, any rule of caution with respect to the testimony of accomplices does not apply to their testimony."

6. Effect of Acquittal as Bar (p. 602)

To the same effect as the original annotation, see Harris v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 785.

An acquittal on the charge of committing one of the overt acts alleged in the indictment is not a bar to a prosecution for a conspiracy to commit such act. Moorehead v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 210. The court said: "To sustain the charge made against Shackelford by the count on which he was convicted, it was not necessary to prove his participation in the theft of which he was acquitted. All that was required to sustain that charge was proof that the defendants conspired as alleged, and that, to effect the object of the conspiracy, any one of them committed or participated in the theft alleged. The plea under consideration amounted to the assertion by the defendant Shackelford that he was not subject to be convicted of the alleged conspiracy because he had been acquitted of another and different offense not necessary to be proved to sustain the conspiracy charge. We are of opinion that that plea was bad because the former acquittal it set up was of an offense other than the one charged in the instant case, the same evidence not being required to sustain both charges. There was not the required identity between the offense presently charged and the one which was the subject of the alleged acquittal. The fact that both charges related to and grew out of one transaction made no difference."

But where on a charge for conspiracy the government elected to prove as a part of the charge the larceny of certain goods which it failed to prove, it is held that there can be no subsequent prosecution for a larceny of the same goods. U. S. v. Clavin, (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 272 Fed. 985.

I. CONSTRUCTION AND APPLICATION, IN GENERAL

4. "Official Function" (p. 604)

Baggage porter on railroad under federal control.—Bribery or attempted bribery of a baggage porter while the railroad was under the control of and operated by the United States is not comprehended by the provision of this section, making it a criminal offense to bribe or attempt to bribe an officer of the United States, or a person acting for or on behalf of the United States in an official function under or by the authority of a department or office of the government. Krichman v. U. S., (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 514, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) — (reversing (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 538, which affirmed (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 256 Fed. 974), wherein the court said: "In order to sustain the conviction, the bribe must have been given to an officer of the United States, or to a person acting for or on behalf of the United States in an official function under or by the authority of a department or office of the government.

"Clearly, the porter was not an officer of the United States. United States v. Maurice, 2 Brock. 96, Fed. Cas. No. 15,747; United States v. Hartwall, 6 Wall. 385, 393, 18 L. ed. 830, 832. We need not dwell upon this point, as the government concedes that the porter was not an officer within the meaning of the statute.

"The point to be decided depends upon whether, when the bribe was offered to the porter, he was acting for the United States in an official function. The decided cases do not afford much aid in reaching a solution of this problem, and in our view the cases cited in the opinion in the courts below throw little light upon the subject. The statute creating the offense was passed long before there was any thought of the government taking over the railroads. That does not prevent its application if the thing done offends against it. It is, however, a circumstance proper to be considered in determining whether the situation is one intended to be dealt with by Congress.

"The act aims to punish the attempted bribery or bribery of officials and those exercising official functions under or by the authority of a department or office of the government. Not every person performing any service for the government, however humble, is embraced within the terms of the statute. It includes those, not officers, who are performing duties of an official character. As was well suggested by Judge Ward in his dissenting opinion in the circuit court of appeals, not every employee of the government is covered by the act, but a limitation is made, applying to those acting in official functions. And he added: 'The construction adopted by the court gives these words no meaning. They might as well, or indeed better, have been omitted, because window-cleaners, scrub women, elevator boys, doorkeepers, pages,—in short, anyone employed by the United States to do anything,—is included.'

"The government admits that the construction contended for will include the employees suggested by Judge Ward. Indeed, the construction given by the courts below would bring within the statute every employee acting under the Director General in the operation of the railroads. We are unable to accept this construction of a criminal statute."

Government inspectors in a plant where goods were manufactured under contract for the United States during war, were held to be performing official duties for the United States within the meaning of this section. Sears v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 257.

II. PROSECUTION FOR OFFENSE

3. Indictment (p. 606)

Overt acts.—See section 37, IV, 5, supra, p. 692.

Charging offense.—It is proper to charge the same offense specified in an indictment in different ways in the several counts; the differences mainly having relation to the official name or title of the person sought to be bribed. And an indictment under this section need not charge that the property concerning which an indictment was offered was the property of the United States. This is not necessary under the statute under which the prosecution is had. It would have been as much an offense to bribe an officer under the circumstances here, in handling the property of a stranger, passing through government channels, intended for government use, as if it actually belonged to the United States. Sneierson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 268.

5. Evidence (p. 606)

Errors in admission of evidence.—Where the guilt of the accused is clearly and conclusively established under this section independent of any error in the admission of evidence, such an error will be regarded as harmless on appeal by virtue of section 209 of the Judicial Code as amended by Act of Feb. 26, 1919 (1919 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. p. 231). Sneierson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 268.

Sufficiency of evidence.—In Sneierson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 268, it was said as to the evidence of the official duties and character of a person whom it was alleged there had been an attempt to bribe, much time was spent in the contention that Fox's appointment, his authority especially to act in reference to the disposition of the nitrate of soda bags, and the relation that he occupied between the Atlas Powder Company and the United States ammonia nitrate plant, should all have been shown, either by specific act of Congress, or copies of records of the War Department, pursuant to section 882 of the Revised Statutes. Assuming the way indicated to have been proper, can there be any reason why the same facts could not have been proven by other competent evidence of those having personal knowledge of the matters to which they deposed? Why should not the witness Fox testify as to what his official duties were, and be allowed to introduce the original evidence of his appointment, and the original instructions issued to him? Moreover, he was the official in possession of and having control of the bags, the subject of the alleged bribery. He was the person, after the official correspondence in relation thereto, and inspection of the bags, that the defendant saw proper to offer and pay the bribe to, to secure a fraudulent advantage against the United States; and the defendant should not now, when the government and the party sought to be bribed are endeavoring to punish him for the great wrong attempted to be perpetrated, be heard to interpose mere flimsy and fallacious objections, in order to escape liability for the crime committed.

Inspector of Emergency Fleet Corporation as agent of United States.—The United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, controlled and managed as it was by its own officers, and appointing its own servants and agents, who became directly responsible to it, must be regarded as an entity separate from the United States, notwithstanding the ownership by the government of all its capital stock, and a person employed by such Fleet Corporation as an inspector is not an agent of the United States, within the meaning of this section. U. S. v. Strang, (1921) 254 U. S. 491, 41 S. Ct. 165, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Construction.—"Section 47 of the Criminal Code relates to the same subject-matter and defines a crime kindred in its nature to the crime defined in section 46, and is therefore subject to the same construction, as to the value of the thing taken, as the construction given section 46." Clark v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 329.

Larceny defined.—If, at the time of getting possession lawfully, the one to whom property is intrusted has the intention of appropriating it to his own use, the crime thus committed is the crime of larceny. Tredwell v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 350.

Embezzlement defined.—Where one comes lawfully into the possession of property, and afterwards and while it is in his possession forms and carries out the purpose of appropriating it to his own use, the crime thus committed is the crime of embezzlement. Tredwell v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 350.

Embezzlement and larceny.—In Tredwell v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 350, the contractors engaged to perform the transportation service employed defendant, who was a stevedore, to unload the nitrate from the vessels, reload it into the cars, and bill the cars to the munition plants as directed by the Ordnance Department. The defendant billed a number of cars to certain fertilizer companies and other consumers, to whom he sold the nitrate through a broker. In the instances in which this was done he sent fictitious bills of lading to the officers in charge of the munition plants, thus apparently complying with the directions of the department, though of course the diverted nitrate never reached its proper destination. This being the method of operation, it was claimed that the property came lawfully into the possession of defendant under his employment by the contractors, and therefore it was not larceny, but embezzlement, if he appropriated some part of it to his own use. The court said: "The first answer to the contention is this: Granted that defendant had lawful possession of the nitrate for the purposes of his employment, we think it clear that such possession ceased when the loading of the cars was completed, and that the property then passed into the possession of the railroad company. When he thereupon caused it to be billed to his own customers, instead of the munition plants, his diversion of the property was in substance a felonious taking of it from the railroad company, and this brought his act within the accepted definition of larceny. There was evidence to the effect that defendant, as agent of the contractors and with the government's consent, had the custody of the nitrate for the government up to the time it was delivered to the railroad, and that he was the agent of the railroad in loading it into the cars. Therefore, when the nitrate was placed in the cars, it was in the custody and possession of the railroad, and under control of defendant as the railroad's agent, and not as the government's agent. It follows that his conversion of the nitrate at any time after that was not the embezzlement of property which he held for the government, but the stealing of government property in the hands of the railroad.

"There is another and equally conclusive answer. Where one comes lawfully into the possession of property, and afterwards and while it is in his possession forms and carries out the purpose of appropriating it to his own use, the crime thus committed is the crime of embezzlement; but if, at the time of getting possession lawfully, the one to whom property is intrusted has the intention of appropriating it to his own use, the crime thus committed is the crime of larceny."

Checks.—A government pay check may be the subject of larceny by reason of the intrinsic value of the paper, but its value is by no means the measure of the defendant's guilt. And where pay checks of postal employees are placed on a table near the desk of the superintendent of employees and under his supervision and control, each pay check is still in the possession of the government until the particular employee for whom it is intended has taken possession of his check and signed the pay roll as required. Clark v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 329, wherein it was held that a government pay check might be regarded as a "record" or "voucher" within the meaning of those words as used in this section, this conclusion being reached in the case of a mail carrier's pay check. The court said: "This check is signed by the postmaster and countersigned by the assistant postmaster. It not only authorized the bank to pay, out of the funds of the United States on deposit in that bank, the amount named therein to the mail carrier in whose favor it was drawn, but in effect certified the amount due him from the United States for his services. It is not substantially different from a separate pay voucher, signed and attested by the postmaster and assistant postmaster, that might be presented by the mail carrier at the window of the post office cashier for payment. To all intents and purposes it is a 'voucher,' within the meaning and intent of section 47, of the Penal Code.

"Not only is it a voucher, but it is in fact, and was no doubt intended to be, a record of payment by the United States to this mail carrier of the amount due him. In the ordinary course of business, it evidenced that payment as fully as any other record could evidence it. It was all-sufficient as a record of payment, without the receipted pay roll. That it had not yet been delivered to the payee, or canceled and returned to the bank, cannot change its character in that respect, if in fact it was intended, at the time it was written to serve the dual purpose of voucher and record of payment."

Officer acting under void search warrant.—A defendant cannot be convicted of resisting with a deadly weapon a person authorized to make searches or seizures where the warrant under which the officer acts is void. "It is only when the officer resisted is authorized by valid warrant to make search and seizure that the statute under which the indictment is preferred may be invoked." U. S. v. Pitotto, (D. C. Ore. 1920) 267 Fed. 603.

Sufficiency of indictment.—An indictment under this section must set out the authority under which the search and seizure was made in order to be good, as indictments under this section do not fall within the class of cases where the charge may be made in the language of the statute creating the offense. U. S. v. Hallowell, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 271 Fed. 795.

Officers within section.—In reply to the contention that this section relates only to embezzlement by revenue officers, it has been said: "We see no force in the contention that section 97 of the Criminal Code relates only to embezzlement by internal revenue officers. While the first clause of the section is so limited, this clause is followed by the express and unequivocal provision for the punishment of 'any officer of the United States * * * who shall embezzle or wrongfully convert to his own use any money' the custody of 'which may have come into his possession or under his control' by virtue of his official employment or authority. The fact that the headline to the section as contained in the Criminal Code reads 'Embezzlement by internal revenue officer; punishment for,' cannot change the positive provision of the statute, which, indeed, before its incorporation into the Criminal Code, had no such headline. The question, however, is in our opinion set at rest by United States v. Davis, 243 U. S. 570, 37 Sup. Ct. 442, 61 L. Ed. 906, where a deputy clerk of a District Court of Hawaii was held punishable under section 97 of the Penal Code for embezzlement of fees deposited by litigants to secure payment of costs; and see the Weitzel Case at page 543, of 246 U. S. (38 Sup. Ct. 381, 62 L. Ed. 872)." Weitzel v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 101, wherein an indictment under this section was objected to on the ground that the accused, the receiver of an insolvent national bank, was not an "officer of the United States." The court said: "Each indictment is criticized as fatally defective because, as asserted, the receiver of an insolvent national bank, appointed by the Comptroller of the Currency, is not an officer of the United States and in its employment. We think this objection foreclosed by the decision of the Supreme Court in United States v. Weitzel, 246 U. S. 533, 38 Sup. Ct. 381, 62 L. Ed. 872, where, on review of an order dismissing a demurrer to an indictment charging this plaintiff in error, under section 5209 of the Revised Statutes, with embezzlement and making false entries as an agent of the bank here in question, it was held (affirming the judgment of the District Court) that 'the receiver, unlike a president, director, cashier or teller, is an officer, not of the corporation, but of the United States.' True, it was not necessary to an affirmance of the judgment below that the Supreme Court should affirmatively define the actual legal status of the receiver. It is enough that it unequivocally did so. That this was a considered conclusion is evidenced by the citation of several prior decisions of that court, holding the receiver of a national bank to be an officer of the United States.

"While these prior decisions might be differentiated from the case under consideration, in that they did not deal with identical relation involved here, the Supreme Court in fact applied them to that identical relation. It is thus not important to consider whether plaintiff in error was such an officer as is defined in article 2, § 2, of the federal Constitution. Lamar v. United States, 240 U. S. 60, 65, 36 Sup. Ct. 255, 60 L. Ed. 526. It is also unnecessary to consider the argument that section 97 of the Criminal Code is shown to be inapplicable by its noninclusion in the National Banking Act (Act June 3, 1864, c. 106, 13 Stat. 99), especially in view of what is said in the Weitzel Case, 246 U. S. 542, 543, 38 Sup. Ct. 381, 62 L. Ed. 872, regarding the Act of Feb. 3, 1879 (20 Stat. 280), which is substantially section 97 of the Criminal Code. Nor are we impressed by the fact that Congress, subsequent to the decision of the Supreme Court in the Weitzel Case, so amended section 5209 of the Revised Statutes as to make the receiver of a national banking association liable under the banking act for embezzlement or misapplication of any of the assets of his trust. Such amendment does not, in our opinion, indicate more than a congressional intent to supply a defect in the National Banking Act itself."

XI. Questions of fact and law.

V. OATH "AUTHORIZED" BY "LAW" (p. 674)

Bankruptcy proceedings.—A false answer made by the president of a corporation under examination in bankruptcy to the effect that certain money received had been used to pay the creditors of the corporation was held material in Epstein v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 282.

IX. EVIDENCE (p. 678)

Taking of oath and qualifications of officer.

—Proof that the oath was taken before the officer alleged and proof that such officer was qualified to administer the oath are essential to a conviction under this section.

Levy v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 942.

XI. QUESTIONS OF FACT AND LAW (p. 679)

To the same effect as the first paragraph of original annotation, see Epstein v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 282.

Vol. VII, p. 684, sec. 128. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 438.]

Indictment.—In Kaphan v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 323, in determining the sufficiency of an indictment alleging a violation of this section it was said: "The indictment follows the statute and pleads as overt acts the delivery of certain letters addressed to Chinese applicants for admission to the United States awaiting examination at the immigration station, and that certain of the defendants did deliver such letters to certain Chinese applicants, and that to effect the object of the conspiracy one of the defendants paid to another defendant $45, and that one of the defendants at the immigration station did abstract from the files of the record room certain official files of the government of the United States, pertaining to certain Chinese persons and delivered the files to one of the defendants. In the charge of conspiracy to violate section [128 of the Penal Code], it was unnecessary to set forth what was done with the files or whether the Chinese were actually entitled lawfully to enter the United States. The material matter was whether there was an unlawful conspiracy to conceal, remove, or destroy records and documents filed in the immigration office at Angel Island, Cal., and whether defendant was a guilty member of such conspiracy."

VIII. Assaulting witness.

I. IN GENERAL (p. 689)

Purpose.—The purpose of Congress in enacting this section was not to charge witnesses with duty or liability, but to protect them and the administration of justice from corruptly threatening and intimidating acts by third persons. Smith v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 351.

III. WORDS DEFINED

3. "Obstruct" and "Impede" (p. 689)

Attempt to influence juror.—Experimental approaches to the corruption of a petit juror in the discharge of his duty, though before he was selected or sworn, are, without regard to success or failure, within the scope of this section. U. S. v. Russel, (1921) 255 U. S. 138, 41 S. Ct. 260, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said: "Necessarily, the first impression of the case is that defendant had some purpose in his approach to Lucy Russell and in the proposition he made to her. What was it, and how far did he execute it? Counsel admits that defendant's purpose was to 'find out what his [W. D. Russell's] attitude was towards the defendants to be tried.' And that this (we are stating the effect of counsel's contention) was only in preparation of a sinister purpose; that the defendants in the case did not wish to undertake, or, to use the language of the indictment, did not 'want to pay money to any of the petit jurors sitting at the trial of said case unless they knew such petit jurors would favor their acquittal.' And this, counsel says, 'only amounted to a solicitation of a third person who did not accept or act in furtherance of such solicitation,' and 'could be interpreted only . . . to be preparation [italics counsel's] for an 'endeavor' or 'attempt' to influence the juror, but falls far short of an actual endeavor to do so.'

"Counsel enters into quite a discussion, with citation of cases, between preparation for an attempt and the attempt itself, and charges that there is a wide difference between them.

"We think, however, that neither the contention nor the cases are pertinent to the section under review and upon which the indictment was based. The word of the section is 'endeavor,' and by using it the section got rid of the technicalities which might be urged as besetting the word 'attempt,' and it describes any effort or essay to do or accomplish the evil purpose that the section was enacted to prevent. Criminality does not get rid of its evil quality by the precautions it takes against consequences, personal or pecuniary. It is a somewhat novel excuse to urge that Russell's action was not criminal because he was cautious enough to consider its cost and be sure of its success. The section, however, is not directed at success in corrupting a juror, but at the 'endeavor' to do so. Experimental approaches to the corruption of a juror are the 'endeavor' of the section. Guilt is incurred by the trial,—success may aggravate, it is not a condition of it.

"The indictment charges that defendant knew that William D. Russell was a petit juror, in the discharge of his duty as such juror, and, therefore, an endeavor to corruptly influence him was within the section, though he was not yet selected or sworn. State v. Woodson, 43 La. Ann. 905, 9 So. 903. The court, hence, erred in sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the indictment."

Attempting to obtain statement of facts from witness.—It is not an unlawful attempt to influence or impede a witness, or the due administration of justice, for one to seek to obtain from a witness a statement of the facts as he believes them to be, without the exercise of undue influence, even though such a statement may conflict with prior testimony given by the one making the statement. Such an effort is not regarded with favor, because of the temptation to influence the witness unduly; but the mere request for a statement believed to be true does not offend against the statute under which this indictment was drawn, because it is not corrupt conduct. Harrington v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 97.

5. Witness (p. 690)

Persons included in term "witness."—"The terms of the statute, the evil it was enacted to prevent, and the protection it was intended to provide, leave no doubt that under its true interpretation each of those who are subpoenaed to come, of those who are called and accept the call to come without subpoenas, of those who are prompted to come by their interests, of those who expect to come, and of those who are selected and expected to come to testify in any case in any court of the United States, falls within the class described by the terms 'any witness, in any court of the United States.'" Smith v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 351.

VIII. ASSAULTING WITNESS (p. 691)

A person may be convicted under this section for assaulting a witness who has testified in a case where such witness is on his way to testify in rebuttal, although the accused testifies that he did not know that the witness was to testify again. Smith v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 351, holding that in such a prosecution it is no defense that the witness was not under subpoena, or other order or direction of the court, and might lawfully have refused to come on the telegraphic call to the court, or might have departed therefrom, and was not a witness in the court, within the meaning of this section. The court said: "Many, probably a majority, of all the witnesses who testify in courts of justice, do so without the service of a subpoena or other order of the court, pursuant to the request of the parties to the litigation or to the promptings of interest. They, however, are not less witnesses than those who testify under subpoenas. The corrupt threatening or forceful influencing or intimidation of witnesses who testify without subpoenas is not less pernicious than that of witnesses under orders of the court, and a construction which would limit the protection of this section to the latter class of witnesses is too narrow and unreasonable."

Vol. VII, p. 695, sec. 140. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 441.]

IV. "Obstruct."

X. Proof.

IV. "OBSTRUCT" (p. 696)

Purpose and construction.—"It is undoubtedly the purpose of this statute not only to prevent any persons from knowingly and willfully obstructing, resisting, and opposing an officer in the execution of a writ, but also to protect the person of public officers while they are in the discharge of their official duties. Such officer is not required to disclose to every one or any one he meets that he is then and there engaged in serving such writ or process. On the contrary, whoever assaults and beats him, knowing him to be such officer, does so at his peril, if it should later appear by the evidence that the officer was, at the time of such assault, beating, or wounding, actually engaged in the service of a writ, warrant, or other judicial process, regardless of whether the accused knew that fact or not. Any other construction of this particular provision of this section of the Criminal Code would make it meaningless and practically impossible of enforcement. In the great majority of cases the government would be unable * * * to prove that the accused had knowledge that the officer was in possession of such writ or warrant, or that he was engaged in and about its execution." Coleman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 468.

What constitutes obstructing.—The fact that the person for whom the warrant was issued was not in the immediate vicinity at the time the offense set forth in this section was committed is not important. If it were not then and there the purpose of the officer in making the trip to arrest the person named in the warrant then the mere fact that he had such a warrant in his possession would furnish no basis for the prosecution. On the other hand, if it were conceded or proven that this officer of the United States was on his way to execute this warrant, that the accused had full knowledge of that fact, and that with such knowledge he willfully obstructed, resisted, or opposed him in the execution of this writ at any point along the line of travel to the residence or the location of the person named in the warrant, it would be idle to say that such an offense would not come within the purview of this statute. Such a construction would permit persons of evil design to ambush an officer on his way to execute a writ, and thereby knowingly and willfully obstruct, resist, oppose, and even prevent the officer from the performance of his official duties, without being subject to the penalty imposed by the provisions of this section. Coleman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 468.

Burden of proof.—"This section expressly provides that the offense charged in the first count of this indictment must be knowingly and willfully committed by the accused. The burden is upon the government to establish these essential elements by the degree of proof requisite in criminal cases." Coleman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 468.

Sufficiency of evidence.—Under the express terms of this section it is sufficient to sustain a verdict of guilty, if the proof shows that the accused knew at the time he committed the assault and battery upon a person that such person was an officer of the United States, provided, however, that such person was then engaged in serving this warrant, or any other legal or judicial writ or process issued out of any court of the United States or by a United States commissioner. Coleman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 468, wherein it was held that the evidence was insufficient to show a violation of this section.

War savings certificates and war saving certificate stamps become obligations of the United States only when a stamp or stamps shall have been affixed to the certificates and the name of the owner or owners shall have been written upon the certificate. Such certificates, when so made up and completed are obligations or securities of the United States within the purview of this section. And they must be deemed to be altered, within the meaning of this section, when the stamps have been removed from the certificates to which they have been annexed, with intent to defraud, or to utter and pass the same (the stamps) as true and genuine. It is not significant whether the stamps so detached are transferable or not transferable. But it is significant that the person so having such altered obligations is attempting to deal with them with the intent to defraud, or as true and genuine. "It is not an alteration or forgery of such war savings certificates, fully made up, to erase or remove the serial number thereof, because such serial number is not a material element of the obligation. The obligation is just as potent in the hands of the holder without as with the serial number. But if the certificate has been registered, as provided by the departmental regulations, and given a registration number, it would, without question, constitute a forgery or an alteration to erase or remove the registration number with intent to defraud, within the meaning of the sections of the Penal Code referred to, because such number is made an essential element to the validity of the obligation. The purpose of affixing the number or numbers is for identification of the obligation at the post office where payable, and for the protection of the government, to ward against payment to the wrong person, or double payment, as well as for the protection of the lawful owner and holder of the certificate or certificates." U. S. v. Rossi, (D. C. Ore. 1920) 268 Fed. 620.

Indictment—Setting forth instrument.—An indictment for forging or altering a government obligation, or for passing the same or having it in possession with intent to defraud, or to pass it as true and genuine, should set forth the obligation in hæc verba, or some potent reason should be alleged showing why that cannot be done. U. S. v. Rossi, (D. C. Ore. 1920) 268 Fed. 620.

Altering war savings certificate.—An indictment purporting to charge the defendant with having erased or effaced the registration and identification number of a war savings certificate is bad where it does not allege by appropriate averments that such certificates have been previously registered. Such an indictment for altering a war savings certificate is not predicated upon any violation of the departmental regulations respecting war savings certificates, or disobedience of any of such regulations. The charges are predicated alone upon a violation of the designated sections of the Penal Code. The regulations have to do with the regularity and validity of war savings certificates as obligations of the United States, and when the war savings certificates become such obligations, then the sections of the code denouncing alteration, purchase, sale, transfer, possession, or utterance, with the intent to defraud, or to pass as true and genuine, become applicable. If the validity of the paper itself were attacked, that would be quite another thing. Then it would be pertinent to examine the act and the regulations to determine whether the certificates were legal and valid obligations of the United States. It requires no pleading of the statute or the regulations for a regular presentation of the subject for consideration. The court takes judicial notice of these. U. S. v. Rossi, (D. C. Ore. 1920) 268 Fed. 620.

Sufficiency of evidence.—Under an indictment charging a person together with five others with a conspiracy falsely to make and alter United States War Savings Certificates and United States War Savings Certificate Stamps and to publish, utter and sell such altered obligations, a conviction was reversed where there was testimony that altered stamps were found in the possession of the plaintiff in error, and that he had pleaded guilty to an indictment which charged him with having in his possession such altered stamps with the intention to pass and sell them; but there was no testimony or evidence of any kind to show that he conspired with his codefendant, or with any one, to steal or alter such stamps, or that there was any concert of action between the plaintiff in error and any of the defendants, or that there was a conspiracy. Peterson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 929.

I. Scope of section.
V. Indictment.

I. SCOPE OF SECTION (p. 712)

War savings certificates and war saving certificate stamps.—Such obligations must be deemed to be altered, within the meaning of this section, when the stamps have been removed from the certificates to which they have been annexed, with intent to defraud, or to utter and pass the same (the stamps) as true and genuine. It is not significant whether the stamps so detached are transferable or not transferable. But it is significant that the person so having such altered obligations is attempting to deal with them with the intent to defraud, or as true and genuine. "It is not an alteration or forgery of such war savings certificates, fully made up, to erase or remove the serial number thereof, because such serial number is not a material element of the obligation. The obligation is just as potent in the hands of the holder without as with the serial number. But if the certificate has been registered, as provided by the departmental regulations, and given a registration number, it would, without question, constitute a forgery or an alteration to erase or remove the registration number with intent to defraud, within the meaning of the sections of the Penal Code referred to, because such number is made an essential element to the validity of the obligation. The purpose of affixing the number or numbers is for identification of the obligation at the post office where payable, and for the protection of the government, to ward against payment to the wrong person, or double payment, as well as for the protection of the lawful owner and holder of the certificate or certificates." U. S. v. Rossi, (D. C. Ore. 1920) 268 Fed. 620.

V. INDICTMENT (p. 713)

In general.—An indictment for forging or altering a government obligation, or for passing the same or having it in possession with intent to defraud, or to pass it as true and genuine, should set forth the obligation in hæc verba, or some potent reason should be alleged showing why that cannot be done. U. S. v. Rossi, (D. C. Ore. 1920) 268 Fed. 620.

Vol. VII, p. 716, sec. 154. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 445.]

War savings certificates and war saving certificate stamps become obligations of the United States only when a stamp or stamps shall have been affixed to the certificate and the name of the owner or owners shall have been written upon the certificate. Such certificates, when so made up and completed are obligations or securities of the United States, within the purview of this section. And such obligations must be deemed to be altered, within the meaning of this section, when the stamps have been removed from the certificates to which they have been annexed, with intent to defraud, or to utter and pass the same (the stamps) as true and genuine. It is not significant whether the stamps so detached are transferable or not transferable. But it is significant that the person so having such altered obligations is attempting to deal with them with the intent to defraud, or as true and genuine. U. S. v. Rossi, (D. S. Ore. 1920) 268 Fed. 620, wherein it was said: "It is not an alteration or forgery of such war savings certificates, fully made up, to erase or remove the serial number thereof, because such serial number is not a material element of the obligation. The obligation is just as potent in the hands of the holder without as with the serial number. But if the certificate has been registered, as provided by the departmental regulations, and given a registration number, it would, without question, constitute a forgery or an alteration to erase or remove the registration number with intent to defraud, within the meaning of the sections of the Penal Code referred to, because such number is made an essential element to the validity of the obligation. The purpose of affixing the number or numbers is for identification of the obligation at the post office where payable, and for the protection of the government, to ward against payment to the wrong person, or double payment, as well as for the protection of the lawful owner and holder of the certificate or certificates."

Indictment.—An indictment for forging or altering a government obligation, or for passing the same or having it in possession with intent to defraud, or to pass it as true and genuine, should set forth the obligation in hæc verba, or some competent reason should be alleged showing why that cannot be done. U. S. v. Rossi, (D. C. Ore. 1920) 268 Fed. 620.

Vol. VII, p. 729, sec. 169. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 450.]

Constitutionality.—Making the conscious and willful possession without lawful authority, of a die in the likeness or similitude of one used or designated for making genuine coin of the United States, a criminal offense, as was done by this section, was a valid exercise by Congress of the power conferred by the clause of U. S. Const., art. 1, § 8, investing Congress with power to coin money and regulate the value thereof, such power being in no wise limited by the following clause relating to the punishment for counterfeiting. Baender v. Barnett, (1921) 255 U. S. 224, 41 S. Ct. 271, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Purpose.—The object and purpose of the law was to prevent the counterfeiting of the coin of the United States. Cole v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 250.

Scienter necessary.—A possession which is not conscious and willing is not included and made criminal by the provisions of this section. Baender v. Barnett, (1921) 255 U. S. 224, 41 S. Ct. 271, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said: "The statute is not intended to include and make criminal a possession which is not conscious and willing. While its words are general, they are to be taken in a reasonable sense, and not in one which works manifest injustice or infringes constitutional safeguards. In so holding we but give effect to a cardinal rule of construction recognized in repeated decisions of this and other courts."

"Die" and "mold."—"Congress must be presumed to have known that the words 'die' and 'mold,' while for some purposes indicating different instruments, so far as the making of the coins of the United States was concerned, the instrument used might be called a die or mold interchangeably. . . . That the words 'die' and 'mold' may be used interchangeably to indicate the same instrument is shown by standing authority. . . . Congress did not intend to use the words 'die' and 'mold' in a technical sense, but intended to prevent the making or having in possession an instrument, whether called a die or mold, of the likeness and similitude as to the design or the inscription thereon of any instrument designated for the coining or making of any of the genuine coins of the United States, whether called a die or mold." Cole v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 250, wherein it was held that the indictment was sufficient.

Vol. VII, p. 754, sec. 194. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 457.]

II. PROCEDURE

2. Indictment or Information (p. 759)

Allegation as to specific pieces of money.—An indictment which charges the specific amount alleged to have been stolen "a more correct and complete description of the kind and character of said money being to the grand jurors unknown," is not subject to demurrer because it fails to describe the specific pieces of money or coin which made up the total amount taken. Ossendorf v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 257. The court said: "Although this assignment of error is not argued in the brief, it was urged in the oral argument, and we were asked to consider it as though fully presented in the brief. We have done so, and conclude that the indictment was not demurrable because of failure to describe the coins or other money taken. While particularity in the description of the property is desirable, to require the impossible would be absurd. In this case the safe was broken into and the money stolen. The postmaster had the record of the total amount of cash on hand, but not of the specific coins that made up the total. The grand jurors could not, therefore, 'on oath' specify the coins with greater particularity. Their position was made known to the defendant by the statement in the indictment just quoted. This was all the government was required to allege and all the defendants could expect."

1. GENERAL CONSIDERATION (p. 790)

Matter "tending to incite murder, arson or assassination."—The exclusion of a publication from the press as being of the character described in this section does not constitute a censorship of the press, but merely evidences the unwillingness of the government to lend its aid to those who would destroy it in the dissemination of "matter of a character tending to incite arson, murder, and assassination." Thus, where a publication constantly has sought to imbue its readers with the idea that it is their duty to overthrow the government, disregard all law, and seize for themselves the property and belongings of others, irrespective of means and regardless of consequences, it is held that postal privileges may properly be refused. Burleson v. U. S., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 274 Fed. 749.

Vol. VII, p. 803, sec. 212. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 463.]

Indictment.—Under the provision of this section making it a punishable offense to mail "matter otherwise mailable by law, upon the envelope or outside cover or wrapper of which, or any postal card upon which," is any indecent, lewd, obscene, libelous, scurrilous, or defamatory matter or epithet, an indictment has been held sufficient though there is no allegation as to the contents of the envelope. U. S. v. Anderson, (D. C. Mont. 1920) 263 Fed. 696. The court said:

"The evil at which the statute aims is not contents, but envelopes, neither greater nor less by reason of contents or absence of them. The object is not regulation of contents, but of envelopes. The intent is not to penalize mailing matter in denounced envelopes, but mailing the envelopes themselves; and all to the end that not only may postal patrons be protected from defamation exposed to postal employees, but also that postal employees may be protected from obscenity exposed to and thrust upon them. There may be none to defame; the address may be fictitious or absent; for matter is mailable though not addressed.

"The gist of the offense is the exposed objectionable matter itself in due course of mail, not that it is exposed inclosing other matter. The statutory words, 'matter otherwise mailable,' in view of the legislative intent and object, may reasonably be taken, not as defining the offense, but only as 'words that are but circumstances and conveyance in the putting of the case,' and not controlling construction. See Potter's Dwaris, 246 et seq. Strict construction is not absolute in the case of all penal statutes, nor in all terms thereof.

"Intent and object ascertained, words may be given their fullest meaning, and common sense applied to avoid absurdity. Laws for the suppression of a public wrong, or to effect a public good, or to supply a remedy for a general mischief, are not always in the strict sense penal laws, to be given strict construction. Taylor v. U. S., 3 How. 210, 11 L. Ed. 559; Potter's Dwarrris, 261; Endlich, Stats. § 337. An envelope without contents is in its nature so far a postal card that in that aspect it is within the statute. The instant case is within the mischief of the statute, and, having in mind the rule illustrated by Lacher's Case, 134 U. S. 624, is believed also sufficiently within the letter of the statute, unless construction that sticks in the bark be adopted."

III. ESSENTIALS

3. Scheme or Artifice to Defraud, etc.

a. What Constitutes (p. 816)

Schemes included.—Under this section "as it now stands, any kind or species of scheme or artifice to defraud is punishable in the national courts, if and whenever for the purpose of executing that scheme the postal establishment is used in the statutory manner and form. Under such a statute no reason can exist why a scheme or artifice to defraud the United States . . . should not be punishable thereunder when—perhaps especially when—the United States mail is used in the prosecution of a scheme to defraud the United States." Gould v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 506.

Success of scheme immaterial.—The statute does not make the guilt or innocence of one who devises such a scheme dependent on its actual success. Bryon v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 769; Grant v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 443.

Pecuniary loss to government.—An agreement to defraud need not contemplate any pecuniary loss on the part of the government. Gould v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 506.

Impossibility of execution of scheme.—The objection that on its face the scheme was impossible of execution and that no one would have been deceived thereby is without merit. Byron v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 769.

Erroneous statement of point of law.—In a case where it was contended that an erroneous statement concerning a point of law was not indictable, it was said: "If such a statement is honestly made, of course, no criminal charge will stand; but if there is a willful misstatement, made deliberately and with intent to deceive, and with a purpose to perpetrate a fraud, it is plain the statement may become an essential element in crime." Byron v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 769.

False claim mailed by partner.—A person who knows of the preparation by his partner of a false claim for services rendered by the partnership and of the mailing of that claim and a letter accompanying it to the person whom it is sought to defraud may be convicted under this section. Estelle v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 530.

4. Use of Mails (p. 825)

Mailing of letter, etc., as element of offense.—The mailing of any letter or writing for the purpose of executing the fraudulent scheme is what the statute makes an element of the offense. Byron v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 769. See also Smith v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 665.

IV. PROCEDURE

2. Indictment

a. In General (p. 823)

A motion for a bill of particulars in the case of an indictment under this section is addressed to the discretion of the court and ordinarily is not reviewable. Savage v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 14.

b. Scheme to Defraud (p. 828)

How alleged.—It is not necessary in an indictment under this section that the scheme itself appear to be fraudulent on its face or that it alleged that any one has actually lost money or been defrauded. Rowe v. Boyle, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 809. See also Tjosevig v. Boyle, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 813.

It is not necessary to allege or to prove that the letters mailed in pursuance of the scheme to defraud under this section of the Penal Code are calculated to be effective in carrying out the scheme. Savage v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 14.

"The particulars of the scheme are matters of substance, and must be set forth with sufficient certainty as to its existence and character that the indictment will fairly acquaint the defendant with the scheme charged against him; but the gist of the offense in the mailing of the letter, writing, or article in pursuance of the scheme, and the scheme itself need not be pleaded with all the certainty as to time, place, and circumstance that is required in charging the gist of the offense, the mailing of the matter in execution or attempted execution of the scheme." Savage v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 14.

Illustrations.—Where the only allegation in the indictment as to the specific means by which defendants were to fraudulently obtain possession of the draft or its proceeds is that—

"By trickery, artifice, chicanery, cheating, and by making false and fraudulent statements, representations and pretenses, and by other artifices, false representations, pretenses and deceptions, to the grand jurors unknown, to the said Fred Kaiser, the defendants would obtain possession of the said draft," etc., a demurrer challenging the sufficiency of this statement should be overruled. Grant v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 443.

In case of a prosecution under this section where the substance of the scheme charged was not the mere use of a corporate name similar to the name of an existing association, but to use it so as to have the credit and reputation of the other company in order to obtain goods not intended for defendant, and for which he would not pay, the failure to allege that the unincorporated partnership or association, then doing business and in actual operation, was duly organized, was held not to be prejudicial to the defendant, and make the indictment fatally defective, in view of the provisions of R. S. sec. 1025 (2 Fed. Stat. Ann. 2d ed. p. 681). Savage v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 14.

An indictment has been held sufficient under this section where it alleges the nature, etc., of the scheme with sufficient particularity to acquaint the defendant with the value, etc., of the charges made. Green v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 779.

c. Use of Mails (p. 833)

Scheme to be effected through use of mails.—An indictment is insufficient which charges that the defendant did devise and intend to devise a scheme and artifice to defraud the United States and that in furtherance of such scheme he used the United States mail to forward an application for employment which contained false and fraudulent statements and promises, and that the purpose of the defendant in making such false representations was to defraud the United States by reason of his employment by the addressee, thus exempting himself from military duty under the Selective Service Law (Act May 18, 1917, 9 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1136). Underwood v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 412. The court said: "At the time alleged in the indictment the Selective Service Law contained no provision whatever exempting an employee of the Young Men's Christian Association from its terms and provisions. Had Underwood succeeded in securing employment with the Young Men's Christian Association through any fraudulent scheme or artifice, the fact that he was so employed would not then in any way have operated to exempt him from military duty under the provisions of that act or in any way to hinder or delay the United States government in raising an army and navy for its defense."

An indictment charging the use of the United States mail in furtherance of a scheme to defraud in that the accused sought to obtain employment through the mail on the basis of a salary and expenses by means of a letter containing false statements and representations, is insufficient where the primary purpose of the accused was to secure employment, and there is no averment in the indictment that he did not intend to perform any services or that whatever services he might perform by reason of such employment would have been of no value or of materially less value than the salary and expenses. Underwood v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 412.

The use of the mails in the execution of a scheme to defraud is held to be sufficiently alleged where after setting forth the scheme and its purpose the indictment further states that "the defendant . . . did willfully, . . . and for the purpose of executing the aforesaid scheme or artifice to defraud," mail a writing styled an appeal. The court said in such a case: "Of course, it cannot be said that on its face the paper called notice of appeal indicated any intention to defraud or was in execution of such an intention. But if one with corrupt intent has devised a scheme to defraud by getting money from people through deceit and misrepresentation, and for the purpose of carrying out a described scheme or artifice puts a writing in the mails, it is not material whether the writing is valid." Byron v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 769.

d. Intent (p. 834)

Charging intent unnecessary.—It is not necessary for an indictment to charge that the scheme to defraud devised by the defendants was intended to be effective by the use of the post office establishment of the United States. Smith v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 665, holding an indictment to be sufficient which charged such a scheme and that, for the purpose of executing it, newspapers and letters were placed and caused to be placed by them in the post office of the United States to be carried by the post office establishment to certain persons named in the indictment.

4. Trial

b. Evidence and Instructions (p. 838)

Admissibility in general.—On a prosecution for conspiracy to defraud by the use of the mails great latitude is allowed in the introduction of testimony, as in most instances the offense can only be established by circumstantial evidence. Smith v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 665.

Declarations and admissions.—It is proper to permit a witness to testify to representations made in his presence by the defendant to a person named as one of the "victims" in the indictment. Bryon v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 769.

Intent—In general.—It is competent to show every part and parcel of the business conducted by the defendants, or the method of conducting it, calculated to shed light on the intent and purpose of its managers. Lefkowitz v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 664.

Similar schemes.—Evidence of participation of the defendants in a prior similar scheme to defraud has been held admissible although there is no proof that the prior scheme involved a use of the mails. Grant v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 443.

Documentary evidence—Copies of writings.—In a prosecution under this section copies of writings, where the original are shown to have been in the possession of the defendant or companies controlled by him, are admissible without notifying the defendant to produce the originals. Savage v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 14.

Overt acts.—The admission of testimony as to overt acts of some of the defendants before the conspiring has been established has been held to be within the discretion of the court. Smith v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 665.

In Grant v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 443, special delivery letters and telegrams addressed to two of the defendants were held admissible as being acts in the furtherance of the scheme to defraud.

Sufficiency.—In Savage v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 14, the evidence was held sufficient to sustain a conviction under this section where the scheme charged was the use of a corporate name similar to the name of an existing association so as to have the credit and reputation of the other company in order to obtain goods not intended for defendant and for which he would not have to pay.

c. Question for Jury (p. 843)

Intent and purpose.—The question of intent and purpose are for the jury. Byron v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 769.

6. Appeals (p. 844)

Insufficiency of evidence as to one of several counts.—A judgment of conviction under this section will not be reversed for insufficiency of the evidence, if it is sufficient to support one of several counts in the indictment and the penalty imposed is not in excess of that which could be imposed under that count. Savage v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 14.

6. Appeals (p. 844)

Where defendant was convicted on both counts of an indictment under this section and the judgment imposed could have been inflicted on either count, the judgment should not be reversed on account of any defect in or failure of proof as to one of the counts if the other count is good. Grant v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 443.

Vol. VII, p. 851, sec. 225. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 468.]

Evidence—Different offence.—Evidence of a failure to deposit money order funds with the depository designated is not admissible on the trial of one charged with embezzling postal funds. Youmans v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 425. The court said:

"The prosecution offered in evidence rule 1241 of the Postal Laws and Regulations of the Post Office Department, which in substance requires all postmasters to remit daily to the depository designated by special instructions to each office all surplus money order funds, unless the amount is less than $50, in which case no remittance is required. The evidence was duly objected to, on the grounds that it was not material, and because the defendant was not charged with failing or refusing to remit or deposit money order funds when required to do so. The defendant excepted to the overruling of the objection and the admission of the evidence. Other evidence adduced, considered in the light of the existence of the rule mentioned, tended to prove the defendant guilty under that part of section 225 of the Criminal Code, which makes a postmaster guilty of embezzlement if he fails or refuses to remit or deposit postal funds when required to do so by regulations of the Post Office Department. The admission of the rule under the circumstances stated was calculated to make the impression on the jury that, in determining the question of the defendant's guilt or innocence of the charge made in the indictment, they could consider his guilt of conduct other than that so charged against him. The indictment charged him with willfully and feloniously converting to his own use postal money order funds. His guilt of conduct other than that charged was not a matter proper to be considered by the jury. A violation of the rule in question was not within the issues to be tried. An effect of the admission of it in evidence was to enable the jury to consider the defendant's guilt in a respect not a proper subject of inquiry in the case on trial."

Transcript.—The certificate attached to the transcript must show that it is a true copy of the books of the auditor of the Post Office Department. Youmans v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 425.

Transportation to Porto Rico.—In Ayala v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 296, it was held that as there was no substantial evidence that the defendant had brought or caused the lottery lists and tickets to be brought from Santo Domingo, which was an essential part of the government's case, the conviction of the defendant in the lower court should be set aside. The reasons for the decision sufficiently appear in the following extract from the opinion:

"The only evidence upon which the defendant was convicted was that he was found with these lists and tickets, and that when they were demanded from him he threw them overboard. There was no direct evidence, as stated by the court, that he had any accomplices aboard the Santiago de Cuba, or that he had been in any way connected with bringing the lists or tickets from Santo Domingo. There was evidence that the steamer had touched at San Juan and Mayaguez, upon the island of Porto Rico, before it came to Ponce, and from the defendant's possession of the lists and the lottery tickets, and his conduct, the inference could as well have been drawn by the jury that the tickets and lists were obtained at San Juan, or Mayaguez, or that the defendant had obtained them in the harbor of Ponce from somebody aboard the steamer Santiago de Cuba, as that he had caused them to be brought from Santo Domingo. While it was the province of the jury to weigh the evidence, and to draw all reasonable inferences that might be drawn therefrom, we do not think, when inferences as consistent with innocence as with guilt may be drawn from the proven facts, it can be said that there was substantial evidence to support a verdict of guilty. The attempt of the plaintiff to destroy the evidence against himself evidently had great weight with the jury.

"It is pointed out in Hickory v. United States, 100 U. S. 408, 416, 16 Sup. Ct. 327, 40 L. ed. 474, that evidence of acts of concealment 'are competent to go to the jury as tending to establish guilt, yet they are not to be considered as alone conclusive, or as creating a legal presumption of guilt; they are mere circumstances, to be considered and weighed in connection with other proof, with that caution and circumspection which their inconclusiveness when standing alone require.'

"In our view of the case, we do not deem it necessary to discuss the other errors assigned, because we feel that there was no substantial evidence that the defendant had brought or caused the lists and lottery tickets to be brought from Santo Domingo, which was an essential part of the government's case."

Vol. VII, p. 863, sec. 238. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 472.]

Shipments within section.—This section has reference only to shipments by a common carrier. One Truck Load of Whisky v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 99.

Vol. VII, p. 864, sec. 239. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 473.]

Transportation within prohibition of section.—This section refers to transportation by any person as well as by a common carrier. One Truck Load of Whisky v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 99.

Vol. VII, p. 865, sec. 240. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 473.]

Relation to sections 238 and 239.—This section must be considered as in aid of and supplemental to sections 238 and 239 of the Penal Laws. One Truck Load of Whisky v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 99.

Construction.—In construing a statute of this character creating a new offense the rule applies that it should not be extended to include acts which may or may not have been within the legislative intent. One Truck Load of Whisky v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 99.

Shipment—What constitutes.—Where the owner of whisky did not give up its custody but hired a truck and driver from a firm which was in the business of letting for hire trucks with drivers for the transportation of merchandise, it was held that in thus carrying the whisky from one state to another there was not a shipment within the meaning of the statute. One Truck Load of Whisky v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 99.

A shipment as baggage is within this section. Shannon v. Hines, (1921) 205 Mo. App. 629, 226 S. W. 283.

Carrier excused from delivery.—A carrier is not liable for failure to deliver a package shipped in violation of this section. Shannon v. Hines, (1921) 205 Mo. App. 629, 226 S. W. 283.

Right to seize.—"The trial court also declared the law to be that if the trunk contained whisky and was checked for transportation as an interstate shipment then the seizure of the whisky by the United States revenue officer and its confiscation by him was a proper and lawful act. This, we think, is correct, at least so far as the seizure is concerned, in view of section 240, U. S. Criminal Code, above quoted, and which prohibits any one from shipping or causing to be shipped from one state to another any 'package of or package containing' intoxicants in a disguised or secret manner, and which further declares that 'such liquors shall be forfeited to the United States and may be seized,' etc. Whether such liquor could be confiscated without first being condemned by legal proceedings makes no difference here, since defendant had nothing to do with the destruction of the liquor after its seizure. The lawful seizure of the liquor destroys defendant's liability therefor, though its destruction was without authority of law." Shannon v. Hines, (1921) 205 Mo. App. 629, 226 S. W. 283, in which case, however, it was said, "the whisky could readily have been removed from the trunk and its other contents. It was so removed, in fact, and destroyed, and the officer then confiscated and converted to his own use the trunk and its entire contents. The same was held at the defendant's depot only a day and was then taken to a private house, and after being kept there some time was again removed, no one knows where. This, it seems to us, was unlawful and is not justified by the United States statute above quoted, and which did justify the seizure of the whisky."

Indictment.—It is held that an indictment under this section need not allege that the state into which the liquor was shipped was dry territory, it being declared that it is sufficient answer to an objection on such ground to say that the law presumes that all of the alleged conspirators had knowledge of the prohibitory statute referred to. Richards v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 654.

Evidence.—In Richards v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 654, the evidence was held sufficient to show a conspiracy in violation of this section.

III. THIRD PARAGRAPH

1. Lands Reserved or Acquired

a. In General (p. 896)

Allegation of character of public use.—Brown v. U. S., cited under this catchline in 1920 Supplement at p. 716 was reversed in (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 501, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, but not on the point discussed in the 1920 Supplement. The court however referred to that point in language as follows:

"The petitioner was convicted of murder in the second degree, committed upon one Hermis at a place in Texas within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, and the judgment was affirmed by the circuit court of appeals. 168 C. C. A. 258, 257 Fed.

46. A writ of certiorari was granted by this court. 250 U. S. 637, 63 L. ed. 1183, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 494. Two questions are raised. The first is whether the indictment is sufficient, inasmuch as it does not allege that the place of the homicide was acquired by the United States 'for the erection of a fort, magazine, arsenal, dockyard, or other needful building,' although it does allege that it was acquired from the state of Texas by the United States for the exclusive use of the United States for its public purposes, and was under the exclusive jurisdiction of the same. Penal Code of March 4, 1909, chap. 321, § 272, subd. 3, 36 Stat. at L. 1088, 7 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) p. 890. Constitution, art. 1, § 8. In view of our opinion upon the second point, we think it unnecessary to do more than to refer to the discussion in the court below upon this."

Vol. VII, p. 905, sec. 273. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 481.]

II. JUSTIFIABLE OR UNJUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE

4. Self-defense (p. 909)

A person attacked by another with a knife does not, as a matter of law, exceed the bounds of lawful self-defense if he stands his ground and kills his assailant, where he has sufficient reason to believe that he is in imminent danger of death or grievous bodily harm from his assailant. Braun v. U. S., (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 501, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) 618, reversing (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 46, 168 C. C. A. 258.

Admissibility of evidence.—See Sinclair v. U. S., (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 265 Fed. 991.

Instructions.—In a prosecution for manslaughter for causing the death of a person by the negligent operation of an automobile, it is not error for the court to refuse to charge that, if the jury find that the proximate cause of the death was the breaking of a part of the steering wheel of the automobile thereby rendering it useless, they should acquit, since such a charge omits the element of the defendants' carelessness. Nor is it error for the court to refuse to give an instruction substantially covered by one already given on its own motion. Sinclair v. U. S., (App. Cas. 1920) 265 Fed. 991.

Vol. VII, p. 936, sec. 288. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 485.]

Guilty knowledge.—The essence of the offense penalized by this section is guilty knowledge, and such knowledge may be brought home to the defendant by circumstantial evidence. Degnan v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 291.

II. ENDEAVOR TO MAKE REVOLT (p. 947)

Agreement to refuse to obey orders.—This section covers an endeavor or conspiracy to make a revolt by such combination and co-operation in refusal to obey as deprives the master of his authority and command or amounts to resistance or prevention of his free and lawful exercise of his authority and command. Thus, the agreement of the entire crew of a ship anchored in a port of refuge before the end of a voyage to refuse to obey the orders of the master, and their united action in carrying out the agreement while remaining on board, is endeavoring to make a revolt. Hamilton v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 15. The court said:

"This was not usurpation of the command from the master, for there was no effort to take charge of the ship. But evidently it was a successful endeavor to deprive him of authority and command on board, and to resist and prevent him in the free and lawful exercise of his command. The united action of a crew in refusing to yield obedience to the lawful command of the master deprives him of the authority and command he was in duty bound to exercise. This is as much resistance and prevention of the free and lawful exercise of his authority and command as an undertaking by a crew to deprive him of any inanimate instrumentality necessary to the command and management of the ship. A master may have possession of the ship alone, but he cannot be in command of it if the crew unite in refusing to carry out his orders."

Mistaken belief or ignorance of crew as defense.—Regarding this question the court, in Hamilton v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 15, said:

"There is authority for the position that seamen's refusal to obey the master under mistaken belief, having reasonable foundation, in the existence of a fact which, if it existed, would justify their refusal, is not criminal. United States v. Givings, 25 Fed. Cas. 1331. But the defendants were ignorant of no fact necessary to constitute the crime. The most that can be said for them is that, in doing the acts which constituted crime, they deliberately took the risk of their own opinion of the law, in the face of the warning of the master and the American consul. It is not even claimed that they were ignorant of the existence of the statute, but only that they relied on their own construction of it, that they were entitled to discharge before they had reached the port of destination merely because the term of 6 months had expired, which we have seen was without reasonable foundation in the language of the statute or in the decisions of the courts. Confidence in their construction of the statutes may be a ground for such judicial clemency as was actually exercised in this case—the sentence being two days' imprisonment and a fine of $50, without costs—or for executive clemency. It is not a ground of acquittal."

Vol. VII, p. 951, sec. 293. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 486.]

Agreement to refuse to obey commands.—This section covers the offense of revolt by such combination and co-operation in refusal to obey as deprives the master of his authority and command or amounts to resistance or prevention of his free and lawful exercise of his authority and command. Hamilton v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 15.

Vol. VII, p. 976, sec. 328. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 494.]

III. INDIAN RESERVATION (p. 978)

Jurisdiction.—A federal court has no jurisdiction of a Coeur d'Alene Indian charged with the murder of another member of the same tribe within the limits of the Coeur d'Alene Indian reservation in Idaho. Eugene Sol Louie v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 47.

Vol. VII, p. 984, sec. 332. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 495.]

Offenses against internal revenue.—Under this section which makes one a principal who at the common law would have been an accessory before the fact, it has been held that a physician who issues a prescription which is illegal under the Harrison Narcotic Law [4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) p. 177] may be prosecuted and convicted as a principal, and in such a case it is not necessary to set out the facts by which he aided or advised and procured the commission of the crime. Harris v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 785.

Keeping house of ill fame in violation of Selective Service Act.—A person charged with having set up a hotel as a house of ill fame and with being the keeper of it was held to be liable as a principal regardless of whether he was the owner or lessee of the hotel or a participant in its conduct. Hunter v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 235.

Indictment.—In a prosecution under this section for aiding and abetting in a violation of section 2 of the Harrison Act the acts of the principal become the acts of the accessory or aider, and such accessory may be charged in the indictment as having done the act himself, and punished accordingly, and exceptions in that act in favor of physicians need not be negated. Di Preta v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 73.

1919 Supp., p. 291. [Making or presenting false claims, etc.]

Allegation of ownership.—An indictment for conspiracy to violate this section by purloining property from railroad cars which alleged ownership in the government was held sufficient, the government at the time being in control of the railroads. Fowler v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 15.

PORTO RICO

Vol. VII, p. 1267, sec. 14. [First ed., vol. V, p. 767.]

Procedure and rights in bankruptcy proceedings under Law of Procedure of 1886 in Porto Rico, see Franceschi v. Mercado, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 954.

Vol. VII, p. 1273, sec. 33. [First ed., vol. V, p. 772.]

Presumption as to appointment and confirmation of judge.—Where an objection was raised that the district judge of Porto Rico was without jurisdiction as his appointment had not been confirmed, it was said: "The last assignment of error is that Judge Sepulveda was without jurisdiction to try the case. The Supreme Court found that there was no evidence that the appointment of Judge Sepulveda had not been confirmed when he heard the case, and in this we concur. It is true that he announced that he had notice of his appointment, but had not been notified that the appointment had been confirmed; but, if it had not been confirmed, this could have been easily proven. This was not done, and the presumption must stand that he had been legally appointed and confirmed." Fordham v. Marrero, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 61.

1918 Supp., p. 626, sec. 41.

Jurisdiction—Diversity of citizenship of parties.—The District Court of the United States for the District of Porto Rico has no jurisdiction of a suit by a citizen of Spain domiciled in Porto Rico against a defendant also resident in Porto Rico. Diez v. Green, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 890.

Where the defendant is a citizen of Porto Rico, to confer jurisdiction on the federal District Court, a plaintiff must allege and prove, not only that he is a foreign citizen or a citizen of the United States, but that he is not domiciled in Porto Rico. Porto Rico R., Light, etc., Co. v. Diaz Mor, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 516.

Where in an action in the District Court of the United States for Porto Rico there are no allegations or proof that the parties on either side of the controversy are citizens or subjects of a foreign state or states not domiciled in Porto Rico, or that they are citizens of a state, territory, or district of the United States not domiciled in Porto Rico, the requisite diversity of citizenship to confer jurisdiction on the federal District Court for Porto Rico is wanting. Vere v. Bianchi, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 367, applying the rule in an action where the complainant alleged that the plaintiff was a citizen of the republic of France now residing in Porto Rico and that the defendants were residents of Porto Rico.

POSTAL SERVICE

Vol. VIII, p. 20, sec. 396. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 6.]

Mail truck subject to local speed regulations.—The various federal statutes relating to post routes and the fixing of schedules by the Post Office Department for the carrying of the mails do not prevent the application to a mail truck of a state statute prescribing the maximum speed of automobiles on public highways. Hall v. Com., (Va. 1921) 105 S. E. 551.

Vol. VIII, p. 46, sec. 3841. [First ed., vol. V, p. 798.]

Mail truck subject to local speed regulations.—The various federal statutes relating to post routes and the fixing of schedules by the Post Office Department for the carrying of the mails do not prevent the application to a mail truck of a state statute prescribing the maximum speed of automobiles on public highways. Hall v. Com., (Va. 1921) 105 S. E. 551.

Vol. VIII, p. 71, sec. 1. [Clerks and carriers graded, etc.] [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 522.]

Reduction of salaries of letter carriers.—See annotation under Vol. VIII, p. 956, sec. 6, infra, p. 727.

Vol. VIII, p. 98, sec. 14. [First ed., vol. V, p. 830.]

Constitutionality.—Federal legislation conferring upon the Postmaster General power to revoke the second-class mail privilege enjoyed by a newspaper which that official finds, after a hearing fairly conducted, systematically to have contained false reports and false statements published with intent to interfere with the success of the military operations of the federal government, to promote the success of its enemies, and to obstruct its recruiting and enlisting service, in violation of the Espionage Act of June 15, 1917 [1918 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. 120 et seq.], is not unconstitutional, either as not affording the publisher a trial in a court of competent jurisdiction, or as infringing the constitutional freedom of speech and press, or as taking property without due process of law. U. S. v. Burleson, (1921) 255 U. S. 407, 41 S. Ct. 352, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 49 App. Cas. (D. C.) 26, 258 Fed. 282.

Revocation of privilege.—Admission to second-class mail privileges is obtained for a publication only by a permit issued by the Postmaster General after a hearing and upon a showing made, satisfactory to him or his authorized assistants, that it contains and will continue to contain only mailable matter, and that it will meet the various statutory and other requirements.

The power of the Postmaster General to suspend or revoke second-class mail privileges is a necessary incident to his power to grant such privileges.

If a newspaper enjoying second-class mail privileges comes to be so edited that it contains other than mailable matter, it is the plain intention of Congress that it shall no longer be carried as second-class mail. U. S. v. Burleson, (1921) 255 U. S. 407, 41 S. Ct. 352, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 49 App. Cas. (D. C.) 26, 258 Fed. 282.

Violation of Espionage Act.—Authority to revoke the second-class mail privileges of a newspaper which, contrary to the Espionage Act of June 15, 1917 [1918 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. p. 120 et seq.], systematically contained false reports and false statements, published with intent to interfere with the success of the military operations of the federal government, to promote the success of its enemies, and to obstruct its recruiting and enlistment service, was conferred upon the Postmaster General, not merely as to a single issue of such paper, but until a proper application and showing shall be made for a renewal of such privilege, by the provision of title 12 of that act that any newspaper published in violation of any of its terms shall be "nonmailable," and shall not be "conveyed in the mails or delivered from any postoffice or by any letter carrier," when read in connection with the declaration of R. S. § 396 [8 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 20], that it is the duty of the Postmaster General to superintend regularly all the business of the Post Office Department, and to execute all laws relating to the postal service, and with the federal legislation classifying the mails, which deals only with "mailable matter." U. S. v. Burleson, (1921) 255 Fed. 407, 41 S. Ct. 352, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 49 App. Cas. (D. C.) 26, 258 Fed. 282.

Hearing before revocation.—A newspaper publisher whose second-class mail privileges have been revoked for the publication of articles that offended against the Espionage Act of June 15, 1917 [1918 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. 120 et seq.], was accorded a hearing which, if fairly conducted, satisfies the requirements of due process of law, where due notice was given of the time and character of the hearing, the publisher was represented thereon by its president, and, so far as appears, all that it desired to say or offer was heard and received. U. S. v. Burleson, (1921) 255 U. S. 407, 41 S. Ct. 352, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 49 App. Cas. (D. C.) 26, 258 Fed. 282.

Review of revocation.—The conclusion of the Postmaster General that the second-class mail privileges of a newspaper should be revoked, which rests upon his finding, after a hearing fairly conducted, that such newspaper has systematically contained false reports and false statements published with the intent to interfere with the military operation of the federal government, to promote the success of its enemies, and to obstruct its recruiting and enlistment service, in violation of the Espionage Act of June 15, 1917 [1918 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. p. 120 et seq.], will not be disturbed by the courts unless they are clearly of the opinion that his conclusion is wrong. U. S. v. Burleson, (1921) 255 U. S. 407, 41 S. Ct. 352, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 49 App. Cas. (D. C.) 26, 258 Fed. 282.

III. ASCERTAINMENT AND DETERMINATION BY POSTMASTER GENERAL (p.143)

Scope of Postmaster General's authority.—It was not the design of this section and R. S. sec. 4041 [8 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 231] to vest the Postmaster General with authority to determine between contradictory views held in apparent good faith upon a subject the merits or demerits of which may fairly be said to be a matter of opinion among those who ought to know. Leach v. Carlisle, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 61.

Vol. VIII, p. 163, sec. 3962. [First ed., vol. V, p. 893.]

Mail truck subject to local speed regulations.—The various federal statutes relating to post routes and the fixing of schedules by the Post Office Department for the carrying of the mails do not prevent the application to a mail truck of a state statute prescribing the maximum speed of automobiles on public highways. Hall v. Com., (Va. 1921) 105 S. E. 551.

Vol. VIII, p. 181, sec. 8. [First ed., 1914 Supp., p. 321.]

Readjustment of compensation by Postmaster General as discretionary.—The Postmaster General has exclusive jurisdiction to readjust the compensation of star route and screen-wagon contractors under this section, and unless there has been a clear abuse of his official discretion the court has no jurisdiction to consider the claim. Thus, where a mail contract provides for increases in the mails, increased service, and necessary additional trips, and increases caused by the establishment of the parcel post system are not so great as to materially change the contract, the contractor cannot maintain an action for additional compensation. Halstead v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 317.

Mail truck subject to local speed regulations.—The various federal statutes relating to post routes and fixing of schedules by the Post Office Department for the carrying of the mails do not prevent the application to a mail truck of a state statute prescribing the maximum speed of automobiles on public highways. Hall v. Com., (Va. 1921) 105 S. E. 551.

Vol. VIII, p. 182, sec. 3965. [First ed., vol. V, p. 901.]

Mail truck subject to local speed regulations.—The various federal statutes relating to post routes and the fixing of schedules by the Post Office Department for the carrying of the mails do not prevent the application to a mail truck of a state statute prescribing the maximum speed of automobiles on public highways. *Hall v. A state statute passed to take advantage of the provisions of this act, was sustained and construed in Williamson County v. Franklin, etc., Turnpike Co., (1921) 143 Tenn. 628, 228 S. W. 714.

PRISONS AND PRISONERS

Vol. VIII, p. 277, sec. 5539. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 35.]

Compensation to prison officers.—Under this section and several California statutes it has been held that "all moneys coming into the hands of the sheriff for the support of federal prisoners is for the use of the county, and that it was and is the duty of the sheriff to account for and pay over to the county treasurer all money so received by him, and to put in his claim to the county for expenses incurred for support of federal prisoners in the same manner and at the same rates as for prisoners committed by the state of California, and that it is the function of the board of supervisors, as the constituted business agents of the county, to contract with the federal authorities as to the compensation to be demanded for caring for federal prisoners while confined in the county jail." Los Angeles County v. Cline, (Cal. 1921) 197 Pac. 67.

Vol. VIII, p. 278, sec. 5541. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 36.]

Sentence of one year or less.—This section only authorizes imprisonment in a penitentiary where the imprisonment is for a longer term than one year. Braden v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 441.

Vol. VIII, p. 295, sec. 1. [United States Penitentiary at Atlanta, etc.] [First ed., vol. VI, p. 30.]

Persons convicted of infamous crimes.—A person convicted in a United States court of an infamous offense may be sentenced for a year or more at Atlanta although there is no provision for hard labor imposed in defining the punishment for such offense. Rogers v. Desportes, (E. D. S. C. 1920) 268 Fed. 83, affirmed (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 308.

PUBLIC CONTRACTS

Vol. VIII, p. 355, sec. 3733. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 119.]

Notice of restricted cost.—The provisions of this section, R. S. sec. 3732, and the Act of June 30, 1906, ch. 3914, sec. 9 [3 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 153], prohibit the making of a contract with the United States for work in excess of a specific appropriation therefor by Congress, and where a contractor enters into an agreement for such work he must be held to have notice of the law, especially where the contract itself provides that the work shall be done "within the limits of available funds." Sutton v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 193.

Vol. VIII, p. 374. [Bonds of contractors, etc.] [First ed., vol. VI, p. 125.]

I. Construction.

4. Labor and materials included.

III. Rights and liabilities of sureties.

VI. Action on bond.

I. CONSTRUCTION

4. Labor and Materials Included (p. 379)

Effect of priorities.—This section does not affect the priority of labor and materialmen recognized by the government in a contract for public work entered into before its adoption. Belknap Hardware, etc., Co. v. Ohio River Contract Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 144, reversing (W. D. Ky. 1920) 264 Fed. 676.

Transporting stone.—There may be a recovery on the bond of a public contractor for the rent of a derrick or lighter used in transporting stone from a quarry to the place of deposit designated in the contract. U. S. v. Port Deposit Quarry Co., (D. C. Md. 1921) 272 Fed. 698.

Dredging necessary to enable barges to approach a pier so as to be loaded with stone for transportation in connection with the construction of a breakwater, is within the terms of this section. U. S. v. Taylor Co., (E. D. N. C. 1920) 268 Fed. 635.

III. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF SURETIES (p. 381)

Subrogation.—Where the bonding company actually meets its obligation in the full amount of the penal sum does not by so doing discharge the claims of materialmen in full it cannot stand in their stead as a general creditor, and prove claims for the partial payments it made; but before it can claim reimbursement for such payments it must wait until the general creditors have had their claims paid in full. American Surety Co. v. Finletter, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 152.

Deferred payments due contractor.—A bonding company may under its contract with the contractor be entitled to deferred payments due to the contractor. American Surety Co. v. Finletter, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 152.

VI. ACTION ON BOND (p. 384)

Action in equity.—A suit in equity cannot be maintained under this action. Belknap Hardware, etc., Co. v. Ohio River Contract Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 144, reversing (W. D. Ky. 1920) 264 Fed. 676.

Final settlement of the contract.—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original annotation, see U. S. v. Arnold, (D. C. Conn. 1920) 268 Fed. 130, holding that a letter from the Bureau of Yards and Docks together with other correspondence showed a "final settlement" as of the date of the letter, and that the final date of settlement was not affected by the fact that a few minor details which were trivial in their nature were considered subsequent to such date.

Staying suit.—The fact that the United States in its own right has brought suit on a bond is not ground for staying a suit brought by individuals in the name of the United States in another district. U. S. v. Brown, (M. D. Pa. 1920) 266 Fed. 555, the court said:

"Defendant requests the court to stay proceedings until final determination of the suit commenced in the district of Vermont, upon the ground that under the act of Congress the United States shall have priority in the enforcement and collection of its claim. The United States has not joined in the request, and as for the defendant surety company, who has obtained this rule, it is enough to say that the court will see to it that it shall pay no more than the face of the bond, whether to the United States, or the plaintiff claimants or both, according to its liability. Though the claims of plaintiffs as against the defendant contractor are determined in this suit, the liability of the defendant surety company upon its bond being fixed, the application or apportionment of the penalty of the bond in proportional ratio found due each claimant, including the United States, if necessary, may well be hereafter controlled by the court. . . . Whether the United States may also maintain its action in Vermont, or whether two actions may be maintained at the same time in different places on the same bond, one by the United States and another by creditors of the contractor, need not be decided here."

1919 Supp., p. 304, sec. 1.

Section as repealing Act of August 10, 1917, ch. 53.—This act did not repeal section 10 of the Act of August 10, 1917, ch. 53. [1918 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. 185.] U. S. v. McGrane, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 761.

Scope of act.—"If the language of section 1 is to be limited to such claims as arise upon an 'agreement' by an officer or agent, acting under the authority of the Secretary of War or of the President, for the acquisition or use of lands or for damages resulting from notice of such use, or for the production, etc., of equipment, material, or supplies, or services, or facilities, or other purposes connected with the prosecution of the war, then certainly claims arising outside of any agreement, just as claims arising outside of any exercise of authority by the Secretary of War or the President, in the conduct of the war, would not be repealed by this statute, which provides for the payment of such 'adjustments' as might be made respecting these particular sorts of 'agreement.' An 'implied' agreement evidently means an 'implied' contract based on an 'agreement' for the transaction. The other language of the section contradicts the idea that the words refer to an entire obligation, into which no element of the meeting of minds as to the contract has entered at any stage.

"... Section 1 authorizes payment of such claims (of the nature covered by the section) as may be adjusted by the Secretary of War. The evident purpose of this statute was to protect those parties who had entered into contracts with the government, that had been undertaken in good faith and for immediate needs, but which had not been expressly authorized by act of Congress, or which had not been contracted in exact accordance with the statute law.

"Contracts of this sort were thus validated and payment provided for, when in effect agreed upon and approved by the Secretary of War and recommended for payment. Such claims could not be paid, except under this statute. Decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury, vol. 25, part 2, p. 398. In order to come under this statute they must be filed with the Secretary of War before July 31, 1919." Benedict v. U. S., (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 271 Fed. 714.

Time for filing.—In order to come within this statute claims which could not be otherwise paid except by virtue of its terms must be filed with the Secretary of War before the date fixed by the statute. Benedict v. U. S., (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 271 Fed. 714.

Claims affected by failure to file.—The failure to file claims which could not be paid except under this statute forecloses only those claims which would not be paid under this law unless allowed by the Secretary of War. If other statutes provide for a method of collection, then the parties would not be foreclosed from all chance of recovery, but they would be foreclosed from taking these claims up with the Secretary of War and obtaining judgment from the Treasurer of the United States on his certificate. Benedict v. U. S., (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 271 Fed. 714, wherein it was said:

"General jurisdiction of the Court of Claims includes matters from many other branches of the government than the War Department. Section 10 of the Fuel and Food Act relates to supplies for the army and navy. Section 1 of the Act of March 2, 1919, is limited to settlements by the Secretary of War for matters occurring under his authority, or that of the President, in conducting the war. The general authority of the President in the conduct of the war would include the maintenance of the navy or any other public use connected with the common defense. Thus the Secretary of War may have been given authority by section 1 to adjust the requisitioning of supplies by an officer of the navy, or even by an officer of some other department, as, for instance, the Department of State, in connection with the prosecution of the war, for the purpose of the common defense. But all such claims are for property obtained under an 'agreement' which 'has not been executed in the manner prescribed by law.'

"A requisition, like a taking by eminent domain, is not a taking under agreement. Acquiescence on the part of a loyal citizen to the taking of his property by the sovereign is not the equivalent of the making of a contract, or the entering into of an agreement, in the legal sense of that term, for the obtaining of the property in question. A requisition is a one-sided exercise of authority, which depends either upon force or the acquiescence and loyalty of the owner of the property requisitioned, in order to accomplish the taking. Whether protest be entered or not, the obligation to repay is the same."

Section as repealing Act of August 10, 1917, chap. 53.—This section does not repeal the Act of August 10, 1917, chap. 53, sec. 10, [1918 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. 185], giving jurisdiction over claims for property requisitioned for war purposes to the District Courts or the Court of Claims. Benedict v. U. S., (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 27 Fed. 714.

Decision of Secretary of War as condition precedent to bringing suit.—Section 1 of this act requires that all claims filed thereunder must be finally decided by the Secretary of War before suit can be brought thereon in the Court of Claims, and that such suit must be brought in the manner prescribed by this Act. The claim should not be transmitted to the court under Judicial Code, sec. 148 [5 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 662]. U. S. Bedding Co. v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 459.

PUBLIC DEBT

Vol. VIII, p. 407, sec. 3701. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 143.]

Exemption absolute.—"The effect of this statute, we think, must be that in any scheme of state or municipal taxation such securities must be eliminated from consideration in any equation to reach the taxable property, or, at least, when they are included, compels a deduction as such for the amount of the exempt bonds." Waco v. Amicable L. Ins. Co., (Tex. 1921) 230 S. W. 698.

1918 Supp., p. 675, sec. 1.

Interim negotiable certificates.—"We hold this provision gave the Secretary of the Treasury power, as one of the terms and conditions subject to which he might issue said bonds, to first issue negotiable interim certificates therefor. They were appropriate and adapted to expedite the raising of the funds by the sale of the bonds for cash in advance, and the subsequent delivery of the bonds, when prepared. The bonds themselves were to be negotiable, and to give the subscribers of such bonds negotiable certificates therefor would, and without doubt did, greatly facilitate subscriptions for the bonds, in that the subscribers would receive, when they paid their money to the government, a negotiable obligation of the government, which would pass current and be as valuable as the bonds they subscribed and paid for, and which they could use in place of and with equal facility as the bonds, until they received such bonds." Security Nat. Bank v. People's Bank, (Mo. 1921) 230 S. W. 87, wherein it was further said:

"But it is said by learned counsel that, in order to make such certificates negotiable, the terms used therein should conform to the common law or to the statute law of the state where issued, which, in this state, required an instrument to be payable at a certain time, and in money, in order to be negotiable. Whereas, these certificates called for the delivery of other obligations of the government, to wit, Liberty Bonds, at an uncertain time, to wit, when said bonds were prepared and the certificates therefor surrendered.

"But we hold that it is not necessary to inquire of the statutes of this state or the common law of England as to making such securities negotiable. * * *

"What the statutes of this state or the English common law provided or required is, therefore, not relevant or germane to the question whether by their terms said interim certificates were negotiable. The only pertinent inquiry is, Did the government of the United States, through the language used by its Secretary of the Treasury, intend to make them negotiable—pass current from hand to hand, from bearer to bearer, without indorsement—to be 'couriers without luggage,' as has been somewhere said by this court? In order to be interim certificates at all, it was necessary that they should be exchangeable for bonds at some time certain or uncertain. There was no law of the United States prohibiting the provisions for such exchange being contained therein, or in any manner prescribing or limiting the contents of such certificates or any negotiable securities to be issued by the United States. Being authorized by the act of Congress to make such certificates negotiable, in his discretion, if the Secretary of the Treasury used language intended to convey the idea that they were to be negotiable, that is the end of the inquiry and the end of the discussion.

"We hold that the Secretary did so intend, and that such certificates were made negotiable by their terms. Such certificates expressly provide that 'Upon surrender of this Interim Certificate the bearer hereof will be entitled to receive, when prepared, definitive bonds in the amount of — dollars, bearing interest from June 15, 1917. This certificate, and all rights under and by virtue hereof, shall pass by delivery.' Also, that 'there must be no writing on this certificate until it is presented for exchange for bonds.' So that, clearly, the certificates, with the title to the bonds called for, were intended to pass by delivery without indorsement, the same as a bond or note payable to bearer. It was, indeed, expressly provided that the 'bearer' of the certificate should on its surrender be entitled to receive the Liberty Bonds mentioned therein. Nothing could be clearer than that they were intended to be, and therefore they were negotiable instruments."

PUBLIC LANDS

III. Conclusiveness of decision of land department.

IV. Supervisory authority of Secretary of Interior.

III. CONCLUSIVENESS OF DECISION OF LAND DEPARTMENT (p. 493)

In general.—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original annotation, see Muck v. Weyerhaeuser Timber Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 409.

Interpretation of survey notes.—A decision of the land department interpreting survey notes has been held conclusive in a suit to settle a disputed boundary. Muck v. Weyerhaeuser Timber Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 409.

Judicial notice will be taken of a decision of the land department. Santa Fe Pac. R. Co. v. Payne, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 653, 656.

IV. SUPERVISORY AUTHORITY OF SECRETARY OF INTERIOR (p. 494)

Conclusiveness of decision.—The findings of the Secretary of Interior in a matter properly before him, are binding on the courts unless there is an absence of evidence to support them. Stockley v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 632.

Review of finding by register.—Supervision of the action of the local register and receiver in accepting or rejecting final entries of homesteads is vested by this section in the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior, and the fact that no appeal is taken from the action of such registers and receivers does not deprive them of jurisdiction to review the same. Stockley v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 632.

Vol. VIII, p. 497, sec. 458. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 216.]

Application to Indian lands.—The provisions of this section are applicable to patents in fee for allotted Indian lands. U. S. v. Caster, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 615.

Recordation—Effect.—When a patent is recorded as required by this section the title passes to the grantee and the fact that the evidence of the transfer of title, the patent, remains in the hands of the officers of the government cannot restore the titles to the government of the United States nor defeat that of the grantee. U. S. v. Caster, (C. C. A. 8th Cir., 1921) 271 Fed. 615.

Vol. VIII, p. 555, sec. 2290. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 290.]

Sufficiency of evidence as to making of contract with third person, see Jones v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 235.

Succession of heirs to inchoate homestead right. To same effect as original annotation, see Gunberg v. Juveland, (N. D. 1920) 179 N. W. 375.

Liens created by entryman. A mortgage and seed lien agreement, which have been executed by a deceased entryman, who dies before making final proof, are not liens upon such real estate, and are not assumed by or enforceable against the heirs who receive patent for and take said land under the provisions of this section. Gunberg v. Juveland, (N. D. 1920) 179 N. W. 375.

Vol. VIII, p. 585, sec. 2302. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 321.]

Land known to be valuable for its minerals.—To the same effect as original annotation, see Stockley v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 632.

Vol. VIII, p. 586, sec. 2304. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 322.]

Mandamus.—It seems that if the Secretary of Interior acts arbitrarily in refusing to issue a patent under this section or section 2306, mandamus will lie to compel its issuance: but where he acts within the domain of his discretion his action is not subject to review. U. S. v. Lane, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 266 Fed. 1005; Hoy v. Lane, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 266 Fed. 1008.

Vol. VIII, p. 588, sec. 2306. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 324.]

"Soldier's additional right."—The right given by this section to a soldier who has entered on less than 160 acres to receive as much more land as may be necessary to make up the 160 acres is called a "soldier's additional right." U. S. v. Lane, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 266 Fed. 1005; Hoy v. Lane, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 266 Fed. 1008.

Vol. VIII, p. 591, sec. 2307. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 327.]

Right of disposal by will.—In declaring that no power exists to dispose of a soldier's homestead right by will it has been said:

"Section 2307 declares that, in case of the death of any person 'who would be entitled to a homestead' under section 2304, his widow, if unmarried, or in case of her death or marriage, then his minor orphan children, 'shall be entitled to all the benefits enumerated in this chapter.' This, of course, includes those given by section 2306 of the chapter. It does not say that the widow or the children shall be entitled to the right in the event the father had not willed it away, but their right to it is made to accrue upon his death. If it was the intention of Congress that the right could be disposed of by will, or, in the event of no will, should descend to the father's heirs, why the provision with respect to the widow and children? It seems to us that there is room for the construction that under these statutes the right is not subject to testamentary disposition, but, when not exercised or transferred by the soldier in his lifetime, passes to the widow or orphan children, as the case may be. And, if there is, we cannot say that the Secretary was guilty of an arbitrary act in holding that the right could not be willed." U. S. v. Lane, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 266 Fed. 1005; Hoy v. Lane, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 266 Fed. 1008.

Forfeiture of right acquired by agent's entry.—The privilege secured by an agent's entry is forfeited unless within six months thereafter the soldier makes entry and actually commences settlement and improvement. Shanks v. Lane, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 269 Fed. 206. The court said: "Stress is laid by the appellant on that part of section 2309 which says that the soldier may file the declaration 'as in pre-emption cases.' From this he argues that it has the same effect as in such cases. In support of his position he calls attention to the decision in Whitney v. Taylor, 158 U. S. 85, 95, 15 Sup. Ct. 796, 800 (39 L. Ed. 906), wherein it is said that the 'declaratory statement bears substantially the same relation to a purchase under the pre-emption law that the original entry in a homestead case does to the final acquisition of title.'

"This does not help him. There is little, if any, analogy between a declaratory statement under the pre-emption law and the one in the case before us. 'The pre-emptor must personally before "filing" have actually entered upon the land, must have commenced settlement and improvement.' United States v. Morehead, supra, 243 U. S. 615, 37 Sup. Ct. 461, 61 L. Ed. 926. Nothing of that nature is demanded here. May it not be said with reason that the provision relied on deals only with the manner of filing, not with its effect?

"Believing that the construction placed upon the sections by the Secretary is not unreasonable, and hence that he did not act arbitrarily, we are constrained, in the light of the aforementioned decisions, to affirm the judgment of the lower court, at the cost of the appellant."

Vol. VIII, p. 598, sec. 2. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 300.]

Thirty days after land restored to entry.—The long-continued, practical construction by the Land Department of the provision of this section, that "in all cases where any person has contested, paid the land office fees, and procured the cancellation of any pre-emption, homestead, or timber-culture entry, he shall be notified by the register of the land office of the district in which such land is situated of such cancellation, and shall be allowed thirty days from date of such notice to enter said lands," as giving a successful contestant, when, at the date of the notice, the land, by reason of an existing withdrawal, is not open to entry, thirty days after the land is restored to entry within which to exercise his preferred right of entry, will not be disturbed by the courts. McLaren v. Fleischer, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 577, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 181 Cal. 607, 185 Pac. 967. See further to the same effect, Culpepper v. Ocheltree, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 579, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 181 Cal. 788, 185 Pac. 971.

Vol. VIII, p. 627, sec. 2357. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 333.]

Lands outside scope of proviso.—"Neither by direct declaration nor by any fair implication did Congress intimate an intention to fix the sale price of all reserved lands—odd numbered sections as well as even numbered ones; on the contrary, the proviso has to do only with alternate reserved lands, and the history of the several railroad land grants made prior to 1873, and particularly those grants in aid of the construction of Western roads, the line of each of which passed through extensive military and Indian reservations, would indicate that the term 'alternate' was used advisedly, and that the legislative purpose was to restrict the price fixing provision to the alternate sections reserved within given territory which was made subject to the operation of the respective grants. In other words, the double minimum value ($2.50 per acre) was intended to apply only to those sections reserved by the government alternate to the sections granted in aid of a railroad construction." Reagan v. Boyd, (1921) 59 Mont. 453, 197 Pac. 832, holding the proviso to be inapplicable to certain lands ceded to the United States for an Indian Reservation and thereafter thrown open to settlement by an act specifically fixing the price.

Lien lands selected by a state by virtue of Act of Feb. 28, 1891, amending §§ 2275, 2276 (see 8 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 765), are not affected by this act. Wyoming v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 489, 41 S. Ct. 393, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 282 Fed. 675.

Withdrawals by President.—The power of the President to withdraw lands from entry, settlement, or other forms of appropriation, without special authority conferred by this section, is well settled. Stockley v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 632.

The action of the Secretary of the Interior is a proper method of exercising the power of the President in withdrawing public lands, and is to be taken as his act. Stockley v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 632.

Purpose and construction generally.—This act is remedial and should be construed to effectuate its purpose. U. S. v. Standard Oil Co., (S. D. Cal. 1920) 285 Fed. 751.

Diligent prosecution of work.—A claim that the defendants were at the time land was withdrawn making preparations by assembling material and employing labor for the future development of the property, has been held not to show "diligent prosecution of work" within the meaning of this act, where it did not appear that any work or preparation therefor was designed or intended for the development of the particular property in question as distinguished from the defendant's other holdings. U. S. v. Chanslor-Canfield Midway Oil Co., (S. D. Cal. 1918) 266 Fed. 142. See also U. S. v. Standard Oil Co., (S. D. Cal. 1920) 285 Fed. 751, for work held sufficient to meet requirements of statute.

Work done upon precise land.—The fact that no work was being done on the precise land in controversy at the time of its withdrawal is immaterial, where it appears that it was part of a group or unit owned by the same claimant and that work was being done on several contiguous claims which was beneficial to the whole group. U. S. v. Standard Oil Co., (S. D. Cal. 1920) 285 Fed. 751, wherein it was said: "No work was being done on the identical quarter section in controversy at the time of the withdrawal, or for some two or three months thereafter, except the moving of the derrick in October, 1909; but I do not regard that as a controlling fact in the case. The evidence to my mind shows that the work being done at the time of the withdrawal and continued thereafter was intended to and did directly benefit all the claims, and that the several contiguous claims were owned and being developed by the Oil Company in good faith as a group or unit, in a practical, business-like, and economical way, and 'it has long been the established law respecting such claims,' says the Court of Appeals in Consolidated Oil Co. v. U. S., 245 Fed. 623, 157 C. C. A. 635, that, where two or more contiguous ones are held by the same person or persons, work done in good faith upon any one of them, or outside of the boundaries of either of them, which directly tends to the development or benefit of all of the claims for mining purposes, should be held applicable to each and all of such claims.' See, also, U. S. v. Thirty-Two Oil Co., supra; U. S. v. Honolulu Cons. Oil Co., (D. C.) 249 Fed. 168.

"A clear and it seems to me an accurate statement of the law applicable to the facts in this case is to be found in the opinion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, of date February 11, 1919, in the Honolulu Case, as follows:

"'Work leading to the discovery of oil or gas may consist of labor and improvements actually performed and used in the common development of several mining claims, provided it is clearly shown that there exists a common ownership, that the work is of such a character as to be clearly adapted to and intended for a unit development, that the inclusion of each particular claim composing such unit is clearly apparent from the physical facts on the ground, and that the nature of the common development is consistent and its extent commensurate with the character and area of the group of claims proposed to be developed as a unit. If labor and expenditures have been applied in the manner accepted generally and in accordance with good business practice, all conditions considered, one act following another in logical and orderly sequence, as dictated by experience and reasonable judgment, with the object of reaching and discovering the oil or gas measures lying within the claim or group of claims, then due diligence has been shown, and the requirements of the act met in this respect, provided that at the date of withdrawal and continuously thereafter to discovery on each particular claim either (a) such common development and improvement leading to discovery as may be properly and directly credited in part to each particular claim, pursuant to the principles above stated, or (b) development and improvement work leading to discovery on the particular claim itself, are continued diligently and without interruption, on a scale commensurate with the extent of the unit development and in accordance with good economic practice, the required continuity of such common or particular development and improvement to be determined from the work and improvements actually done and made on the ground.'

"Applying these principles to the case in hand, I am of the opinion that the defendants have brought themselves within the saving clause of the Pickett Act."

Effect of withdrawal on subsequent claims.—An order withdrawing public lands, subject to existing valid claims, "from settlement and entry or other form of appropriation" prevents a subsequent mineral location from conferring any right on any one claiming under it. Mason v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 135; Norvell v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 142.

Liability of trespassers after withdrawal.—It has been held that one who takes oil from public land with knowledge that it has been withdrawn "from settlement and entry or other form of appropriation" is liable for the oil so taken and is entitled to no deduction for the expense incurred in getting the oil. Mason v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 135; Norvell v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 142.

I. Surveys in general.

II. Field books and plats.

I. SURVEYS IN GENERAL (p. 664)

Meander lines—As boundary lines.—The cases support the rule "that in general meanders are not to be treated as boundaries and when the United States conveys a tract of land by patent referring to an official plat which shows the same bordering on a navigable river the purchaser takes title up to the water line. But they no less certainly establish the principle that facts and circumstances may be examined and if they affirmatively disclose an intention to limit the grant to actual traverse lines these must be treated as definite boundaries. It does not necessarily follow from the presence of meanders that a fractional section borders a body of water and that a patent thereto confers riparian rights." Producers' Oil Co. v. Hanzan, (1915) 239 U. S. 325, 35 S. Ct. 755, 59 U. S. (L. ed.) 1330; Lane v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 290; Greene v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 145, wherein it was said: "That the government has the right to make new surveys and correct errors in former one does not in any way limit the above general rule or create a different rule where such new survey is made."

"The right of the government to make such new surveys is clear; but, where the United States has previously parted with the title, a new survey does not conclude a prior purchaser from asserting whatever title he has acquired by his older patent as against one claiming under the new survey."

But meander lines and not water courses are held to be boundaries where there is no body of water within a reasonable distance therefrom or where there is no body of water at all or where there is gross fraud. Lane v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 290.

Effect of incorrect survey.—Although the meander lines should show the sinuosities of the banks of the water course a survey is not invalidated by the failure to include within the meander lines small irregular areas of lands. Lane v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 290.

II. FIELD BOOKS AND PLATS (p. 668)

Plat as part of patent.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Greene v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 145.

Vol. VIII, p. 669, sec. 2396. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 367.]

Provision exclusive.—There is no other provision of law for the running of meander lines along a water course. Lane v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 290.

Ascertaining unmarked boundaries.—"The law requires that boundary lines which have not been actually run and marked shall be ascertained by running straight lines from the established corners to the opposite corresponding corners." Hickey v. Daniel, (1921) 99 Ore. 525, 195 Pac. 812.

Effect of mistake or fraud.—The rule that where a patent granting public land refers to a plat for identification of the land granted, and the plat so referred to shows that such land is bounded by a lake or other body of water, the surveyed line along what the plat indicates is the border of such water, is treated as a meander line, with the result that the water, and not such meander line, is the boundary of the land granted, is not controlling in case of mistake or fraud. Jeems Bayou Hunting, etc., Club v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 18, wherein it was said: "It is well settled that where public land was improperly omitted from a survey in consequence of the surveyor, influenced by such a mistake or fraud, treating as under water what at the time of his survey actually was high land within the limits of the area which was the subject of his survey, the Land Department, upon discovering the error, has power to deal with the land so improperly omitted, to cause it to be surveyed, and lawfully to dispose of it. Lee Wilson & Co. v. United States, 245 U. S. 24, 38 Sup. Ct. 21, 62 L. Ed. 128. The existence and exercise of such power are not inconsistent with the rights of one who acquired a subdivision of land included in such survey under a patent containing a reference to the surveyor's plat, which falsely indicated that the land patented, along the whole or part of the line surveyed around it, bordered on a body of water, when in fact that line was remote from any body of water."

Equalizing area of lots.—The north half of section 4, township 16 north, range 15, Wagoner county, was subdivided by the official government geological survey in lots 1, 2, 3, and 4, but the lines between said lots were not established, and the owners of lot 2 petitioned the county surveyor of Wagoner county to establish the dividing line between lots 1 and 2, and the county surveyor in making his survey was unable to find or locate the northeast or northwest corner of said section, and reported them as lost or obliterated corners, and proceeded to establish said corners, and in establishing the same the width of the section, as determined by him, was 5,326.4 feet, and, in establishing the lines between the different lots, established the lines making lot 1, 1,326.5 feet wide, lot 2, 1,326.8 feet wide, lot 3, 1,326.8 feet wide, and lot 4, 1,346.3 feet wide, doing so by using certain meandering corners established on said section along the Arkansas river. This method was held to be erroneous since by virtue of section 1711, Rev. Laws 1910, and R. S. §§ 2396, 2397, and the rules and regulations of the General Land Office in regard to re-establishing of subdivision lines, the county surveyor in locating the dividing lines between said lots should have divided the total width of the section by four and made each lot the same width, or a distance of 1,331.6 feet wide, and the dividing line between lots 1 and 2 should be established 1,331.6 feet west from the east line of said section. Overton v. Leonard, (1920) 79 Okla. 219, 192 Pac. 221.

Vol. VIII, p. 678. [Resurveys or retracements, etc.] [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 322.]

Effect of first proviso.—"A map from the government records was given in evidence, showing that the land in controversy is part of section 5 of said township and range. Appellants contend that this map was not competent evidence, because, as they claim, it was a resurvey made under the act of March 3, 1909 (35 U. S. Stats. 845), which act provides that no resurvey made thereunder 'shall be so executed as to impair the bona fide rights or claims of any claimant, entryman, or owner of lands' affected thereby. The map itself shows that the survey which it delineates was made in February and March in the year 1912. A letter of instructions from the commissioner of the land office to the United States surveyor general in California regarding this alleged resurvey of which letter we may take judicial notice (S. P. Co. v. Lipman, 148 Cal. 491, 83 Pac. 445; S. P. R. R. Co. v. Wood, 124 Cal. 485, 57 Pac. 388), under date of August 14, 1912, shows that the map was made for the purpose of ascertaining and designating the tracts of land in certain townships, including the one in controversy, which under the grant aforesaid had been selected and listed for patent to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company under said grant. Furthermore, the only interest which the defendants claim in defense was under a desert land entry made by Alvin R. Meserve in 1907, and the evidence shows that on appeal by Meserve to the secretary of the interior this entry was canceled on February 28, 1912, prior to the completion of said resurvey and prior to the issuance of the patent to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. It would seem, therefore, that whatever may be the state of the title of the plaintiff, the defendants had no title whatever except such as comes from the bare possession at the time said resurvey was made, and hence the same could not impair their rights." Southern Pac. Land Co. v. Meserve, (Cal. 1921) 198 Pac. 1055.

Vol. VIII, p. 692, sec. 1. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 392.]

"The relation of the federal government to the state government in the reclamation of desert lands arises out of the fact that the federal government owns the lands, and Congress is invested by the Constitution with the power of disposing of the same, while the state has been given jurisdiction to provide for the appropriation and beneficial use of the waters of the state which necessarily includes a use for the reclamation of such lands." Twin Falls Salmon River Land, etc., Co. v. Caldwell, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 356.

Vol. VIII, p. 698, sec. 4. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 397.]

"The relation of the federal government to the state government in the reclamation of desert lands arises out of the fact that the federal government owns the land, and Congress is invested by the Constitution with the power of disposing of the same, while the state has been given jurisdiction to provide for the appropriation and beneficial use of the waters of the state which necessarily includes a use for the reclamation of such lands." Twin Falls Salmon River Land, etc., Co. v. Caldwell, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 356.

Maintenance charges.—The irrigation maintenance charges embodied in the contract whereby a state sells to a settler lands granted under this act, are a part of the purchase price and cannot be increased by the public service commission so as to affect existing contracts. Central Oregon Irr. Co. v. Public Service Commission, (Ore. 1921) 196 Pac. 832.

Discrimination in favor of corporation operating under act.—A statute permitting the amendment of by-laws by a smaller proportion of the stockholders to corporations organized for the operation of irrigation systems under the Carey Act than is permitted in the case of corporations engaged in similar enterprises but which have procured their canal systems from sources other than Carey Act Construction Companies, is invalid. Crom v. Frahm, (1920) 33 Idaho 314, 193 Pac. 1013.

Lien reduced in proportion to water supplied.—Where an irrigation company fails to furnish the amount of water contracted for it cannot foreclose its lien for the full amount contracted, but the lien will be reduced to conform to the actual amount of water furnished, and accepted and used by the settler. Twin Falls Oakley Land, etc., Co. v. Martens, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 428.

Vol. VIII, p. 699. [Plan of irrigation to be filed, etc.] [First ed., vol. VI, p. 397.]

Irrigation company empowered to contract with respect to water.—A state in accepting the provisions of this act is empowered to make all necessary contracts to cause the lands to be reclaimed, and to "induce their settlement and cultivation in accordance with and subject to the provisions of the act. Accordingly, it has been held that a construction company building an irrigation project under the act could be and was empowered by the state act together with the federal act to make and execute a contract assuming responsibility to the settler to furnish a specific quantity of water and for deferred payments. Twin Falls Oakley Land, etc., Co. v. Martens, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 428.

Error in estimate of quantity of water.—Effect on contracts.—The fact that a state engineer in passing on an irrigation project initiated by a proposer erred in his judgment as to the amount of water available, will not relieve a construction company, contracting with settlers to furnish a specified amount of water, from its responsibilities under the contracts. Twin Falls Oakley Land, etc., Co. v. Martens, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 428.

Vol. VIII, p. 699. [Patents for re-claimed lands, etc.] [First ed., vol. VI, p. 397.]

State statutes.—For construction of state statute accepting the benefits of this statute, see Twin Falls Oakley Land, etc., Co. v. Martens, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 428.

Conclusiveness of finding of Land Department.—While in a proceeding to ascertain whether patents should issue, the finding of the Land Department on the question whether the water supply is ample is conclusive, it is not conclusive on the question whether an irrigation company has provided water at the rate required by its contract with a settler. And in a suit by the irrigation company to purchase a lien for water rights wherein it appeared that because of contracts to furnish water to other settlers on unpatented land the company was unable to furnish the required amount to the settlers on the patented land, equity will not be bound by the decision of the Land Department, and may make a decree based on the total acreage for which obligations to furnish water exist, both patented and unpatented. Twin Falls Oakley Land, etc., Co. v. Martens, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 428.

Vol. VIII, p. 700, sec. 1. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 398.]

Determination of question of reclamation.—The question of whether or not a particular tract of land has been reclaimed, is one fact which must be determined by the General Land Office rather than by the courts. Twin Falls Salmon River Land, etc., Co. v. Davis, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 382.

Right and extent of lien.—The lien of a construction company which contracted with the state to build irrigation works can only extend to the acreage for which it furnishes an adequate quantity of water. Commonwealth Trust Co. v. Smith, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 1; Twin Falls, etc., Co. v. Davis, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 382.

Contract holders necessary parties.—In Commonwealth Trust Co. v. Smith, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 1, a suit to foreclose a lien was brought by a construction company which had contracted with the state to build irrigation works and to sell shares or water rights as provided to the person or persons filing upon the lands, and also to the owners of other lands not described which were susceptible of irrigation from the system, the shares or water rights to be sold on terms provided, and the management and control of the canal system to be transferred to the purchasers of such shares or water rights. It was held that all contract holders were necessary parties to the suit. The court said:

"It is obvious that many persons—that is, contract holders—are and will necessarily be affected by the inadequacy of the water supply considered in relation to the amount that it was at first supposed could be made available. They are affected in several ways. Some will and can get no water at all, as their holdings are entirely outside of the reduced delimitations. Others, and a major portion of them, perhaps all, will be required to take and accept fewer acre feet per acre of water than they have contracted for, and some are bound to be affected in ways not now apparent by the readjustment of the water supply to the delimited area. Then there is the contention of the plaintiff that all the water users who will finally be entitled to water must be required to pay, not $40 per share for each share or interest in the system, but $60 and a greater sum according as the acreage subject to irrigation from the system is reduced by delimitations made, or that will of necessity be required to be made, to meet the inadequacy of the supply of water available for irrigation purposes.

It is the very theory and purpose of the bill of complaint, as becomes apparent from a reading of it, to enforce the alleged lien for the larger amount, so as to require the diminished area to bear the burden of the entire cost of construction. It is obvious, therefore, that in a comprehensive, equitable, and fair readjustment of the matters pertaining to the unfortunate situation, all the contract holders will be affected in a greater or less degree, and that the rights of each shareholder are more or less dependent upon the rights of every other shareholder. This manifestly and necessarily will affect in greater or less degree the extent and dignity of the rights and holdings of a very great number, if not all, of the contract holders of shares under the project. So it would appear that a final decree cannot be made or entered in the case at bar without affecting materially perhaps all the contract holders in the project, or at least without leaving the controversy in such condition that its final determination may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience. The suit, considered in respect to the correlative rights involved, is not one for foreclosure merely, but by nature resembles more nearly one for specific performance, the termination of which will perforce of its very consequences affect in some measure all the contract holders by reason of the inability of the construction company fully to perform on its part."

Residence on land as essential.—The Desert Land Acts do not require residence on the land. The principal requirements are that the claimant shall file a plat showing the mode of contemplated irrigation and shall expend a prescribed amount per acre in making permanent provision for such irrigation, and in addition thereto shall cultivate one-eighth of the land. Cox v. Hart, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 51.

Acts giving preference right.—A person's acts in posting notice, running furrows around the entire tract, cultivating tracts both upon the east half and the west half of her claim, constructing ditches, instituting irrigation, setting stakes, and in laying out lines for future irrigation, have been held sufficient to prove possessio pedis upon the whole tract whereupon to maintain ejectment, and it is unnecessary that she should have placed improvements upon every acre of the tract. Cox v. Hart, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 51.

III. LANDS SUBJECT TO GRANT (p. 712)

Attempt by state to grant lands not within act gives no right to the grantee of the state.

Maginnis v. Hurlbutt, (Cal. App. 1920) 193 Pac. 606, wherein the question whether lands are "swamp and overflowed" is apparently considered to be a question of fact.

Land abutting on river.—If a plat shows a river which actually exists and the federal government conveys to a state under this Act land purporting to abut on the meander lines of the river, the state's title must be held to include the land abutting on the river even though the river does not extend to the meander lines shown on the plat. Tuesburg Land Co. v. State, (Ind. App. 1921) 131 N. E. 530.

Vol. VIII, p. 716, sec. 2480. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 404.]

Decision by Secretary of Interior as to character of land.—To same effect as original annotation, see De Proft v. Heydecker, (1921) 297 Ill. 541, 131 N. E. 114.

Burden of proving that land is swamp.—To same effect as original annotation, see De Proft v. Heydecker, (1921) 397 Ill. 541, 131 N. E. 114.

Vol. VIII, p. 759, sec. 1. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 449.]

Severed portions of patented land.—It is evident from the act itself that the 5-year period for the bringing of actions to cancel patents was not intended to protect grantees of small portions of the lands patented, where the patent was attacked in time and decreed invalid. If such grantees are bona fide purchasers, they were protected by elaborate provisions of the act by which they could secure title from the government. Huntington v. Donovan, (Cal. 1920) 192 Pac. 543.

Vol. VIII, p. 761, sec. 2. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 450.]

Bona fide purchasers.—The burden is on a person claiming to be a bona fide purchaser to show his good faith. Huntington v. Donovan, (Cal. 1920) 192 Pac. 543, holding the purchaser in question was not protected for two reasons: "First, at the time of his purchase the United States land office records showed a valid desert land entry thereon; second, at that time the patent under which he claims had been declared null and void, and the decree was of record in the office of the clerk of the United States district court of Los Angeles."

When title vests.—A state, having accepted the proposal of Congress that, if any designated sections of public land passing under the school-land grant to the state, should be included within a public reservation, it might waive its right to them, and select instead other vacant, unappropriated, non-mineral public land of equal acreage, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and having complied with the terms of proposal, became invested with the equitable title to the selected land, and the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office could not disapprove and reject such selection on the ground that the selected land was, two years later, included in a temporary executive withdrawal as possible oil land, under the Act of June 25, 1910, (see 8 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 657) and still later was discovered to be mineral land, that is, to be valuable for oil. The validity of the selection must be determined according to the conditions as of the time when the waiver and selection were made. Wyoming v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 489, 41 S. Ct. 393, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 675.

Vested right in lieu lands.—A state having accepted the proposal by Congress that, if any designated sections of public land passing under the school-land grant to the state should be included within a public reservation, the state might waive its right to them and select instead other land of equal acreage, under the direction and subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and having complied with the terms of such proposal, acquired a vested right in the selected lieu land which the officers of the Land Department could not lawfully cancel or disregard merely because the base tract—the one to which the right was waived—had, subsequent to such selection, been eliminated from the reservation by a change in its boundaries. Payne v. New Mexico, (1921) 255 U. S. 347, 41 S. Ct. 333, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 49 App. Cas. (D. C.) 80, 258 Fed. 980.

Vol. VIII, p. 779, sec. 1. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 374.]

Filing application as a withdrawal from selection as lieu lands.—The mere filing by the state of Idaho, under this Act of an application for a survey, did not so far withdraw the lands from the public domain as to make ineffective a selection by a railway company under the Act of March 2, 1890, [8 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 985] in lieu of lands relinquished to the United States,—especially where, if valid for any purpose, the application merely gave an option to select which was never exerted. Edward Rutledge Timber Co. v. Farrell, (1921) 255 U. S. 268, 41 S. Ct. 328, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 161, 169 C. C. A. 229 which reversed (D. C. Idaho 1918) 271 Fed. 766.

Mandamus to review decision of Secretary of Interior as to selections by individuals.—The decision of the Secretary of the Interior that, under this Act, directing the reservation of certain public lands from adverse appropriation by settlement or otherwise during a specified period within which a state had the exclusive right to select the lands, selections filed by individuals during that period should not be rejected, but should be held suspended until final adjudication of the rights of the state, is not so clearly erroneous as to be reviewable by writ of mandamus. U. S. v. Payne, (1920) 254 U. S. 343, 41 S. Ct. 131, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 48 App. Cas. (D. C.) 279.

Highways to which section applies.—"Section 2477 of the Revised Statutes of the United States goes no further than to grant a right of way for the 'construction' of a highway across public lands; it does not extend to the entire tract of land and cannot constitute a 'dedication by the owner of the land,' as contemplated by that portion of section 1340, Revised Codes, relied on by counsel. * * * It is inconceivable that it was the intention of Congress and of the Legislature to say that two or more persons crossing at random on each of a dozen trails across an open quarter section of land could constitute an acceptance of the government grant as to each of such trails, and the entire quarter section thus become but a series of irregular and divergent rights of way. The grant is but an offer of the right of way for the construction of a public highway on some particular strip of public land, and can only become fixed when a highway is definitely established and constructed in some one of the ways authorized by the laws of the state in which the land is situated." State v. Nolan, (1920) 58 Mont. 167, 191 Pac. 150.

Highways established on section lines.—Under U. S. Rev. St. § 2477, granting the right of way for highways over public lands not reserved for public use, and the act of the Legislative Assembly of Dakota Territory (chapter 33, Laws 1871), declaring all section lines in the territory of Dakota to be public highways as far as practicable, public highways were located and established upon all section lines within the territory where it was practicable to construct highways. Huffman v. West Bay Tp., (N. D. 1921) 182 N. W. 459.

Acceptance by user.—"The government, by the enactment of section 2477 of the Revised Statutes, offered to the public the right of way for such highways across the public lands as may be found to be necessary; but this offer can only be accepted by the 'construction' of a public highway in some one of the ways in which they can be legally established, and becomes effective as a right of way only when the road is thus finally constructed. If, therefore, the offer is accepted by user under the laws of this state, that user must be shown to have continued over the exact route claimed, for the statutory period." State v. Nolan, (1920) 58 Mont. 167, 191 Pac. 150.

Vol. VIII, p. 798, sec. 4. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 506.]

Appropriation subject to prior rights.—The rights of a railroad company under the Act do not attach until it has complied with the provisions of this section and the departmental regulations made to carry it into effect, and if at the time of filing the plat required by such a regulation a homestead entry has been made, and the railroad location is approved "subject to all valid existing rights", the homestead entry prevails. Great Northern R. Co. v. Steinke, (N. D. 1921) 183 N. W. 1013.

Vol. VIII, p. 805, sec. 19. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 509.]

A suit to set aside the approval of the Secretary or the Interior on the ground of fraud and mistake may be maintained. And even if the approval of the Secretary was given with full knowledge of all the facts such a suit may be maintained as in that event he exceeded his authority and the validity of his approval may be thus challenged. U. S. v. Kern River Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 412.

Vol. VIII, p. 810, sec. 2. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 512.]

"Development of power."—A right of way for a canal for the development of power can only be obtained under this provision when such development is subsidiary to the main purpose of irrigation. U. S. v. Kern River Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 412.

Vol. VIII, p. 816, sec. 1. [Inclosure, etc.] [First ed., vol. VI, p. 533.]

Drilling of oil wells.—Where the evidence adduced is consistent with the conclusions that the drilling of wells on the land in question and the taking oil therefrom were unaccompanied by any intention on the part of the defendants, or either of them, to violate any law or to do any wrongful act, and that the defendants acted under a mistake of fact as to the location of the boundary of the land described in the lease, and without knowledge of the facts which require the conclusion that title to the land in question has not passed out of the United States, it has been declared that the measure of liability for the oil taken from the land in question is the value of that oil, less the cost of producing it. Jeems Bayou Hunting, etc., Club v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 18.

Vol. VIII, p. 822, sec. 3. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 536.]

Constitutionality.—Regarding the constitutionality of this section, it has been said: "The constitutionality of that portion of section 3 of the act under which the indictment was found is questioned upon the ground that it not only covers cases which it is within the power of Congress to act upon, but also cases in which Congress has not the power to act upon. But the question presented by the record pertains to the power of Congress to pass the statute which prohibits the doing of the things charged against plaintiff in error. To that there can be but one answer. That Congress can exercise control over the public lands is thoroughly well established. Section 3, art. 4, Constitution. And surely Congress may exercise power necessary for the protection of the public lands, including as an incident the prosecution and punishment of persons who obstruct passage or transit over the public lands." McKelvey v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 410.

Obstruction by use of firearms.—"If one not himself in good faith claiming a right under the land laws, or not in lawful authority, by the use of firearms intimidates a person and orders him not to cross over the unoccupied public lands, he obstructs free passage over such lands, and so violates the provisions of section 3 of the law, and is liable to any punishment, if any has been provided by the penalty provision, which is section 4." McKelvey v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 410.

Sufficiency of indictment.—It is not necessary to the sufficiency of an indictment under this section that it should negative the proviso therein. McKelvey v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 410.

Evidence.—On a prosecution for obstructing passage over public lands in violation of this section it was held that testimony of the register of the United States Land Office concerning certain official plats of townships in which the public lands in question were situated, was competent as tending to prove whether the particular lands described in the indictment were public lands of the United States or had been entered and were private, and that the fact that a part of two townships shown upon the plats was owned privately did not affect the competency of the testimony with respect to the lands described in the indictment and related to the case on trial. McKelvey v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 410.

Vol. VIII, p. 824, sec. 4. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 547.]

"Any person."—This section "should not be construed too narrowly or in a way to nullify the words which make the section applicable to any person who violates the provisions of the act or who aids and abets in any violation thereof. In providing that any person who violates any provision of the act, whether as owner, part owner or agent, is to be deemed guilty, the legislative body did not intend to restrain the applicability of the generality of the words 'any person' to such only as are specifically enumerated, as would have been the case if the clause contained the videlicet which is used to limit or qualify the generality of the preceding term. Voegthy v. School Directors, 1 Pa. 330. As the evident intent of the whole act was to protect the public lands, in order that persons might lawfully occupy or pass over them, it is not to be supposed that one who has no pretended claim of right or ownership or agency can by threats and intimidation prevent one from driving stock across the public lands, and yet escape liability upon the ground that he is excluded as not within the enumerated classes, although he comes within the general category of any persons violating the act." McKelvey v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 410.

Vol. VIII, p. 867, sec. 7. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 525.]

Receipt "in final entry."—The mere receipt of the money by the receiver until the papers are accepted as a final entry by the register and receiver and the register's certificate issued, is not a receipt "on final entry" within the meaning of this section. Stockley v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 632.

Bona fide purchasers.—The burden is on a person claiming to be a bona fide purchaser to show his good faith. Huntington v. Donovan, (Cal. 1920) 192 Pac. 543, holding the purchaser in question was not protected for two reasons: "First, at the time of his purchase the United States land office records showed a valid desert land entry thereon; second, at that time the patent under which he claims had been declared null and void, and the decree was of record in the office of the clerk of the United States district court of Los Angeles."

Mandamus to compel issuance of patent.—Effect of pendency of suit to cancel.—The pendency, when mandamus is sought, of a suit in equity brought by the United States to cancel for fraud the receiver's receipt issued on a final homestead entry, does not afford a sufficient justification to the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office which will preclude the enforcement of their plain ministerial duty under this section to pass the entry to patent. Payne v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 438, 41 S. Ct. 368, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 48 App. Cas. (D. C.) 547.

Fraud in procurement of entry.—Fraud in the procurement of the allowance of a final homestead entry and of the issuance of the receiver's receipt does not relieve the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office of their plain duty under this section, enforceable by mandamus, to pass the entry to patent. Payne v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 438, 41 S. Ct. 368, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 48 App. Cas. (D. C.) 547.

Vol. VIII, p. 869, sec. 8. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 526.]

Severed portions of patented land.—It is evident from the act itself that this 5-year period for the bringing of actions to cancel patents was not intended to protect grantees of small portions of the lands patented, where the patent was attacked in time and decreed invalid. If such grantees were bona fide purchasers, they were protected by elaborate provisions of the act by which they could secure title from the government. Huntington v. Donovan, (Cal. 1920) 192 Pac. 543.

Effect of laches in discovering fraud.—Laches in discovering the fraud will prevent the application of the rule that, until the discovery of the fraud, the six years' limitation prescribed by this section does not begin to run. But the allegations in a bill brought by the United States, long after the event, to cancel patents for coal lands and conveyances by the entrymen because of fraud in the entry and the purchase of the same by persons acting ostensibly for themselves, but really as the representatives of a corporation, and for its sole account and benefit, should not be held, on motion to dismiss, to show such laches on the part of the government in discovering the fraud as to prevent the application of such rule, even conceding that the conveyances from the entrymen to the corporation, as alleged, following almost immediately the initiation of the right to purchase, and preceding the patents, the uniformity of the method employed, and the surrounding circumstances, and the facts alleged as to the possession of the land by the corporation at the time of the purchase by the entrymen, and subsequent to their conveyances, the propinquity to the field of operations of the corporation, and its exploitation by the corporation for the purpose of taking coal therefrom, in and of themselves, would, if known, have constituted badges or indications of fraud of such a character as to give notice to the United States, or at least to put it on inquiry, where the averments of concealment and other allegations in the bill are susceptible of the construction that the conveyances—though not alleged not to have been seasonably recorded—were secret, and that the possession of the corporation was clandestine, and that its operations as to the property were of the same character, because not conducted in its own name, but by persons interposed with the very object of concealment. U. S. v. Diamond Coal, etc., Co., (1921) 255 U. S. 323, 41 S. Ct. 335, 65 U. S.

(L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1918) 254 Fed. 266, 165 C. C. A. 554.

Action to set aside approval to right of way for canal purposes.—An action to set aside the approval of the Secretary of the Interior to a right of way for canal purposes on the ground of fraud and mistake is not subject to the limitation in this section. The term "patent," when applied to a grant of public lands, has a well-defined meaning. "It is a well-established rule that statutes of limitations do not run against the sovereign, in the absence of some express statutory provision to the contrary, and if the statute is made applicable to a class of suits only it will not be extended to other cases by implication. It was well known to Congress that grants of public lands are not always made by patent. Indeed, the grant of the right of way in question made by the same act is of that character. And had Congress intended that the bar of the statute should apply, not only to patents, but to all legislative grants, it would have so provided in express terms. Again, if this be treated merely as a suit to restrain the unauthorized use or occupation of the forest reserve, the statute can have no application." U. S. v. Kern River Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 412.

A bill by United States for reformation of a patent was held to state sufficient grounds in U. S. v. Hudson, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 379.

1918 Supp., p. 712. [False representations, etc.]

Nature of false representations.—The statute does not make it criminal for one to misrepresent the quality of the water and the soil, and an instruction which authorizes the jury to consider a representation of such a character in weighing the evidence of the seller and the defendant and further specially instructs them that there can be no conviction for such misrepresentations, is proper. Anderson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 677.

Evidence.—On a prosecution for violation of this section the government may introduce witnesses to describe the topography and general position of the lands pointed out to the settler. Such evidence directly relates to the question whether the land pointed out was or was not the land which the settler entered after the defendant had been with him. Anderson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 677.

PUBLIC OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

Vol. VIII, p. 953. [Suits against public officers, etc.] [First ed., vol. VI, p. 614.]

Filing of supplemental bill.—Where a motion to file a supplemental bill was made but the judge suggested that the matter be deferred until a motion to dismiss the predecessor's supplemental bill should be disposed of and the motion and supplemental bill were in the clerk's hands with his notation thereon of the date when they came into his possession and they remained in his custody thereafter and the defendant's counsel had notice of the motion, were acquainted with the contents of the bill and did not object nor intend to object to the mere filing, it was held that what was done was equivalent of a formal filing and a taking of the motion under former advisement. Rankin v. Miller, (D. C. Del. 1918) 266 Fed. 236.

Vol. VIII, p. 955. [Government employees, etc.] [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 79.]

A receiver of a national banking association, appointed by the Comptroller of the Currency, is required to report the condition of the banking association in his charge, as such receiver, to the Comptroller of the Currency; and comes within the provision in this section as to making false reports. Weitzel v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 101.

Vol. VIII, p. 956, sec. 6. [First ed., 1914 Supp., p. 317.]

Reduction of salaries of letter carriers.—Under the Act of March 2, 1907, 34 Stat., 1206 [8 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.), 71], providing that the Post Office Department may reduce clerks and carriers from higher to lower grades for inefficiency, and this section, the Postmaster General has no authority to arbitrarily change the rating of carriers collecting the mails so as to bring them within the charge of inefficiency and to reduce the pay granted to them by Congress without any tests of their efficiency. Spanhake v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 70.

Conclusiveness of action of departmental officer in removing letter carrier from office.—Under R. S. sec. 161 [3 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 250] authority may be properly delegated to the First Assistant Postmaster General by section 17 of the Postal Laws and Regulations issued by the Postmaster General to dismiss letter carriers from the government service, and when the First Assistant Postmaster General complies with all the requirements of this section, his dismissal of a letter carrier and the approval of his action by the Postmaster General is final, and the Court of Claims has no jurisdiction to review his action. Kellom v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 174.

Effect of illegal removal—laches.—The provisions of this section give to the appointing officer directions which must be followed when the removal of a person in the classified civil service is sought. But if the appointing officer does not observe such directions in removing a person from office, his action does not thereby create an obligation upon the government to pay a salary to the person so removed for an indefinite time, especially where the latter does not appeal from the illegal order within a reasonable time after his removal. Thus, where an employee of the customs service is dismissed by proper authority, whether legally or illegally, and does not appeal promptly to the Secretary of the Treasury for reinstatement, but submits to the order of removal without objection for an unreasonable length of time, he will be held guilty of laches in asserting his rights and to have thereby abandoned all title and claim to the emoluments of the office. Nicholas v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 188. See also Arant v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 327.

1918 Supp., p. 721, sec. 6.

Railroad employees are not disqualified for jury service since they are not regarded as employees of the United States under this act. Lee v. Ong v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 315.

PUBLIC PARKS

Vol. VIII, p. 985, sec. 3.

Withdrawal of lands by state from selection.—The mere filing by the state of Idaho, under the Act of August 18, 1894 [8 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 779], of an application for a survey, did not so far withdraw the lands from the public domain as to make ineffective a selection by a railway company under this act, in lieu of lands relinquished to the United States,—especially where, if valid for any purpose, the application merely gave an option to select which was never exerted. Edward Rutledge Timber Co. v. Farrell, (1921) 255 U. S. 268, 41 S. Ct. 328, 65 U. S.

(L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 161, 169 C. C. A. 229.

Sufficiency of designation of lieu land.—The designation by section number, township, and range, of a section of unsurveyed public land selected by a railway company under this act, in lieu of land to be relinquished to the United States, describes the land with reasonable certainty, although it is 7½ miles from any known survey, if it may readily be located from such survey. Edward Rutledge Timber Co. v. Farrell, (1921) 255 U. S. 268, 41 S. Ct. 328, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 161, 169 C. C. A. 229.

RAILROADS

Vol. VIII, p. 1151, sec. 1. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 745.]

Applicability to effects of army officer.—The personal effects of an army officer are not the property of the United States, and therefore, when transported for the government over land-grant railroads, are not entitled to land-grant deductions, but are subject to commercial or regular tariff rates. Oregon-Washington R., etc., Co. v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 339, 41 S. Ct. 339, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 54 Ct. Cl. 131. But reduced rates may be granted by a carrier for the transportation of the personal effects of Army officers changing stations under orders, in view of the provision of the Interstate Commerce Act of February 4, 1887, § 22 [4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 539], permitting reduced rates to the United States, and of a conference ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission, making such section applicable to property transported for the United States. Western Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 349, 41 S. Ct. 349, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 54 Ct. Cl. 215.

Acquiescence in rates.—The right of a land-grant railroad to recover from the United States the difference between its commercial or general tariff rates and the land-grant rates charged and accepted by it for the transportation for the government of the personal effects of army officers is lost by the carrier's long acquiescence in the government's explicit assertion that the land-grant rates were the proper ones for such service. Oregon-Washington R., etc., Co. v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 339, 41 S. Ct. 329, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 54 Ct. Cl. 131. See to the same effect Western Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 349, 41 S. Ct. 332, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 54 Ct. Cl. 215.

State Laws (p. 1157)

Workmen's Compensation Act.—A recovery in an action based on the Safety Appliance Act is not prevented by the Workmen's Compensation Act of the state where the accident occurred, though in terms applicable, and though the train movement was intrastate. Kraemer v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Minn. 1921) 181 N. W. 847.

IV. "TRAIN"

2. Switching Operations (p. 1158)

What constitutes "train movement."—The Safety Appliance Act applies to an intrastate train movement on an interstate railroad; and the plaintiff's intestate, in taking 17 cars from a yard on a spur track to a yard on the main line, a distance of 3 miles, using a switch engine, having no cabooses, and operating without train orders, was engaged in a "train movement," as distinguished from a "switching movement," and was within the protection of the Safety Appliance Act. Kraemer v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Minn. 1921) 181 N. W. 847.

VIII. ACTION BY INJURED EMPLOYEE
(p. 1160)

Proximate cause.—The failure to have the air brakes coupled so as to be under engine control, as required by the Safety Appliance Act, was a proximate cause of the death of the plaintiff's intestate who was killed in a derailment by the cars not under air control crowding the tender into the engine cab and crushing him against the boiler head. Kraemer v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Minn. 1921) 181 N. W. 847.

Right of action for death.—There is implied in the Safety Appliance Act a right of recovery for death, though the act does not in express terms provide for a survival of the cause of action; and the personal representative of an employee killed on an interstate road because of a violation by the road of the Safety Appliance Act can recover in an action based on the statute, though the train movement in which the deceased was engaged was intrastate. Kraemer v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Minn. 1921) 181 N. W. 847.

Pleading.—A person suing under this Act must show by his pleading that he was either an employee or a traveller at the time of the injury, the Act being limited by its title to those classes. Ecclesive v. Great Northern R. Co., (1920) 58 Mont. 470, 194 Pac. 143.

Vol. VIII, p. 1161, sec. 2. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 753.]

VII. Automatic coupling and uncoupling apparatus.

VIII. Duty to "equip" and maintain equipment as absolute.

IX. To whom duty to equip owed.

XI. Civil action arising out of violation of section.

VII. AUTOMATIC COUPLING AND UNCOUPLING APPARATUS (p. 1164)

Movement of train due to breaking of coupler.—The movement down grade of a detached portion of a train made possible by the breaking of a defective coupler has been held to be the necessary and natural effect of a failure to comply with the Safety Appliance Act. Erie R. Co. v. Caldwell, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 947.

Car without drawhead.—In a case where it appeared that a brakeman was injured while attempting to fasten two cars together with chains because the drawhead of one of the cars was gone, it was held that the case was as a matter of law within the Act. Wight v. Callicut, (Tex. 1920) 225 S. W. 389.

VIII. DUTY TO "EQUIP" AND MAINTAIN EQUIPMENT AS ABSOLUTE (p. 1166)

In general.—To same effect as original annotation, see Davis v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., (1920) 204 Ill. 355, 128 N. E. 539, wherein it was said: "The duty and liability to provide couplers automatically coupling by impact and which can be uncoupled without the necessity of going between the cars is an absolute duty imposed on railroads engaged in interstate commerce, under the Federal Safety Appliance Act. Assumed risk is not a defense under this statute. Neither can the action of the employee be defeated by the carrier showing that it has exercised care in providing and keeping in repair such appliances, nor by showing contributory negligence on the part of the employee when he is injured by reason of a violation of the act."

IX. TO WHOM DUTY TO EQUIP OWED (p. 1169)

A carrier's failure to have the end of a loaded freight car standing on a siding equipped with the coupler and drawbar prescribed by the Federal Safety Appliance Acts, the purpose of which is to obviate the necessity for men to go between the ends of the cars, was not an actionable breach of duty towards a brakeman who was injured in a collision between such car, of whose de-facts he was aware, and another car on which he was riding, which the engine had kicked on the same siding, although had these appliances been present there would have been sufficient room between the ends of the two cars to prevent the injury, where there was no present intention to disturb, couple, or move the defective car, since the collision was not the proximate result of the defect, but of the brakeman's failure to perform his duty to stop the moving car in time to avoid the collision. Lang v. New York Cent. R. Co., (1921) 255 U. S. 455, 41 S. Ct. 381, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) (affirming (1920) 227 N. Y. 507, 125 N. E. 681), where in the court said: "The court's [New York Court of Appeals] conclusion that the requirement of the Safety Appliance Act 'was intended to provide against the risk of coupling cars' is the explicit declaration of the Conarty Case. [See original annotation under this heading.] There, after considering the act and the cases in exposition of it, we said, nothing in its provisions 'gives any warrant for saying that they are intended to provide a place of safety between colliding cars. On the contrary, they affirmatively show that a principal purpose in their enactment was to obviate 'the necessity for men going between the ends of the cars.'"

"The case was concerned with a collision between a switch engine and a defective freight car, resulting in injuries from which death ensued. The freight car was about to be placed on (we quote from the opinion) 'an isolated track for repairs, and was left near the switch leading to that track while other cars were being moved out of the way, — a task taking about five minutes. At that time a switch engine with which the deceased was working came along the track on which the car was standing and the collision ensued.' The deceased was on the switch engine, and it was on its way 'to do some switching at a point some distance beyond the car, and was not intended and did not attempt to couple it to the engine or to handle it in any way. Its movement was in the hands of others.'"

IX. CIVIL ACTION ARISING OUT OF VIOLATION OF SECTION (p. 1170)

Contributory negligence.—To same effect as original annotation, see Flanigan v. Hines, (1920) 108 Kan. 133, 193 Pac. 1077.

Proximate cause of injury.—Where a switchman standing near a switch was injured by the switch lever being thrown from the impact against the switch points of a car which broke loose, the defective coupling which permitted the car to break loose was the proximate cause of the injury. Stewart v. Wabash R. Co., (Neb. 1921) 182 N. W. 496.

Joinder of causes of action.—An action to recover damages resulting from death of an employee may be predicated on both the Employers' Liability Act and the Safety Appliance Acts, and the plaintiff may go to the jury on as many grounds of recovery as the evidence tends to establish, under proper instructions as to each, without electing between the acts mentioned. Flanigan v. Hines, (1920) 108 Kan. 133, 193 Pac. 1077.

Evidence of defect.—The fact that a car became uncoupled on the stopping of the train is sufficient evidence that the coupling was defective. Stewart v. Wabash R. Co., (Neb. 1921) 182 N. W. 496.

Vol. VIII, p. 1174, sec. 4. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 755.]

I. Cars affected.

V. Duty imposed as absolute.

I. CARS AFFECTED (p. 1174)

Foreign car.—"Nor is defendant's liability under the act affected by the fact that the Grand Trunk Pacific car from which plaintiff fell did not belong to it, and was not being used by it at the time for the purpose of transporting a shipment therein, but was picked up by this switching crew and utilized temporarily for the purpose of enabling the crew to reach and remove the Frisco car." Lyon v. Wabash R. Co., (Mo. App. 1921) 232 S. W. 786.

V. DUTY IMPOSED AS ABSOLUTE (p. 1176)

Rule stated.—To same effect as original annotation, see Lyon v. Wabash R. Co., (Mo. App. 1921) 232 S. W. 786.

Necessity of injury while coupling or uncoupling cars.—It is not necessary that the employee should be injured because of a defective grabiron while coupling or uncoupling cars. If the grabiron can be used in getting to the point where the cars are to be coupled or uncoupled, it is within this section. Director General of Railroads v. Ronald, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 138.

Vol. VIII, p. 1182, sec. 8. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 756.]

Effect of section.—In Ward v. Erie R. Co., (1921) 230 N. Y. 230, 129 N. E. 886, in passing upon the question as to whether a state by legislation could impair the remedy given by the Safety Appliance Acts to an employee, the court said, regarding the effect of this section:

"Here there are two provisions that unmistakably reveal the purpose to give to the right of action for damages then attaching at common law a statutory confirmation and a statutory sanction. The act provides (27 Stat. 532, Act March 2, 1893, ch. 196, § 8) that any employee injured by any locomotive, car, or train in use contrary to the statute 'shall not be deemed thereby to have assumed the risk thereby occasioned, although continuing in the employment of such carrier after the unlawful use of such locomotive, car, or train had been brought to his knowledge.' This provision assumes the existence of a remedy and limits the available defenses. The regulation of the remedy is equivalent to a declaration that a remedy there shall be. The states were without power, with that statute on the books, to make assumption of risk through continuance in employment an answer to a suit. Congress did not mean that they should have the power to destroy the right of action which they were powerless to impair. The supplementary act of 1910 (36 Stat. L. 299) reinforces this conclusion. It provides that the penalty of $100 for each violation of its provisions shall not be construed to relieve such carrier from liability in any remedial action for the death or injury of any railway employee." The Supreme Court, referring to these two provisions in Texas & Pac. Ry. Co. v. Rigsby, supra, at page 40 of 241 U. S., at page 484 of 36 Sup. Ct. (60 L. ed. 874), said of them that 'the inference of a private right of action' was thereby 'rendered irresistible.'

"We build the right of action on the statute. We look to the common law in determining the implications of the statute, the things assumed and held for granted. Murray v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. (C. C.) 62 Fed. 24, 31. That is the background in which its language finds a setting. Congress knew the ancient rule which gives a remedy in these circumstances for violation of a duty. With that knowledge, it left to allusion and suggestion the things that allusion and suggestion were sufficient to supply. The only question is whether it left the gaps so wide that in the process of filling them interpretation fades into conjecture. We think our reading of the act is not subject to that reproach. The statute in scheme and framework is instinct with plan and purpose to maintain a remedy and fortify it. The will of Congress is expressed in abbreviated signs and symbols, but none the less it is expressed. Enough is there to forbid the imputation of a willingness that an act, described in its title as one to promote the safety of employees and travelers, should be dependent for its efficacy upon the pleasure of the states. It is written there in substance: Any one for whose benefit this statute is enacted shall have, in case of violation, a right of action for his damages, and it shall no longer be a defense that there was service with knowledge of the risk."

Vol. VIII, p. 1188, sec. 2. [First ed., vol. X, p. 375.]

Cars affected.—A railroad moving four cuts of cars without having the air brakes coupled and under control from the engine, is guilty of a violation of this act. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 266, wherein the court said:

"Under the undisputed facts, as interpreted by this court in its former opinion, the movements of cars, for which the United States sought to collect the penalties, were train movements, and covered by the Safety Appliance Act."

Transfer trains.—Transfer trains operated by an interstate railway carrier under the yardmaster's orders, and under the single operating rule which requires all trains to move at such speed that they can be stopped at vision, over a terminal railway a part of which is single track, and on which are several grade highway and railway crossings, are subject to the requirement of the Safety Appliance Acts of March 2, 1893, and March 2, 1903, as to the coupling of train brakes so as to be under engine control, since, even under the inadmissible suggestion that the use of the road as part of the main line is essential to the application of this provision, such requirement would be satisfied in a case like the one at bar, where two independent railway companies use the road for freight trains under air control, and the passenger trains of another company cross it. U. S. v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (1920) 254 U. S. 251, 41 S. Ct. 101, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, (reversing C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 255 Fed. 665, 167 C. C. A. 31), wherein the court said:

"The company contends that the rule applied in United States v. Erie R. Co., 237 U. S. 402, 59 L. ed. 1019, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 621; United States v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 237 U. S. 410, 59 L. ed. 1023, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 634; and Louisville & J. Bridge Co. v. United States, 249 U. S. 534, 63 L. ed. 757, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 355, is not applicable, because here, unlike those cases, no part of the trains' journey was performed on a track used as part of the main line of the Northern Pacific system. If use of the road as part of a main line were essential in order that operations on it be controlled by the Safety Appliance Act, the requirement would be satisfied in this case by the fact that two independent companies use the road for freight trains under air control, and that the passenger trains of another company cross it. 'Not only were these [the defendant's] trains exposed to the hazards which that provision was intended to avoid or minimize, but, unless their engineers were able readily and quickly to check or control their movements, they were a serious menace to the safety of other trains which the statute was equally designed to protect.' United States v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., supra. But there is nothing in the act which limits the application of the provision here in question to operations on main-line tracks. The requirement that train brakes shall be coupled so as to be under engine control is in terms (32 Stat. at L. 943, chap. 976, 8 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 1188) applicable to 'all trains . . . used on any railroad engaged in interstate commerce.' It is admitted that this railroad is engaged in interstate commerce; and the cases cited show that transfer trains, like those here involved, are 'trains' within the meaning of the act. A moving locomotive with cars attached is without the provision of the act only when it is not a train; as where the operation is that of switching, classifying, and assembling cars within railroad yards for the purpose of making up trains. Congress has not imposed upon courts applying the act any duty to weigh the dangers incident to particular operations; and we have no occasion to consider the special dangers incident to operating trains under the conditions here presented."

Vol. VIII, p. 1190, sec. 2. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 336.]

Duty absolute.—The duty of a carrier to equip and maintain its cars with sufficient and adequate brakes is an absolute one. Payne v. Connor, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 497.

Employees within act.—Whether the employee injured by a violation of this act was at the time engaged in interstate commerce is immaterial. Tyon v. Wabash R. Co., (Mo. App. 1921) 232 S. W. 786.

Secure running boards—act of trespasser creating defect.—The federal Safety Appliance Act, April 14, 1910, which requires cars operated in interstate commerce to be equipped with secure running boards, is not violated where it appears that a trespasser, without the knowledge of the railroad or its servants, displaced an ice bunker cover so that it projected upon the running board, causing plaintiff, a brakeman, to trip over it; the running board itself remaining all the time mechanically perfect and secure. Slater v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1920) 146 Minn. 390, 178 N. W. 813.

Coal on engine step does not constitute a violation of this act. Reeves v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1920) 147 Minn. 114, 179 N. W. 689.

Question for jury.—Where plaintiff was hit by cars which had been standing and which were moved by cars kicked back as he was crossing the track, the question whether failure to have the standing cars properly equipped with brakes contributed to the injury has been held to be one for the jury. Payne v. Connor, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 497.

Vol. VIII, p. 1191, sec. 3. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 336.]

Extension of time for compliance.—This section gives to the Commission no power to extend the time for compliance with the provisions of section 2 of this act. Tyon v. Wabash R. Co., (Mo. App. 1921) 232 S. W. 786.

Vol. VIII, p. 1192, sec. 4. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 336.]

I. Introductory.

VI. "Nearest available point."

VIII. "Remedial action."

I. INTRODUCTORY (p. 1192)

The word "permitting" was evidently inserted in this section to meet the case of one interstate carrier receiving cars from another line, not thus equipped and hauling them on its own line. McCalmont v. Pennsylvania Co., (N. D. Ohio 1921) 273 Fed. 231.

VI. "NEAREST AVAILABLE POINT" (p. 1196)

Scope of permission to haul defective cars.— "The permission to haul from the place where the want of repair is discovered is a permission to haul it only to the nearest available repair place, and only in case it is necessary to do such hauling in order to make repairs, and when they cannot be made except at that repair place. Even this permission to haul to the nearest available repair place does not permit the hauling of defective cars by chains instead of drawbars in association with other cars commercially used, unless such defective car contains live stock or perishable freight. Obviously this means that crippled cars must be hauled in trains made up exclusively of crippled cars. The association of the word 'used' with the words 'hauled or permitted to be hauled on its line' clearly indicates that the use must be associated with or related to the transportation or hauling of a crippled car, either in transportation from place to place, or of the car from the place where found to be defective or insecure to the place of repair. It does not mean such use of the car elsewhere or in other relations than such hauling or movement." McCalmont v. Pennsylvania Co., (N. D. Ohio 1921) 273 Fed. 231.

VIII. "REMEDIAL ACTION" (p. 1197)

A causal relation between the violation of the Safety Appliance Act and the employee's injuries must always exist. McCalmont v. Pennsylvania Co., (N. D. Ohio 1921) 273 Fed. 231, holding in this case that the carrier was not liable.

Vol. VIII, p. 1199, sec. 1. [Locomotive ash pan, etc.] [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 588.]

Proximate cause of injury.—In Ft. Worth, etc., R. Co. v. Smithers, (Tex. 1921) 228 S. W. 637, it appeared that the ash pan of a locomotive was so out of order that the cover could not be closed by the use of the lever. A round house employer, failing to close the pan by the lever, started to leave the locomotive cab to go under the locomotive to close it, and in so doing fell by reason of the slippery condition of the floor of the cab. It was held that the violation of the Ash Pan Act was the proximate cause of the injury.

Vol. VIII, p. 1201, sec. 2. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 339.]

Boiler undergoing repair.—A boiler on a locomotive which is in the shop for purpose of repair is not being used in interstate commerce within this section. Flack v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (Mo. 1920) 224 S. W. 415, wherein it was said: "At the time of the accident here in suit, the engine in question was not being used in 'moving interstate or foreign traffic,' nor was it 'in the active service of such carrier in moving traffic' within the intent and purpose of that act, as we construe it. The engine was undeniably being prepared for use in interstate traffic, and the deceased met his death while engaged in that preparation. The work then being done was necessary in order to avoid a violation of the provisions of the act whose penalties respondent now invokes."

Action for injuries.—In an action under the federal Employers' Liability Act, the plaintiff may recover for injuries caused by the violation of this section. Cochran v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (Kan. 1921) 198 Pac. 686.

Vol. VIII, p. 1205, sec. 1. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 215.]

Engine steps.—The presence of a lump of coal on an engine step does not constitute a violation of this section. Reeves v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1920) 147 Minn. 114, 179 N. W. 689.

Piston rod.—A broken piston rod resulting in the escape of large quantities of steam into the cab of the locomotive is within this act. Kilburn v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Mo. 1921) 232 S. W. 1017.

Presumption of safety mechanism.—When it comes to a question of proper condition and safety under this act, that mechanism which has been in constant use for years without causing injury must be considered proper and safe until some notice or occasion indicates its danger and insufficiency. Ford v. McAdoo, (1921) 231 N. Y. 155, 131 N. E. 874, wherein it was held that the evidence was insufficient to show that the locomotive was defective.

I. INTRODUCTORY

2. Construction and Operation
 - a. In General (p. 1213)

The Safety Appliance Act and the Employers' Liability Act.—"The federal Employers' Liability Act, exclusively regulating the relation of common carriers and their employees while engaged in interstate commerce, was enacted long after the Safety Appliance Act, viz. April 22, 1908 (35 Stat. 65), and this absolute duty of the railroad company under the Safety Appliance Act to its employees, injured when engaged in interstate commerce, must be considered as incorporated in it. Whenever a violation of that act is the proximate cause of the injury, the negligence of the railroad company is ipso facto established. The exemption in favor of such employees is greater in the Employers' Liability Act than that conferred by section 8 of the Safety Appliance Act; sections 3 and 4 providing that no such employees shall be held to have been guilty of contributory negligence, or to have assumed the risks of the employment in any case, where the violation by the common carrier of any statute enacted for the safety of employees contributed to the injury or death of such employee. Director General of Railroads v. Ronald, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 138.

Exclusiveness of remedy.—The remedy given by this act, in so far as it fixes the liability of the employer, is exclusive as to him, but does not modify the employee's common law right to sue any third party who is jointly liable for the injury. Cott v. Erie R. Co., (1921) 231 N. Y. 67, 131 N. E. 737.

- d. Construction Controlled by Federal Decisions (p. 1214)

The opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States.—To same effect as original annotation, see Hines v. Industrial Accident Commission, (Cal. 1920) 192 Pac. 859; Wright v. Interurban R. Co., (Ia. 1920) 179 N. W. 877; Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Brooks, (Ga. 1921) 107 S. E. 878. In the last case, the court said:

"The law which we are called upon to construe, being an act of the United States Congress, presents a federal question. On all such questions the Supreme Court of the United States is the highest authority, and its decisions are final. Because there is an absence of direct adjudication on the precise point by the Supreme Court of the United States, it becomes the duty of this court to 'determine the question by the exercise of its own judgment, enlightened by the best available authorities.'"

A federal court's interpretation of the act prevails over any state law or rule of interpretation of a state court. Bennett v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (Ia. 1921) 183 N. W. 424.

3. "Common Carrier by Railroad"

- a. In General (p. 1215)

Railroad under federal control.—A railroad under federal control under the act of March 21, 1918, (1918 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. p. 757 et seq.) is an employer within this section. Hite v. St. Joseph, etc., R. Co., (Mo. 1920) 225 S. W. 916.

- b. Electric Railway (p. 1215)

State corporation.—"Ordinary street cars (and not interurban or suburban cars) operated on streets of cities for the carriage of passengers do not come under the Federal Employers' Liability Act." Peters v. Kansas City Rys. Co., (Mo. 1920) 204 Mo. App. 197, 224 S. W. 26.

- c. Vessel Owned by Railroad (p. 1216)

Vessel not owned by railroad.—Since this act applies only to common carriers by railroad, the fact that an employee is injured while assisting in the unloading of a vessel used in interstate commerce, is immaterial, especially where the vessel is not owned by the defendant railroad and forms no part of its system. Foley v. Hines, (1920) 119 Me. 425, 111 Atl. 715.

f. Express Company (p. 1217)

To the same effect as the original annotation, Wells Fargo & Co. v. Taylor, (1920) 254 U. S. 175, 41 S. Ct. 93, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1918) 249 Fed. 109, 161 C. C. A. 161; State v. American Express Co. (Utah 1921) 195 Pac. 312. In the former case, the court said:

"The question is presented whether the act embraces a common carrier by express, which neither owns nor operates a railroad, but uses and pays for railroad transportation in the manner before shown. The District Court answered the question in the negative and the Circuit Court of Appeals in the affirmative. A negative answer also has been given in a like situation by the Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey (Higgins v. Erie R. Co., 89 N. J. L. 629, 99 Atl. 98); and a recent decision by the supreme court of Minnesota makes persuasively for that view (State ex rel. Great Northern Exp. Co. v. District Ct., 142 Minn. 410, 172 N. W. 310).

In our opinion the words "common carrier by railroad," as used in the act, mean one who operates a railroad as a means of carrying for the public,—that is to say, a railroad company acting as a common carrier. This view not only is in accord with the ordinary acceptance of the words, but is enforced by the mention of cars, engines, track, roadbed, and other property pertaining to a going railroad (see Southern P. Co. v. Jensen, 244 U. S. 205, 212, 213, 61 L. ed. 1086, 1096, 1097, L. R. A. 1918C, 451, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 900, 14 N. C. C. A. 597); by the obvious reference in the latter part of §§ 3 and 4 to statutes requiring engines and cars to be equipped with automatic couplers, standard drawbars, and other appliances intended to promote the safety of railroad employees (see San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Wagner, 241 U. S. 476, 484, 60 L. ed. 1110, 1117, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 626); by the use of similar words in closely related acts which apply only to carriers operating railroads (March 2, 1893, 27 Stat. at L. 531, chap. 196, 8 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 1155; May 30, 1908, 35 Stat. at L. 476, chap. 225, 8 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 1199; May 6, 1910, 36 Stat. at L. 350, chap. 208, 8 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 1420); and by the fact that similar words in the original Interstate Commerce Act had been construed as including carriers operating railroads, but not express companies doing business as here shown (1 Inters. Com. Rep. 677, I. I. C. C. Rep. 349; United States v. Morsman, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 112, 42 Fed. 448; Southern Indiana Exp. Co. v. United States Exp. Co., 88 Fed. 659, 662, s. c. 35 C. C. A. 172, 92 Fed. 1022. And see American Exp. Co. v. United States, 212 U. S. 522, 531, 534, 53 L. ed. 635, 639, 640, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 315).

4. Paramount to State Laws

a. In General (p. 1217)

State laws superseded.—To same effect as original annotation, see Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Johnston, (Ala. 1920) 87 So. 866; Charlotte Harbor, etc., R. Co. v. Truette, (Fla. 1921) 87 So. 427; Hines v. Burns, (1920) 189 Ky. 761, 226 S. W. 109; Myers v. Payne, (Mo. App. 1921) 227 S. W. 633; Wintermute v. Oregon-Washington R., etc., Co., (1921) 98 Ore. 431, 194 Pac. 420; Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Francis, (Tex. 1921) 227 S. W. 342.

Applicability to Porto Rico.—It is held that this act and the Workmen's Compensation Act of Porto Rico are inconsistent and that so far as inconsistent this Act is inapplicable to railroads in Porto Rico. Camunas v. Porto Rico R., etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 924.

c. State Statutes, in General (p. 1219)

The federal law is exclusive within the scope of its operation.—To same effect as original annotation, see Hines v. Industrial Commission, (1920) 295 Ill. 231, 129 N. E. 175.

d. State Workmen's Compensation Acts (p. 1220)

A state Workmen's Compensation Law has no application to an injury received by a railroad employee while engaged in interstate commerce. Hines v. Industrial Acc. Commission, (Cal. 1920) 192 Pac. 859, 14 A. L. R. 720.

II. EMPLOYER ENGAGED IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

1. In General (p. 1223)

A terminal road which switches indiscriminately for foreign and domestic cars is an instrumentality of interstate or foreign commerce, regardless of whether it knows them to be such in each instance. Cott v. Erie R. Co., (1921) 231 N. Y. 67, 131 N. E. 737.

A crane used in unloading coal to be held in reserve in view of a threatened coal strike is not an instrumentality of interstate commerce so as to permit a recovery under this Act; nor does the coal acquire the character of such commerce by reason of its contemplated use in the operation of the railroad at a future date. Kozimko v. Hines, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 507.

4. Hauling Empty Cars (p. 1227)

The hauling of empty freight cars from one state to another.—To same effect as original annotation, see Koons v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (Pa. 1921) 114 Atl. 262.

6. Movements in Terminal Yard (p. 1227)

In case of an interstate train.—To same effect as original annotation, see Payne v.

Rearden, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 879.

8. Transportation of Mail (p. 1227)

To same effect as original annotation, see Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Industrial Commission, (1920) 294 Ill. 374, 128 N. E. 516; Baker v. Southern Pac. R. Co., (1920) 193 Pac. 765.

III. EMPLOYEE ENGAGED IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

1. Relation of Employer and Employee g. Independent Contractor (p. 1234)

Servant of independent contractor.—The act does not embrace the servant of an independent contractor holding a contract with an interstate carrier. Polluck v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., (S. D. 1921) 183 N. W. 859, following decision on former appeal 40 S. D. 186, 166 N. W. 641, affirmed 248 U. S. 558, 39 S. Ct. 6, 63 U. S. (L. ed.) 421.

h. Express Agent (p. 1235)

An express messenger in charge of express matter which a railway company was transporting for the express company in an express car furnished by the railway company under a contract which gave the express company the exclusive privilege of conducting an express business, the railway company to provide the motive power and the train operatives, was on the train as an employee not of the railway company, but of the express company, by which he was employed, directed, and paid, and at whose will he was to continue in service or be discharged. Wells Fargo & Co. v. Taylor, (1920) 254 U. S. 175, 41 S. Ct. 93, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1918) 249 Fed. 109, 161 C. C. A. 161.

2. Employed in Interstate Commerce

a. General Rule and Tests (p. 1236)

It is essential to a case under the statutes.—To same effect as original annotation, see Ward v. Erie R. Co., (1921) 230 N. Y. 230, 129 N. E. 886; Rockford City Traction Co. v. Industrial Commission, (1920) 295 Ill. 358, 129 N. E. 135; Swank v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (N. J. 1920) 111 Atl. 44; Foley v. Hines, (1920) 119 Me. 425, 111 Atl. 715; Gruszewsky v. Director General of Railroads, (Com. 1921) 113 Atl. 160.

The true test as to whether one is engaged in interstate commerce.—To same effect as original annotation, see Hines v. Baechtel, (1921) 137 Md. 513, 113 Atl. 126; Gruszewsky v. Director General, (1921) 113 Atl. 160; Koons v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (Pa. 1921) 114 Atl. 262.

That violation of the Safety Appliance Act caused the injury does not dispense with proof that the employer was at the time thereof engaged in interstate commerce. Flanigan v. Hines, (1920) 108 Kan. 133, 193 Pac. 1077.

b. Employee Operating Train (p. 1244)

Employees within the statute — Trainmen.—A railway employee who is injured by being caught between two cars while employed upon a freight train made up of both interstate cars and freight and intrastate cars and freight was employed in interstate commerce, within the meaning of this act, so as to exclude the operation of a state workmen's compensation act. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Polk, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 518, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1920) 266 Pa. St. 335, 109 Atl. 627.

Engineer.—Where an engineer employed in the shifting service of a railroad, engaged in both interstate and intrastate commerce, had hauled a train of interstate cars to its destination in the railroad yard and was injured while taking the engine to the round-house either to receive further orders or to house the engine for the night, it was held that he was engaged in interstate commerce within the meaning of this act. Director Gen. of Railroads v. Bennett, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 767.

c. Employees Coupling, Uncoupling or Switching Cars (p. 1248)

Employees within the statute — Switching.—A switchman was held to be engaged in interstate commerce where at the time of the injury he was assisting in the removal of an intrastate car from a track so as to facilitate the movement of an interstate train. Keap v. Hines, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 88.

Where the parties stipulated that the "decendent was assisting another man at work at or near a switch, which switch was connected with tracks used for both interstate and intrastate commerce" it was declared:

"This stipulation, construed most favorably to the plaintiff on the defendant's concession, placed the decendent at the switch and made the switch a part of the tracks. The switch thus became an instrumentality as permanently devoted to commerce as the tracks themselves (Minneapolis & St. Louis R. Co. v. Winters, 242 U. S. 353, 37 Sup. Ct. 170, 61 L. ed. 358, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 54; Pederson v. L. & W. R. Co., 229 U. S. 146, 33 Sup. Ct. 648, 57 L. ed. 1125, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 53), and determined the character of the employment of both employee and carrier as interstate." Smith v. Payne, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 1.

In Stewart v. Wabash R. Co., (Neb. 1921) 182 N. W. 496, a switch foreman was held to be within the act on facts noted by the court as follows:

"The proof shows that defendant is an interstate carrier with lines extending through Missouri, Iowa, and other states, and running passenger trains into Omaha. Plaintiff had worked as a switchman for defendant for seven years at Council Bluffs. He was acting as switch foreman and was working at the main freight yards on the day of the accident, in yards in which both interstate and intrastate traffic was handled. The three cars were taken from track seven in the yard, and were brought down the main line and pushed upon the Y. One of the cars belonged to the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railway Company, and another to the New York Central Railroad Company. The engineer testified that, after he coupled on to eight or nine other cars, he was given a signal to clear the main line. The main line was used for both interstate and intrastate commerce."

Employees not within the statute.—An engineer switching on to a siding a string of empty cars which have no destination and are to be held there to await orders, and which might in their next use "go anywhere" is not engaged in interstate commerce. Kraemer v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Minn. 1921) 181 N. W. 847.

A switchman is not within the act where the cars being switched neither carried interstate commerce nor were they to be used immediately in interstate commerce, nor had they been used immediately before in such commerce, but were only used therein whenever the exigencies of the railroad called them into service for that purpose. Hines, v. Green, (1921) 125 Miss. 476, 87 So. 649.

d. Employee Engaged in Construction or Repairs (p. 1254)

Employees within the statute.—Roadbed and tracks.—A section hand who is killed while removing the stone ballast from between the ties under tracks used in interstate commerce, is engaged in interstate commerce within the meaning of this section. Swank v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (N. J. 1920) 111 Atl. 44.

So a brakeman hauling ballast for use on a main track over which interstate trains are operated is within the act. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Leinen, (144 Ark. 454) 223 S. W. 1.

In Crecelius v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1920) 284 Mo. 26, 223 S. W. 413, the evidence in behalf of plaintiff tends to show that decedent was timekeeper for a group of workmen in the employ of appellant; that he was employed by the month; that his duties required him to keep a record of the men employed; to check them up at least twice daily; to make two daily reports to his superiors, one by telegraph, and one by mail; that these duties usually consumed his time until about 7 or 8 o'clock in the evening; that he was killed at about 6.30 p. m.; that he was, at the moment when death overtook him, on his way to make his daily telegraphic report; that during the day upon which he died the men under his observation were employed in part in constructing a temporary track and in part in work upon the main track; and that this main track was used by appellant in interstate commerce. The train which killed decedent was an intrastate train. It was held that the plaintiff was within the act.

Bridges.—An employee of a railroad company who is killed while hauling stringers for the repair of a bridge used by the company in interstate commerce, is engaged in interstate commerce within the meaning of this act. Hines v. Industrial Commission, (1920) 295 Ill. 231, 129 N. E. 175.

Engine or car.—A laborer in the car shops of a railroad who is injured while unloading for repairs a car wrecked in interstate commerce, is within the scope of this act. Koons v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (Pa. 1921) 114 Atl. 262.

Repairing engine.—In Payne v. Industrial Acc. Commission, (Col. App. 1921) 195 Pac. 81, a workman was held to be within the act while engaged in a repair shop repairing an engine the past and future use of which was stated as follows:

"This locomotive had been used several months for the exclusive purpose of hauling heavy freight trains in interstate commerce between points in the states of Nevada and California, on the main line of the railroad. On the 19th of December, 1918, it was placed in the shops at Los Angeles for general overhauling and the installation of a superheating apparatus to increase the steam pressure, whereupon it was the intention to return it to its regular service. It was estimated that this work would be finished about January 30, 1919, but owing to delay in delivery of necessary materials it was not actually completed until about February 21, 1919. After the repairs had been made the engine was given a trial for several days in the yards of the company at Los Angeles, in accordance with the usual custom, without cars attached. On February 25, 1919, it hauled a freight train from Los Angeles to San Pedro, and on the following day returned to Los Angeles with a similar train, a portion of the cargo in both instances being consigned to points outside of California. It was testified that the trip to San Pedro was a part of the process of 'breaking in' after a locomotive had undergone extensive repairs. After this run to San Pedro, the engine was returned to the shop, remaining there until March 4, 1919, when it was sent out attached to a through freight train, and resumed its former run between Yermo, Cal., and Caliente, Nev., on the main line of the railroad, where it has ever since been used."

Employees not within statute.—A car repairer who is injured while repairing a car which is out of use for the purpose of having the repairs made, is not injured "while engaged in interstate commerce" within the meaning of this section. Herzog v. Hines, (N. J. 1920) 112 Atl. 315, wherein the court said:

"In Erie Railroad Co. v. Welsh, 242 U. S. 303, 37 Sup. Ct. 116, 61 L. ed. 319, the true test to be applied in determining whether or not a given case was within the federal statute was declared to be the nature of the work being done at the time of the injury; and it was held that the fact that the plaintiff, who was a yard conductor in the company's employ, had shortly before the accident been engaged in superintending the shifting of an interstate car, and that he was returning to the yardmaster's office after he had completed this task, for instructions as to what work he should next engage in, when the accident occurred, and the further fact, had he reached the yardmaster's office safely, he would then have been directed to assist in making up an interstate train, were not sufficient to bring the case within the act.

"Although the facts of the cited case are quite unlike those which are presented in that now before us, the test laid down is applicable; that is, was the work being done by the plaintiff at the time of the injury a task in interstate commerce? We think it plain that it was not. The repair work was being done to an instrument of commerce, it is true, but at that time the car was entirely out of commission, and was not being used for any purpose whatever. In this respect the case radically differs from that of Pederson v. D. L. & W. R. R. Co., 229 U. S. 146, 33 Sup. Ct. 648, 57 L. ed. 1125, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 163, where the repair was being made upon an instrument of interstate commerce then in use in such transportation.

"There are other and later decisions of the federal tribunal where the test declared in the Welsh Case was applied in cases quite similar in their facts to that now before us. In Minneapolis, etc., R. R. Co. v. Winters, 242 U. S. 353, 37 Sup. Ct. 170, 61 L. Ed. 358, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 54, the injury occurred while the plaintiff was repairing a locomotive engine. The engine had been used in interstate commerce before the accident happened, and was so used afterward. There was nothing, however, to show that it was permanently devoted to such commerce. It was held that the facts did not present a case within the federal act, the court saying: 'This is not like the matter of repairs upon a road permanently devoted to commerce among the states. An engine as such is not permanently devoted to any kind of traffic and it does not appear that this engine was destined especially to anything more definite than such business as it might be needed for. It was not interrupted in an interstate haul to be repaired and go on. It simply had finished some interstate business and had not yet begun upon any other. Its next work, so far as appears, might be interstate or confined to Iowa, as it should happen. At the moment it was not engaged in either. Its character as an instrument of commerce depended on its employment at the time not upon remote probabilities or upon accidental later events.'

"In Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. v. Bran- son, 242 U. S. 623, 37 Sup. Ct. 244, 61 L. Ed. 534, the plaintiff was injured while engaged in painting an engine in the defendant company's roundhouse, the work which he was doing being that for which he was employed. It was held that the case was not within the statute. So, too, in the case of Chicago, etc., R. R. Co. v. Kindlesparker, 246 U. S. 657, 38 Sup. Ct. 425, 62 L. Ed. 925, the court again applied the test declared in the Welsh Case, holding that a plaintiff who was injured while repairing an engine which, when in use, was devoted indiscriminately to the movement of interstate and intrastate traffic, was not engaged at the time of the accident in interstate commerce, within the meaning of the federal statute."

Boiler maker.—In Payne v. Demott, (Ga. App. 1921) 106 S. E. 9, the court held that a boiler maker was not engaged in interstate commerce while working on a locomotive which was used chiefly in intrastate traffic and which at the time of the injury had been withdrawn from service for the purpose of being repaired and was in the repair shop.

An employee of an intrastate traction company who is injured while welding rails in tracks used by his employer and also by an interstate company, is not engaged in interstate commerce within the meaning of this act. Rockford City Traction Co. v. Industrial Commission, (1920) 295 Ill. 358, 129 N. E. 136, wherein it was said:

"The point urged in the brief of plaintiff in error for a reversal of this judgment is that defendant in error was engaged in interstate commerce at the time of his injury and that recovery must be had, if at all, under the federal Employers' Liability Act. This contention is made on the theory that at the time of the injury he was engaged in repairing an instrumentality used in interstate commerce. Plaintiff in error, the Rockford City Traction Company, operates a street railway in the city of Rockford, and an associated company, the Rockford & Interurban Railway Company, operates four interurban lines out of Rockford—one each to Belvidere, Freeport, and Camp Grant, Ill., and a fourth line to Beloit and Janesville, Wis. These companies are in law two corporations, but they are operated from the same office by the same officers and agents, and their connection is so close that it is almost impossible for any one to know what are the activities of the one and what of the other. Defendant in error was injured in the city of Rockford, near the east end of the East State street bridge across Rock river. Over the point where he was injured the Rockford City Traction Company runs practically all its lines of cars, and the Rockford & Interurban Railway Company used the same tracks for its cars that run to Beloit and Janesville, Wis. Defendant in error testified that he was employed by the Rockford City Traction Company and was paid by that company and not by the interurban company. This was sufficient to establish the relation of employer and employee between defendant in error and plaintiff in error. Chicago Traction Co. v. Industrial Board, 232 Ill. 230, 118 N. E. 464. Where the employer seeks to avoid liability under the Workmen's Compensation Act on the ground that the employee was engaged in interstate commerce at the time of his injury, the burden is on the employer to show that the employee at the time of his injury was engaged in interstate commerce. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. v. Industrial Com., 290 Ill. 590, 125 N. E. 380; Chicago & Alton Railroad Co. v. Industrial Com., 290 Ill. 599, 125 N. E. 378. Before the federal Employers' Liability Act controls, it must be shown that the employee was at the time of his injury engaged in the interstate commerce of his employer; that is, both the employee and the employer must at the time be engaged in interstate commerce within the meaning of the act. Chicago & Alton Railroad Co. v. Industrial Com., 288 Ill. 603, 124 N. E. 344. None of the business of plaintiff in error was interstate business, and the circuit court properly held that the Industrial Commission had jurisdiction of the cause."

A carpenter repairing a depot building is not within the act. Boles v. Hines, (Mo. App. 1920) 226 S. W. 272.

A machinist's helper, engaged in making repairs upon a switch engine which had been temporarily withdrawn from service therefor and which when in service was used in both interstate and intrastate traffic, is not engaged in interstate commerce. Hines v. Industrial Acc. Commission, (Cal. 1920) 192 Pac. 859, 14 Atl. 720.

Employee removing tires from engine wheels.—In Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Ropp, (Ind. 1921) 129 N. E. 475, the evidence showed that the employee was engaged in taking old tires off wheels; that these tires were taken to the blacksmith's shop and used to make piston keys; that the keys were used to keep crossheads and pistons together on various locomotives. There was nothing in the evidence to show that the employee was doing anything immediately connected with interstate commerce, but it was contended that the pins and key made from the old tires might be used at some future time in engines in interstate commerce. In overruling this contention, the court said:

"The true test of employment in such commerce in the sense intended is: Was the employee at the time of the injury engaged in interstate transportation or in work so closely related to it as to be practically a part of it? Chicago, Burlington & Q. R. R. v. Harrington, 241 U. S. 177, 180, 36 Sup. Ct. 517, 518 (60 L. ed. 941); Shanks v. Del., Lack. & West. R. R., 239 U. S. 556, 558, 36 Sup. Ct. 186, 60 L. ed. 436, L. R. A. 1916C, 797; Del., Lack. & West. R. R. v.

Yurkonis, 238 U. S. 439, 35 Sup. Ct. 902, 59 L. ed. 1397.

"Measured by this test, appellee was not engaged in 'interstate transportation,' nor 'in work so closely related to it as to be practically a part of it.'"

Employee at disused power station.—Where an electric power plant which had been used in interstate commerce was entirely disused during the making of repairs, a temporary substation being substituted, an employee at the disused plant is not within the act. Wright v. Interurban R. Co., (Ia. 1920) 179 N. W. 877.

e. Employee Supplying Fuel or Water (p. 1267)

Employees within the act—Supplying water.—Where the foreman of a wrecking train after having adjusted a shipment of goods on certain interstate cars, is injured while supplying one of the cars of his train with water, which was a part of his day's work, he must be deemed to have been employed in interstate commerce at the time of his injury. Director General of Railroads, v. Ronalds, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 138.

f. Employee Guarding or Inspecting Property (p. 1269)

Employee within the statute—Flagman.—A person employed as a railway flagman at a public crossing, to signal both intrastate and interstate trains, was, without regard to the character—intrastate or interstate—of the particular train which he was flagging when killed, engaged in interstate commerce, within the meaning of this act, so as to exclude the operation of a state workmen's compensation law. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Di Donato, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 516, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1920) 266 Pa. St. 412, 109 Atl. 627.

Car inspector.—An employee inspecting, and, wherever necessary, repairing cars which were being made ready for departure to several states, was none the less engaged in interstate commerce, although it was also his duty to inspect and repair cars which were being used wholly within the state. Hines v. Logan, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 105.

g. Employee Going to or Returning from Work or Temporarily Diverted Therefrom (p. 1271)

Employees within statute.—A section hand returning on a hand car from his work in the repair of a track used in interstate commerce is within the act. Wagner v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Mo. App. 1921) 232 S. W. 771.

An engineer of an interstate train going to the oil house "to get oil to run his engine" or returning from such a trip, is within the act. Hines v. Burns, (1920) 189 Ky. 761, 226 S. W. 109.

Employees not within the statute.—Where a section hand on the order of his foreman but in violation of a rule known to him leaves his work and goes to a nearby town to get provisions for the crew he is not while so doing within the act. Adams v. Hines, (Wash. 1921) 196 Pac. 19.

"Plaintiff testified that prior to his injury he had been switching cars loaded with interstate freight and empty cars destined to points beyond the state. But these movements had all been completed, and he had stopped his engine in the side track to let No. 48 pass. He said that, if he had not been hurt, his next movement would have been to place an empty for the express people; but that was not enough to bring the case within the act, even if it had appeared that the empty was to be loaded with interstate freight." Patterson v. Director General of Railroads, (1921) 115 S. C. 390, 105 S. E. 746.

Where an employee on leaving railroad yards where he was employed in interstate commerce selects a dangerous means of exit instead of the safe one provided by the employer, it is held that in so doing he ends his employment and loses his status of an employee in interstate commerce. Krysiak v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 758.

h. Employee Working on Watercraft (p. 1274)

To same effect as original annotation, see Foley v. Hines, (1920) 119 Me. 425, 111 Atl. 715, wherein it appeared that the vessel was not owned by the railroad and the coal unloaded was not intended to be presently used in interstate commerce.

i. Other Employees (p. 1275)

Employees within the statute.—Where a roadmaster at the time of his injury was engaged in taking an inventory of materials lying on the property of the road, it was held that his work as roadmaster, in supervising the keeping in repair of said track of said railway engaged in interstate commerce, constituted an employment by such carrier in interstate commerce, and that he was such an employee when injured. Louisiana R. etc., Co. v. Williams, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 439.

Where a railroad company maintains in its yard adjoining its tracks a heating plant in which steam is generated and transmitted through pipes to cars standing on its tracks, with which connection is made by means of steam plugs, and the steam so generated is used in interstate and intrastate commerce, an employee who operates a boiler in such heating plant is engaged in interstate commerce. Gruszewsky v. Director General of Railroads, (Com. 1921) 113 Atl. 160.

An employee who is injured while returning to his employer's depot after delivering interstate mail to a train, is engaged in interstate commerce within the meaning of this act. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Industrial Commission, (1920) 294 Ill. 374, 128 N. E. 516.

In Lindstrom v. New York Cent. R. Co., (1919) 186 App. Div. 429, affirmed without opinion, (1920) 230 N. Y. 551, it appeared that the plaintiff was employed in cleaning fires on locomotives. On the night of the accident the ash pit at Geneva, where he was usually employed, was out of order and he was directed to go with the engines to Thompsons, a near-by station, and clean them there. On the way a collision occurred and plaintiff was injured. It was conceded that the engines were used in interstate commerce. The question was whether plaintiff while cleaning them was so engaged. It was held that the plaintiff, at the time he was injured, while on his way to his work on an engine provided by the defendant, was in the service of the defendant; that he was engaged when doing his regular work in both interstate and intrastate commerce; that his trip on the engine from Geneva to Thompsons to his work was a necessary incident of his service and of the nature of his work as a whole; and that he was, therefore, at the time engaged in interstate commerce within the meaning of the act. Lindstrom v. New York Cent. R. Co., (1919) 186 App. Div. 429, affirmed without opinion, (1920) 230 N. Y. 551.

Employees not within the statute.—A member of a crew of an interstate freight train who is killed while asleep in the caboose of the train and while off duty after the completion of the run, is not engaged in interstate commerce. Bishop v. Delano, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 263. The court said:

"In connection with the first writ a bill of exceptions was presented, which consisted of a condensed statement of the evidence. The facts in that bill are fully stated in our former opinion. With the present writ appears a new bill of exceptions which contains a somewhat fuller recital of the testimony. The difference, which is urged as material, is that Myers, conductor of the crew of which Bordner was a member, is now shown to have testified that the crew's 'run was from Montpelier to Chicago and return,' and it is sought from this to have us hold that Bordner was engaged in interstate commerce while he was asleep in the caboose which was being transferred from one point to another in the Chicago yards. But other parts of Myers's testimony agree with all the rest that the 'run from Montpelier to Chicago and return' was not an unbroken period of service; that the crew operated one freight train from Montpelier into Chicago, and an entirely different train on the return part of the run; and that the members of the crew were entitled to have and in fact always did have a period between the separate parts of the round trip of at least eight hours' rest, during which they were the masters of their own time and actions.

"Though the defendant knew that Bordner, if he chose, might stay in the caboose during his free period, his doing so was not a requirement of his service. We see no larger ground of liability than if the defendant had permitted Bordner during his time of nonservice to sleep in a station building, and he had there been killed through the negligence of defendant's servants.

"Plaintiff in error calls our attention particularly to Erie R. Co. v. Winfield, 244 U. S. 170, 37 Sup. Ct. 556, 61 L. ed. 1057, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 662 and Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. v. Smith, 250 U. S. 101, 39 Sup. Ct. 396, 63 L. ed. 969, decided since we gave our former opinion; but we find in them nothing to militate against our decision.

"Indeed, even if Bordner, having been discharged from his interstate run between Montpelier and Chicago, had been engaged in moving the caboose from one point to another in the Chicago yards, so that the caboose might the following day be attached to an outgoing interstate train on which he was expecting to be called into service, he would not have been engaged in interstate service. Chicago, B. & O. R. Co. v. Harrington, 241 U. S. 177, 36 Sup. Ct. 517, 60 L. ed. 941, also decided since our former decision."

A clerk who is killed while acting as a messenger in carrying a coal report from the company's engine house to its telegraph office, is not engaged in interstate commerce within the meaning of this section. Hines v. Baechtel, (1921) 137 Md. 513, 113 Atl. 126.

IV. INJURIES TO EMPLOYEES

1. Negligence Generally

a. Basis of Liability (p. 1277)

Negligence of employer as basis.—To same effect as original annotation, see Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Ropp, (Ind. 1921) 129 N. E. 475.

Necessity of violation of statute for safety of employees.—In Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Wheeler, (Ind. App. 1920) 129 N. E. 40, it was contended that negligence by the employer could be shown only by proof that it had violated a statute enacted for the safety of its employees. In overruling this contention, the court said:

"The eighth instruction, tendered by appellant and refused, was to the effect that if the appellee's decedent was struck and killed by reason of his negligence, and that appellant had not violated any statute enacted by Congress for the protection and safety of employees engaged in interstate commerce, there could be no recovery. Section 1 of the federal act creates a liability for 'injury or death when such injury or death results from the negligence of any officer, agent, or employee.' Section 4 provides that—

"'In any action . . . under . . . the provisions of this act . . . such employee shall not be held to have assumed the risk of his employment in any case where the violation by such common carrier of any statute enacted for the safety of employees contributed to the injury or death of such employee.'

"It is appellant's contention that these two sections must be construed in pari materia, and, when so construed, the negligence of the officer, agent, or employee which gives the right of action must grow out of some violation of a statute enacted for the safety of the employee, by such officer, agent, or employee, which contributed to the injury or death for which suit is brought. This contention cannot be upheld. Section 1 of the act creates a liability in favor of the employee, and abrogates the fellow-servant rule, subject, however, to the doctrine of assumption of risk by the employee. Boldt v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 245 U. S. 441, 38 Sup. Ct. 139, 62 L. ed. 385. Where the carrier violates any statute enacted by Congress for the safety of employees, and thus contributes to the injury or death of such employee, section 4 provides that in such cases the employee shall not be held to have assumed the risk of his employment. Where the injury or death of the employee is brought about by any reason other than the violation of any such statute the doctrine of 'assumption of risk' applies. There was no error in refusing to give the instruction."

d. Defects in Cars, Engines, Appliances, etc.

(1) In General (p. 1280)

Inspection of foreign car.—A carrier sending a foreign car to its car repairers because a draw bar has pulled out is not bound to inspect the car for further latent defects, and is not liable for an injury to a car repairer resulting from the presence of decayed timbers or corroded bolts in the structure of the car. Berry v. Director General of Railroads, (Wis. 1921) 180 N. W. 824.

(2) Duty of Carrier as to Place to Work (p. 1280)

Place not under carrier's control.—A carrier is not negligent because of the existence of an open vat of hot water on the premises of a packing company near its tracks, where its workmen going from track to track in the course of the route had a safe path which they could have followed without passing near the vat. In re Emerson Estate, (Ia. 1921) 182 N. W. 376.

(5) Particular Acts or Conditions as Negligence (p. 1282)

Placing granite block in insecure position on platform.—In Corbett v. Hines, (N. H.

1921) 112 Atl. 796, the plaintiff, a freight handler, was injured while loading granite blocks in a car by one of the blocks falling on him. In holding the railroad company liable because the block was placed in an insecure position on the platform, the court said:

"The argument that the stone fell because of some undisclosed cause, and that therefore there is no evidence of the defendant's fault, ignores the fact that if the stone had been placed in a secure position it would not have fallen. This is shown by the fact that numerous other stones of like size and shape still stood when and after this one fell. The reasonable inference from the situation and what happened is that this stone was not made secure in its position, as it should have been. There was no unusual jar, such as might overcome the equilibrium of a stone that stood firmly. Of course there must have been a sufficient disturbance of some sort to upset the equilibrium that had been maintained since the stone was placed upon the platform. The fact that the disturbance was not noticed is evidence that it was but slight, and the fact that the stone fell because of slight disturbance warrants a finding that it was not securely placed.

"The plaintiff knew that if the block of stone stood insecurely enough it would fall, and that it might be left in that condition. What he did not know, and was not in fault for not knowing, was that this block was in that situation. There was nothing in its appearance to indicate the fact, and he might well assume that the care necessary to insure the safety of those working about it had been taken in placing the stone. It would be a slight matter to determine whether the stone was placed securely or insecurely; but the duty of such ascertainment rested upon the defendant, who placed it there, and not upon the plaintiff, who could rightfully assume that the defendant's duty had been performed. Tierney v. Granite Works, 79 N. H. 166, 106 Atl. 481.

"The plaintiff also knew that the ends of the stones were more or less uneven, and that this might cause them to stand insecurely, but it did not appear that it was the practice to trust to the conformation of the stone to insure their stability. The only evidence upon this question was that the truckman who delivered these stones at the freight depot called the attention of the defendant's employee Marston to the fact that one was not standing securely, and Marston trigged it up with a small piece of wood.

"The essential point in the defendant's argument upon the plaintiff's assumption of risk is the claim, as stated in the brief, that the plaintiff 'knew or ought to have known that these stones standing on end must in some instances at least be more or less unstable, and that slight pressure would cause them to fall.' It is true that this state of facts might have been found from the evidence, but it is also true that the evidence was not conclusive that the plaintiff did not reasonably believe that the stones had been safely placed, and that the danger which he encountered did not exist."

Duties with respect to track walker.—No duty as to signals, lookout, speed or the like for the benefit of a track walker is ordinarily owed in the operation of a train. Bennett v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (Ia. 1921) 183 N. W. 424.

e. Violation of Safety Appliance Act as Negligence (p. 1283)

Effect of noncompliance.—Violation of the safety appliance act is negligence per se. Steward v. Webash R. Co., (Neb. 1921) 182 N. W. 496. See also Flanagan v. Hines, (1920) 108 Kan. 133, 193 Pac. 1077.

Boiler Inspection Act.—In an action under this act the plaintiff may recover for injuries caused by the violation of the federal Boiler Inspection Act, § 2 [8 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1200.] Cochran v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (Kan. 1921) 198 Pac. 685.

Ash Pan Act.—In Ft. Worth, etc., R. Co. v. Smithers, (Tex. 1921) 228 S. W. 637, it appeared that the ash pan of a locomotive was so out of order that the cover could not be closed by the use of the lever. A round house employer, failing to close the pan by the lever, started to leave the locomotive cab to go under the locomotive to close it, and in so doing fell by reason of the slippery condition of the floor of the cab. It was held that the violation of the Ash Pan Act [8th Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1199] was the proximate cause of the injury.

f. Effect of Section on Particular Doctrines or Maxims

(1) In General (p. 1283)

The res ipsa loquitur doctrine.—To same effect as original annotation, see Lamb v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., (1920) 179 N. C. 619, 103 S. E. 440, wherein the court said:

"It is urged for the defendant that the court in its charge erroneously recognized the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur as applying to the case, and we were referred to numerous decisions of the federal court to the effect that the position in question has no application to cases between employer and employee. These decisions, however, arose prior to the enactment of the Employers' Liability Act or in cases which did not come under its provisions. The position withdrawing cases of employee and employer was due chiefly to the prevalence also of the fellow-servant doctrine by which an employer was relieved from liability for injuries due solely to the negligence of the fellow servant and from the uncertainties as to the cause of the injury thereby created; the facts in nearly all of the cases indicating the negligence by some fellow servant as the more probable cause of the injury. The statute having, as we have seen, abolished the fellow-servant doctrine, there is doubt if the federal courts will adhere to the distinction adverted to in cases controlled by its provisions. The contrary has been held in So. Ry. v. Derr, 240 Fed. 73, 153 C. C. A. 109, and this would seem to be the correct deduction from the premises."

(2) Fellow Servant Doctrine (p. 1284)

In general.—To same effect as second paragraph of original annotation, see DeBlaur v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 984; Cott v. Erie R. Co., (1921) 231 N. Y. 67, 131 N. E. 737; Myers v. Payne, (Mo. App. 1921) 227 S. W. 633; Corbett v. Hines, (N. H. 1921) 112 Atl. 796; Fields v. Director General of Railroads, (1920) 86 W. Va. 707, 104 S. E. 767.

Fellow servant need not be engaged in interstate commerce.—To same effect as original annotation, see Hines v. Keyser, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 772.

Particular instances—Operating locomotive without lookout.—Where the backing of a locomotive without the fireman acting as a lookout results in a section hand being run over and killed, the case is one of the negligence of a fellow servant and within the purview of this act. Cervona v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (N. J. 1920) 114 Atl. 14.

Moving train without warning to employee.—Where a train standing in a depot is moved backward without any notice to an employee engaged in removing lamps from the rear of the train with the result that he is killed, such act constitutes negligence under this act. Grijnuik v. McAdoo, (N. J. 1920) 113 Atl. 920.

Handling hand car.—The act of a fellow servant in letting go his corner of a hand car, whereby another engaged with him suffers a rupture from the sudden added strain, gives rise to a cause of action under the act. Karagas v. Union Pac. R. Co., (Mo. App. 1921) 232 S. W. 1100.

2. Persons Entitled to Sue

b. Personal Representatives (p. 1287)

Personal representative must sue.—To same effect as original annotation, see Swank v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (N. J. 1920) 111 Atl. 44.

Ancillary administrator—Appointment and powers.—"While ordinarily primary administration should be granted in the state of the intestate's domicile, it cannot be said that the courts of another state, having jurisdiction, must necessarily wait for proceedings to be brought in the domiciliary state,—especially where the only assets in either state are a right of action for death under the federal act." Thus where a railroad employee, a resident of Massachusetts, is killed in the course of his employment in New York, an administrator appointed in the latter state, prior to any administration of the estate in Massachusetts, has a legal right to bring an action in New York under this act and may compromise the claim. McCarron v. New York Cent. R. Co., (Mass. 1921) 131 N. E. 478.

3. Pleadings

a. In General (p. 1295)

State laws govern in matters of pleading where the suit is brought in a state court. Ecclesive v. Great Northern R. Co., (1920) 58 Mont. 470, 194 Pac. 143.

Joinder of counts.—The plaintiff may join a count under the statute with one at common law, and abandon at the trial that which is unproved. Miller v. Schaff, (Mo. 1921) 228 S. W. 488.

Reference to other federal acts.—Though a complaint states specifically that the action is under the Employers' Liability Act and makes no reference to any other act, the Safety Appliance Act, Boiler Inspection Act and the like, are thereby drawn into the case. Kilburn v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Mo. 1921) 232 S. W. 1017.

Sufficiency of complaint generally.—See Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Little, (Ind. 1921) 131 N. E. 762.

b. Particular Allegations (p. 1301)

That the plaintiff was engaged in interstate commerce must be shown by appropriate allegations of the complaint. Ecclesive v. Great Northern R. Co., (1920) 58 Mont. 470, 194 Pac. 143.

c. Amendments to Pleadings (p. 1302)

In general.—To same effect as original annotation, see Swank v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (N. J. 1920) 111 Atl. 44, wherein it appeared that at the close of the case, but before the court's charge, plaintiff was permitted, over the defendant's objection, to amend the complaint by adding as one who would suffer pecuniary loss, besides the widow, a child, who at the death of plaintiff's intestate was in ventre sa mere, but who was born in the interim between the filing of the complaint and the trial, and also to amend by adding, in addition to the charge in the complaint that "the defendant by its servants and agents failed and neglected to give any warning of the approach of said train," a further allegation setting forth distinctly as an act of negligence that the foreman or person charged with giving notice of the approach of the train failed to give notice. Defendant insisted that these amendments so materially altered the complaint as to practically charge a different cause of action, and for that reason came within the prohibition of the statute limiting such actions to two years after the cause of action arose. Answering this contention, the court said:

"The power to amend is defined in sections 23 and 24 of the supplement to our Practice Act (P. L. 1912, p. 381), which confers upon the court the power to permit 'before or at the trial the statement of a new or different cause of action in the complaint or counterclaim.' Whether this would permit the statement of a new or different cause of action after the limitation prescribed by statute in which to bring the action had matured, we find it unnecessary to determine, for we do not consider that the amendments amounted to the statement of a new or different cause of action, but merely expanded or amplified what was already alleged in support of the action, and therefore related back to the commencement of the action and were not affected by the intervening lapse of time. Seaboard Air Line v. Renn, 241 U. S. 290, 36 Supp. Ct. 567, 60 L. ed. 1006; Texas & Pacific Ry. v. Cox, 145 U. S. 593, 12 Sup. Ct. 905, 36 L. ed. 829; and Missouri, Kansas & Texas Ry. Co. v. Wulf, 226 U. S. 570, 33 Sup. Ct. 135, 57 L. ed. 355, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 134. The first amendment did not add a new party to the suit, for the general administratrix remained the sole plaintiff, and all it did was to set forth the child as another dependent of decedent, and the second amendment merely amplified the acts of negligence already complained of, and neither could in any sense be said to state a new or different cause of action."

4. Practice and Procedure

a. In General (p. 1306)

Rules of practice and procedure generally.—To same effect as original annotation, see Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Wheeler, (Ind. App. 1920) 129 N. E. 40.

Defense as affected by state rule of practice.—In an action under this act a substantive federal defense duly asserted cannot be lessened or destroyed by a state rule of practice. Brant v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1920) 294 Ill. 606, 128 N. E. 732.

b. Election (p. 1311)

Between Employers' Liability Act and Safety Appliance Act.—An action to recover damages resulting from death of an employee may be predicated on both the Employers' Liability Act and the Safety Appliance Acts and the plaintiff may go to the jury on as many grounds of recovery as the evidence tends to establish, under proper instructions as to each, without electing between the acts mentioned. Flanagan v. Hines, (1920) 108 Kan. 133, 193 Pac. 1077.

e. Form of Verdict (p. 1317)

Special finding as to assumed risk.—A special finding that the plaintiff's intestate "should have known the danger of the act which resulted in his death" does not require the setting aside of a general verdict for the plaintiff. Schantz v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (N. D. 1920) 180 N. W. 517.

5. Evidence

d. Presumptions (p. 1320)

Proof of injury alone creates no presumption of negligence.—To same effect as original annotation, see Payne v. Bucher, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 38. See also Harness v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1920) 86 W. Va. 284, 103 S. E. 866; Southern R. Co. v. Adams, (Va. 1921) 105 S. E. 566 (finding of body of section hand beside track).

Employee engaged in interstate commerce.—There is no presumption that the duties performed by a railway employee on a train constituted of both interstate and intrastate commerce, were performed in the latter commerce. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Polk, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 518, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1920) 266 Pa. St. 335, 109 Atl. 627.

e. Burden of Proof (p. 1321)

Employee engaged in interstate commerce.—One asserting a claim or remedy against a railway company under a state workmen's compensation law, growing out of an occurrence in which there are constituents of interstate commerce, is charged with the burden of proving that the employee was, at the time of the injury, actually engaged in interstate commerce, so as to avoid the application of the Federal Employers' Liability Act. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Polk, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 518, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1920) 266 Pa. St. 335, 109 Atl. 627.

Employer engaged in interstate commerce.— "As for the evidence, it was that plaintiff was moving freight as we have indicated, but neither the origin nor destination of the freight was shown. The burden as to this question was on defendant, since it must be held to knowledge of the actual movement of freight committed to its care. Osborne v. Gray, 241 U. S. 16, 36 Sup. Ct. 486, 60 L. ed. 865. It was open, therefore, to the jury to find that the freight which plaintiff was handling was moving in intrastate commerce." American R. Express Co. v. Compton, (Ala. 1921) 87 So. 810.

6. Damages

b. Actions for Death

(1) In General (p. 1323)

Recovery against carrier is no bar to an action against a joint tortfeasor. Moore v. Omaha Warehouse Co., (Neb. 1921) 182 N. W. 597.

(2) Pecuniary Loss (p. 1325)

In general.—The measure of damages for death in an action under the federal Employers' Liability Act is the amount which deceased, if he had lived, would have contributed to his beneficiaries, and not the fair cash equivalent of his full yearly earning capacity payable in annual installments until his death. Fallulah Falls R. Co. v. Davis, (Ga. App. 1921) 105 S. E. 712.

The essentials to recovery are dependency and pecuniary loss. Bennett v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (Ia. 1921) 189 N. W. 424, wherein it was said: "We are at a loss to know how the quantum of damages in this case can be ascertained without proof of her life expectancy and without proof of contributions. The federal act limits the recovery to those relatives for whose benefit the administrator sues as are shown to have sustained actual pecuniary loss."

c. Recovery by Widow and Children

(1) In General (p. 1327)

Effect of separation without support.—In Southern R. Co. v. Miller, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 376, it was contended that only nominal damages be recovered by an employee's wife in an action for his death, because she and her husband had separated soon after their marriage and he had not contributed to her support. Answering this contention, the court said: "There had been no divorce, and nothing appears to show that she might not at any time have enforced her conjugal rights under the laws of Virginia. This being so, she was entitled to substantial damages, if the jury found in her favor, as seems to be plainly held by the Supreme Court in New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Harris, 247 U. S. 367, 372, 38 Sup. Ct. 535, 62 L. ed. 1167."

(2) Action by Widow (p. 1330)

Proof of wages paid to other employees in similar positions.—In an action under this act by a widow to recover damages for the death of her husband, it is competent for her to prove what the employer is paying at the time of the trial to employees engaged in exactly the same line of work as that in which the decedent was engaged. Swank v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (N. J. 1920) 111 Atl. 44.

(3) Actions by Children (p. 1330)

Adult children are not, in the absence of proof of actual dependency, entitled to recover for the death of their father. Hines v. Walker, (Tex. 1920) 225 S. W. 837.

d. Actions for Death of Son (p. 1331)

Evidence of existence and dependency of parents.—It has been held that there was sufficient evidence to show that the parents as beneficiaries of the action had been injured and had sustained pecuniary loss by the death of their son, where although there was no direct proof that the decedent's father and mother were living at the time he was killed, there was evidence that the decedent's parents lived in Poland, and that for several years before going into the army the decedent had sent them money monthly and that after leaving the army he had sent them money at different periods, the last being on a date so shortly before his death that the return card of the remittance was not received until after his death. Smith v. Payne, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 1.

7. Questions for Court and Jury (p. 1334)

Negligence of carrier.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Hines v. Logan, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 105 (providing safe place to work); Hines v. Keyser, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 772; Director Gen. of Railroads v. Bennett, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 767 (defective car on track at point of narrow clearance); Southern R. Co. v. Miller, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 376 (failure to provide employee with equipment).

Negligence of fellow servants.—In an action under this act the question of the negligence of the fellow servants of the plaintiff's testate is one for the jury to determine. Reed v. Director General of Railroads, (N. J. 1921) 113 Atl. 146; Cervona v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (N. J. 1920) 114 Atl. 14.

Proximate cause of employee's death.—Where there is evidence that the railroad company was negligent in maintaining tall-tales near one of its bridges, the question of the proximate cause of the death of a brakeman who was struck by the bridge and killed, is one for the jury. Brant v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1920) 294 Ill. 606, 128 N. E. 732.

8. Appeal and Error (p. 1336)

Power to reduce verdict.—A state appellate court may reduce a verdict and need not reverse and remand in case of an excessive recovery at least in a case where there is no finding of contributory negligence so that the question of comparative negligence does not enter. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Leinen, (1920) 144 Ark. 454, 223 S. W. 1. And see Crecelius v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1920) 284 Mo. 26, 223 S. W. 413, wherein a verdict was reduced though the comparative negligence doctrine had been applied by the jury.

I. CONSTRUCTION OF SECTION (p. 1340)

The distinction between assumed risk and contributory negligence.—To the same effect as the original annotation see Pryor v. Williams, (1920) 254 U. S. 43, 41 S. Ct. 36, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1917) 272 Mo. 613, 200 S. W. 53.

II. CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE

1. In General (p. 1342)

Negligence of employee as sole proximate cause of injury.—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original annotation, see Dahlen v. Hines, (E. D. Wis. 1920) 267 Fed. 926; Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Edwards, (Ind. 1921) 129 N. E. 310; Olson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. (S. D. 1921) 182 N. W. 454. No degree of contributory negligence, however great, will bar a recovery of any damages. It is only when the plaintiff's act is the sole cause—where the defendant's act is no part of the causation—that defendant is free from liability under the act. Fitzpatrick v. Hines, (Neb. 1920) 179 N. W. 410.

In an action for the death of a bridge carpenter it appeared that becoming frightened at the approach of a train he left a place of safety on the pilings of the bridge beside track, attempted to run along the track ahead of the train and was run over and killed. There was no negligence in the management of the train. It was held that his negligence was the sole cause of his death. Olson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (S. D. 1921) 182 N. W. 454. And where a brakeman is charged with the sole responsibility of placing cars on a siding, and he leaves them so near another track that there is not clearance, by reason of which fact he is injured while riding on the step of the engine, the situation of the cars being plainly visible to him and the engine being controlled by his signals, his negligence is the sole cause of the injury, though there was no "derailer" at the switch. Ingram v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., (1921) 181 N. C. 491, 106 S. E. 565. But where the brakeman who had cut out a car called the attention of the conductor to the fact that it was too close to the main track and was ordered to leave it where it was, the negligence, if any, of the brakeman was not the sole cause of a subsequent injury to him caused by the dangerous proximity of the car to the main track. Authement v. Louisiana Western R. Co., (1920) 147 La. 816, 86 So. 215. And contributory negligence of the employee is not sufficient in itself to defeat an action under this Act if the employer was also guilty of negligence that operated to cause the injury. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Little, (Int. 1921) 131 N. E. 762.

2. Effect on Amount of Damages (p. 1344)

Doctrine as to effect of contributory negligence in general.—To same effect as original annotation, see Brant v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1920) 294 Ill. 606, 128 N. E. 732; Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Edwards, (Ind. 1921) 129 N. E. 310; Bennett v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (Ia. 1921) 183 N. W. 424; Howard v. New York, etc., R. Co., (1920) 236 Mass. 370, 128 N. E. 422; Crecelius v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1920) 284 Mo. 26, 223 S. W. 413; Greenwell v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. (Mo. 1920) 224 S. W. 404; Wagner v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Mo. App. 1921) 232 S. W. 771; Stricklin v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1921) 59 Mont. 367, 197 Pac. 839; Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Estes, (Tex. 1921) 228 S. W. 1087.

3. Effect of Violation of Safety Appliance Acts (p. 1340)

General principles.—To same effect as original annotation, see Foley v. Hines, (1920), 119 Me. 425, 111 Atl. 715.

The question of contributory negligence is immaterial where a violation of the Safety Appliance Acts is shown. Payne v. Connor, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 497; Flanagan v. Hines, (1920) 108 Kan. 133, 193 Pac. 1077.

Violation of Boiler Inspection Act.—Where the injured employee was not engaged in interstate commerce, the fact that the injury arose from a violation of the Boiler Inspection Act will not prevent the defense of contributory negligence. Patterson v. Director General of Railroads, (1921) 115 S. C. 390, 105 S. E. 746.

4. Evidence (p. 1348)

Burden of proof.—Where under a state statute contributory negligence is a matter of defense and the burden of proving it is placed upon the defendant, such statute applies in an action under this Act. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Wheeler, (Ind. App. 1920) 129 N. E. 40, wherein it was said: "It is next contended that the court erred in refusing to give instruction No. 1, tendered by appellant, and reading as follows:

"The court instructs the jury that the rights of the plaintiff and the liabilities of the defendant in this case are governed exclusively by the law enacted by the Congress of the United States known as the federal Employers' Liability Law, and no laws of the state of Indiana can have any effect in determining the rights of the plaintiff or the liability of the defendant."

"In order to show that this instruction is not a correct statement of the law, and that there was no error in refusing to give the same, it is only necessary to call attention to the question of contributory negligence, and the burden of proof upon that subject. The right of appellee to recovery is materially affected by section 362, Burns 1914, which provides that in an action for damages brought on account of the alleged negligence of a defendant causing personal injuries or death, it shall not be necessary for the plaintiff to allege or prove the want of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, or on the part of the person for whose injuries or death the action is prosecuted. Contributory negligence in such cases, under the law of this state, is a matter of defense, and applies to an action in the courts of this state to recover damages under the federal Employers' Liability Act. Except in so far as the act itself modifies or changes the rules of practice and procedure or substantive law, cases arising under the act shall be heard and determined in the state courts in the same manner as would like cases arising under the laws of this state, and in cases like the one now under consideration. The act not defining negligence, and there being no federal common law, it is the common law of the state which must be looked to in determining whether the acts complained of amount to negligence, or whether the injured party was guilty of contributory negligence. While the question as to the existence of contributory negligence is to be determined according to the law of the state, the effect of such negligence, when established, is controlled by the federal law."

5. Instructions to Jury (p. 1349)

Common law count abandoned.—Where a count under the common law is abandoned at the trial and the only remaining count is under the act, no instruction on contributory negligence need be given. Miller v. Schaff, (Mo. 1921) 228 S. W. 488.

6. Questions for Jury (p. 1351)

Question not submitted to jury.—Where the record shows that the question whether the damages should have been reduced by reason of the plaintiff's contributory negligence was not submitted to the jury the court on appeal will not disturb the verdict on that ground. Dunton v. Hines, (D. C. Me. 1920) 267 Fed. 452.

Defective boiler.—In Cochran v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (Kan. 1921) 198 Pac. 685, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that the dropping of the crown sheet of a locomotive boiler was not due to the failure of the injured engineer to keep water in the boiler, was stated by the court as follows:

"It may be true, as defendant claims, that the great preponderance of the evidence showed that leaky stay bolts would not cause the crown sheet to drop, and showed that the accident could not have occurred except for the failure of the engineer to keep a sufficient supply of water on the crown sheet. On the other hand, there was the testimony of the engineer, the fireman, and the rear brakeman, who rode on the engine, that just before the explosion the ejectors were working properly, and that there was a half glassful of water over the crown sheet. The fireman testified that it had not been more than a minute before the explosion that he looked at the water glass, and that it showed a half glass of water, indicating that the crown sheet was covered to a depth of about four inches; that he looked at the water glass on this trip every five minutes or oftener, and opened the gauge cocks when between stations. This witness also testified that when he received the engine in the morning at the round house he noticed that two or three of the stay bolts were leaking, and that when the engineer sent the telegram two-thirds of the bolts were leaking badly. The jury might have discredited all of the testimony showing that sufficient water was kept upon the crown sheet up to the time it dropped; but the jury did just the contrary, and it must be said that there was sufficient evidence to sustain the finding."

I. IN GENERAL (p. 1352)

Construction generally.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Payne v. Connor, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 497; Foley v. Hines, (1920) 119 Me. 425, 111 Atl. 715; Ft. Worth, etc., R. Co. v. Smithers, (Tex. 1921) 228 S. W. 637 (violation of Ash Pan Act).

Effect limited to terms of act.—To same effect as original annotation, see De Baur v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 964; Smith v. Hines, (1920) 119 Ms. 442, 111 Atl. 761; Nagle v. Hines, (N. J. 1920) 112 Atl. 195; Wintermute v. Oregon-Washington R., etc., Co., (1921) 98 Ore. 431, 194 Pac. 420; Southern Pac. R. Co. v. De la Cruz, (Tex. 1921) 228 S. W. 108; Harness v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1920) 86 W. Va. 284, 103 S. E. 866.

Decision of federal court as controlling.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Pryor v. Williams, (1920) 254 U. S. 43, 41 S. Ct. 36, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1917) 272 Mo. 613, 200 S. W. 53.

A violation of Boiler Inspection Act precludes the defense of assumption of risk. Kilburn v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Mo. 1921) 232 S. W. 1017.

Pleading.—Though the complaint states specifically that it is founded on the Employers' Liability Act and makes no reference to any other act, the Safety Appliance Act, Boiler Inspection Act and the like are available to preclude the defense of assumption of risk. Kilburn v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Mo. 1921) 232 S. W. 1017.

Instructions.—In Brant v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1920) 294 Ill. 606, 128 N. E. 732, it was held that in view of the provisions of this section there was no error in the court giving an instruction to the jury which in substance directed it that public policy does not permit an employer, by contract or written application, to relieve itself from liability for injuries occasioned by its negligence or to impose upon its employees a risk that the law imposes upon the employer.

II. PRINCIPLES GENERALLY AS TO ASSUMPTION OF RISK

1. In General (p. 1355)

Unusual or extraordinary risks.—To same effect as original annotation, see Director-Gen. of Railroads v. Templin, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 483.

Although an employee has general knowledge of an extraordinary danger to which he is exposed and has been given some warning, he will not be held to have assumed the risk where the testimony is uncertain as to the time when the warning was given, and as to whether it was calculated to impress him with a real and abiding sense of the peril he was about to encounter. Southern R. Co. v. Miller, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 376.

Distinction between assumed risk and contributory negligence.—Assumption of risk and contributory negligence are separate and distinct defenses, and where the evidence raises a question of fact as to assumption of risk it is error to refuse to instruct thereon and to give instructions on contributory negligence. McAdoo v. Anzellotti (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 268.

Contributory negligence and assumption of risk are distinct although they may rest largely on the same facts. The principle established by the cases is that assumption of risk is an implied condition of the contract between the employer and the employee, while negligence of the employee contributing to his hurt arises from his own tort. Wintermute v. Oregon-Washington R., etc., Co., (1921) 98 Ore. 431, 194 Pac. 420.

2. Knowledge as Affecting (p. 1356)

Actual knowledge or obvious risk.—To the same effect as original annotation, see McAdoo v. Angellotti, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 268; See v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Mo. App. 1921) 228 S. W. 518.

An employee assumes those risks and dangers which are ordinarily incident to the employment in which he voluntarily engages, but he does not assume extraordinary risks incident thereto, or risks due to the negligence of his employer or of those for whose conduct the employer is responsible, until he becomes aware of such negligent act, defect, or disrepair and of the risk arising therefrom, or unless the danger is so obvious that an ordinarily prudent person, under similar circumstances, would have observed and appreciated it.

Where an employee is without knowledge of such unusual risks, and not chargeable with notice thereof because of their obvious nature, he is under no duty to anticipate and take precautions to discover them, but has the right to assume that the employer has exercised proper care in providing a reasonably safe place and a reasonably safe system or method in and under which to work. Harness v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1920) 86 W. Va. 284, 103 S. E. 866. To same effect, see McMullen v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1920) 107 Kan. 274, 191 Pac. 306; McIntyre v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (Mo. 1921) 227 S. W. 1047.

No recovery can be had under the federal Employers' Liability Act, by an employee who was injured as the result of defects in a claw bar he was using, where such defects were so obvious that an ordinarily prudent employee would not have used it. Pryor v. Williams, (1920) 254 U. S. 43, 41 S. Ct. 43, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1917) 272 Mo. 613, 200 S. W. 53.

Effect of want of knowledge.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Hines v. Logan, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 106; Fagan v. Central R. Co., (N. J. 1920) 111 Atl. 32.

Unsafe place to work.—A railroad telegrapher who, knowing that a box car fitted up as a telegraph office was cold and wet and that the roof leaked, nevertheless consented to work therein, assumed the risk of injury. Newberry v. Central of Georgia R. Co., (M. D. Ala. 1921) 271 Fed. 117.

"Simple tool" doctrine.—A scaffold erected under the direction of a gang boss is not a "simple tool" which the workman using is presumed to understand as well as the employer, and the risk is not assumed in the absence of knowledge of a defect. Smith v. Hines, (1920) 108 Kan. 151, 194 Pac. 318.

3. Acts of Master or Superior as Affecting (p. 1357)

No promise to remedy defect.—In Nickas v. Hines, (Wis. 1921) 183 N. W. 151, it appeared that a section hand engaged in taking up old ties complained to his foreman that his pick was dull. The foreman said that no others could be had until the tool car came, which it was known would not arrive until several weeks later. The section hand was thereafter injured by reason of the dull pick pulling loose from a tie. It was held that (a) the complaint did not show an apprehension of danger and (b) there was no promise to remedy the defect, so that the risk of continuing work with the dull pick was assumed.

4. Negligence of Employer (p. 1359)

Rule stated.—To same effect as original annotation, see Fagan v. Central R. Co., (N. J. 1920) 111 Atl. 32, wherein the court said: "While an employé assumes the risks and dangers ordinarily incident to the employment in which he voluntarily engages, so far as these are not attributable to the negligence of the employer or those for whose conduct the employer is responsible, the employé has a right to assume that the employer has exercised proper care with respect to providing a reasonably safe place of work, reasonably safe appliances, and a reasonably safe system or method of work, and is not to be treated as assuming a risk that is attributable to the employer's negligence until he becomes aware of it, or it is so plainly observable that he must be presumed to have known it."

Order to do dangerous act.—Where the master orders and commands the servant to do an act involving extraordinary danger, the servant is justified in obeying the command, and by so doing does not assume the risk. In such case the risk is taken by the master. Schantz v. Northern Pac. Co., (N. D. 1920) 180 N. W. 517.

5. Negligence of Fellow Servant (p. 1361)

Rule stated.—To same effect as original annotation, see Howard v. New York, etc., R. Co., (1920) 236 Mass. 370, 128 N. E. 422; Reed v. Director General, (N. J. 1921) 113 Atl. 146.

III. PARTICULAR EMPLOYEES (p. 1362)

Brakeman.—To same effect as first paragraph of original annotation, see Director Gen. of Railroads v. Templin, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 483.

A brakeman who is injured by being caught between a car and a fence while standing on the side step of the car when it is being switched into a commercial yard, situated on a spur track from the defendant's main line, must be held to have assumed the risk, where it is shown that he had assisted in switching cars into the yard many times prior to the accident and knew of the proximity of the fence to the track. Nagle v. Hines, (N. J. 1920) 112 Atl. 195.

But it cannot be said as a matter of law that a brakeman assumed the risk of injury from being struck by cars kicked at an unusual rate of speed in the yards. Payne v. Connor, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 497. Nor does a rear brakeman on a string of cars which is making a gravity switch assume the risk that other brakeman will negligently allow the cars to collide with standing cars so as to throw him off by the shock of the collision. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Porter, (Ala. 1920) 87 So. 288. So, a trainman does not assume the risk of injury from the negligent act of the engineer in stopping the train with a sudden jar. Lamb v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., (1920) 179

N. C. 619, 103 S. E. 440. And an employee lawfully boarding a freight train at a proper place has the right to assume that he will not be subjected to jerks of extraordinary violence, where they are so sudden, unexpected, and unusual as not to be obvious; and whether a particular jerk is one ordinarily accompanying the movement of freight trains, or extraordinary and unusual, generally is a question for the jury to determine. Harness v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1920) 86 W. Va. 284, 103 S. E. 866.

While it was a frequent thing to make up trains by kicking and shoving cars, the switching crew in this instance knew that some member of the train crew would be required to attend to coupling the air hose on the train being made up, and the deceased is not held to have assumed the risk of the sudden and violent propulsion of the cars against him without warning, under the circumstances shown by the record, and which the jury found was done in a negligent manner. McMullen v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1920) 107 Kan. 274, 191 Pac. 306.

Engineers.—An experienced railway engineer assumes the risk, under the federal Employers' Liability Act, of any injury that he may receive when leaning outside the cab window by reason of the fact that the end of the arm of a mail crane—a device adopted with the conditions imposed by the Post Office Department—is, when in use, as near to the train as 14 inches, the farthest point at which a bag can be picked up from a crane being 29 inches, and a less distance than that being essential to insure getting the bag. Southern Pac. Co. v. Berkshire, (1921) 254 U. S. 415, 41 S. Ct. 162, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (Tex. 1919) 207 S. W. 323.

Section men, trackwalkers and repairmen.—In order to safeguard himself from the ordinary dangers of his employment, as the law requires him to do, a track employee is not called upon to seek out and discover extraordinary dangers imposed on him by his employer, but may assume that his employer and his agents have exercised for his safety such care as the circumstances reasonably admit. Smith v. Payne, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 1. In this case there was testimony that the engine of the train which struck the decedent was operated by the defendant without a headlight, under conditions of darkness and storm which made it difficult or impossible for the decedent, though on watch for a train, to see it, and for his companion to know of its approach until it had come abreast of him and had struck the decedent. The court said: "If lack of evidence of negligence on the part of defendant was the ground on which the learned trial judge entered judgment of nonsuit, we think he fell into error, for he could not have held as a matter of law, that the operation of a train in a forward movement, at night, without a headlight on the engine, was an ordinary danger of the trackworker's employment, the risk of which he had assumed."

A section hand does not assume the risk arising from the negligent acts of his foreman. Swank v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (N. J. 1920) 111 Atl. 44.

An employee working under a car on a siding without having a blue flag displayed does not as a matter of law assume the risk of a car being negligently kicked on to the siding and against that under which he is working. Pendergrass v. Southern R. Co., (1920) 114 S. C. 78, 103 S. E. 150.

A trackwalker assumes the ordinary risks of injury from the operation of trains over the tracks which he is required to inspect. Bennett v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (Ia. 1921) 183 N. W. 424.

An employee entering a round house with which he is familiar and passing between the pits instead of taking a safe path, when the round house was full of steam, assumes the risk. Wintermute v. Oregon-Washington R., etc., (1921) 98 Oregon 431, 194 Pac. 420.

A boiler maker who in violation of a rule attempts to tighten a plug in a locomotive boiler without blowing off the steam assumes the risk. Flack v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (Mo. 1920) 224 S. W. 415.

A blacksmith's helper using his hands instead of tongs provided for that purpose to place a mold in position under the hammer assumes the risk of injury from the sudden falling of the hammer. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. De la Cruz, (Tex. 1921) 228 S. W. 108.

Workman in ditch.—A workman in a ditch was held to have assumed the risk of the bank caving, in See v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Mo. App. 1921) 228 S. W. 518, the facts being stated as follows: "The ditch was eight feet deep six feet wide and was across and under defendant's track. Plaintiff had helped dig the ditch. At the point where the dirt fell a place on the side of the ditch had been smoothed for a brace. At the time the dirt fell there was one set of timbers in the ditch and another place prepared to receive the timbers. A huge tile was to be pulled into and along the ditch by means of a rope and plaintiff, together with another man and defendant's foreman, were in the ditch, the plaintiff engaged in getting the rope untangled. Preparations were also being made to put in a set of timbers close to the point where the dirt fell, and this shoring was being done at the time. Plaintiff was an experienced workman, having been engaged therein for five or six years. The wall or side of the ditch was perpendicular, and, while there were no manifestations that the dirt was about to cave off, yet there was nothing to prevent plaintiff from seeing and knowing of the danger or likelihood of a cave-in if such existed. The dirt which fell from the side of the bank fell from the top to the bottom in a cup shape and came to a feather edge. There was evidence on plaintiff's side that at the time the dirt fell plaintiff had an adz in his hand and was engaged in shoring on that side at the moment the dirt fell."

IV. BURDEN OF PROOF (p. 1363)

General rule—Assumption of risk.—To same effect as first paragraph of original annotation, see Brant v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1920) 294 Ill. 606, 128 N. E. 732; Howard v. New York, etc., R. Co., (1920) 236 Mass. 370, 128 N. E. 422; Corbett v. Hines, (N. H. 1921) 112 Atl. 796.

Knowledge of danger.—In order to show assumption of risk, it must be established by a preponderance of the evidence that the servant had knowledge of and appreciated the danger incident to the act in the course of his employment about to be performed from which the injury resulted. Schantz v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (N. D. 1920) 180 N. W. 517.

V. QUESTIONS FOR COURT AND JURY (p. 1363)

General rule.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Director Gen. of Railroads v. Templin, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 483; Brant v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1920) 294 Ill. 606, 128 N. E. 732; Cervona v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (N. J. 1920) 114 Atl. 14; Fagan v. Central R. Co., (N. J. 1920) 111 Atl. 32.

Brakeman.—Whether a brakeman assumes the risk of being thrown from a car by the jar resulting from its passing over a defective joint in the track is for the jury. Miller v. Schaff, (Mo. 1921) 228 S. W. 488. The court said: "The evidence pertaining to the severity of the usual jolts and impacts in handling trains on a reasonably sound track, and of respondent's knowledge thereof, has nothing to do with the inquiry in this case. Had respondent's foot been thrown from the stirrup by the car he was getting upon striking another in the process of coupling, or had it resulted simply from a stopping of the train reasonably necessary and to be expected, that evidence would have been more relevant. The negligence charged here is that the track was negligently permitted to remain in a highly defective and dangerous condition and that respondent's injury resulted therefrom. We are not prepared to say that a main line track with broken ties, spikes out, little or no ballast, and joints which sink as much as six inches under passing cars, is shown to be a track in usual and ordinary condition for tracks of the kind, and that the jars and jolts resulting from such a condition were assumed by appellant as a matter of law. Respondent was under no duty to inspect appellant's track for defects of the kind which the evidence tends to prove injured him. He was a brakeman and in a department of the service distinct from that of maintenance of way. He testified he did not know of the low joint at the place of injury until the car struck it. There was evidence tending to show an absence of broken ties or any patent condition of disrepair at this point. In such circumstances, it cannot be said the evidence conclusively proved assumption of risk."

Engineer.—Whether an engineer assumed the risk as an incident to his employment of injury from the carrier's negligence in placing a defective car at a place of admittedly great danger has been held to be a question for the jury. Director Gen. of Railroads v. Bennett, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 767.

Round house employee.—Whether a round house employee assumed the risk of falling by reason of the wet and greasy condition of the floor of the locomotive cab in which he was working was, in Ft. Worth, etc., R. Co. v. Smithers, (Tex. 1921) 228 S. W. 637, held to be for the jury. The assumption of the risk from the absence of lights in the round house was also held to present a jury question.

Vol. VIII, p. 1364, sec. 5. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 585.]

II. APPLICABILITY OF SECTION GENERALLY (p. 1365)

Contract with express messenger.—A common carrier by express which neither owns nor operates a railway, but which, under contract with a railway company, conducts an express business over such railway, the railway company furnishing the express car, the motive power, and the train operatives, and the express company paying for this service, is not a "common carrier by rail road," and, therefore, not affected by the provision of this section, invalidating any contract whereby a carrier subject to that act exempts itself from any liability under it. Thus, an express messenger in charge of express matter which a railway is transporting under a contract with the express company may validly stipulate, as a condition of his employment by the express company, that neither that company nor the railway company shall, under any circumstances or in any case, be liable for any injury which he may receive while on the railway company's trains as such messenger, whether caused by the negligence of the railway company or otherwise, and that he will assume all and every risk incident to such employment, from whatever cause arising, thereby assenting to the contractual arrangement between the two companies exempting the railway company from liability for such injuries, and obligating himself to the express company to refrain from asserting any liability against it or the railway company on account of any such injuries. Wells Fargo & Co. v. Taylor, (1920) 254 U. S. 175, 41 S. Ct. 93, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing

(C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 249 Fed. 109, 161 C. C. A. 161.

Vol. VIII, p. 1369, sec. 6. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 335.]

- I. Limitation of action.
- II. Jurisdiction and venue.
- III. Removal to federal court.

I. LIMITATION OF ACTION (p. 1370)

Time of accrual of cause of action.—Where a suit to recover damages for the homicide of an employee of a railway company is brought under this section, by the administratrix of the deceased employee, the action is barred by the statute of limitations, where it was commenced more than two years after the date of the homicide sued for, but within two years from the date of the appointment of the administratrix. Seaboard Air Line Ry v. Brooks, (Ga. 1921) 107 S. E. 878.

Application of Each-Cummins Act.—The provision of the Act of Feb. 28, 1920, ch. 91, sec. 206 (f) [1920 Supp. Fed. Stat. Anno. 79] that "the period of federal control shall not be computed as a part of the periods of limitation in actions against carriers, or in claims for reparation to the commission for causes of action arising prior to federal control," does not apply to actions under this Act. Jones v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (N. J. 1921) 114 Atl. 331.

Introducing barred cause by amendment.—Where after the removal of an action for negligence it is sought by amendment to bring the cause within the Federal Employers' Liability Act, the limitation prescribed by this section will apply if the time stipulated has elapsed. Newberry v. Central of Georgia R. Co., (M. D. Ala. 1921) 271 Fed. 117, wherein it was said: "While ordinarily a new cause of action may be introduced by amendment, the established limitation on the operation of its relation to the commencement of the suit is that if the amendment introduces new matter or a different cause of action not within the lis pendens as to which the statute of limitations has operated a bar at the time of making the amendment, the statute of limitations is as available as if the amendment were a new and independent suit. * * *

"Section 6 of the federal Employers' Liability Act provides that:

"'No action shall be maintained under this act unless commenced within two years from the day the cause of action accrued.'

"More than two years had elapsed before the rejected amendment to the complaint was offered. Manifestly this limitation of two years applies here, where the complaint made in the state court alleged no facts to bring the case within the purview of the federal Employers' Liability Act, and more than two years had elapsed after the cause of action arose and before the amendment was offered."

II. JURISDICTION AND VENUE (p. 1372)

Concurrent jurisdiction of state and federal courts.—To same effect as first paragraph of original annotation see Miner v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1920) 147 Minn. 21, 179 N. W. 483.

Effect of failure of cause of action under statute.—Where a cause of action under the federal statute fails in an action in a state court, judgment may be rendered under the state law despite the fact that the defendant is a nonresident corporation and was deprived of the right of removal by the joinder of the cause of action under the federal act, provided the joinder was in good faith and not merely to defeat removal. Polluck v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., (S. D. 1921) 183 N. W. 859.

Requiring dismissal of suit in another state.—In view of the concurrent jurisdiction given by this section, the probate court of a state may require an administratrix appointed by it to dismiss a suit brought by her under the act in another state, on the ground that the public policy of the appointing state, declared in a statute, forbids the solicitation of personal injury suits to be prosecuted outside the state, where the defendant resides therein. In re Spoo's Estate, (Ia. 1921) 183 N. W. 580.

III. REMOVAL TO FEDERAL COURT (p. 1374)

Removal prohibited for any cause.—To the same effect as original annotation, see Newberry v. Central of Georgia R. Co., (M. D. Ala. 1921) 271 Fed. 117.

Diverse citizenship.—To same effect as first paragraph of original annotation, see Miner v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1920) 147 Minn. 21, 179 N. W. 483.

Vol. VIII, p. 1378, sec. 9. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 335.]

Venue of action.—An action for death under this section may be brought in the state where the workman resided though the fatal injury was received in another state. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Smitha, (Tex. 1921) 232 S. W. 494.

Vol. VIII, p. 1383, sec. 1. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 581.]

Construction.—This statute provides penalties, and therefore is, perhaps, within the rule as to strict construction in respect to its interpretation; yet, it being one based upon public policy and in the interest of greater public safety, its provisions will not be so technically and narrowly defined as to destroy the leading and manifest purpose of Congress. U. S. v. Boston, etc., R. Co., (O. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 89 (reversing D. C. Mass. 1920) 265 Fed. 800).

The phrase "movement of any train," as used in this section, applies to movements of trains in railroad yards for the purpose of switching cars as well as to movements of trains over main-line tracks. Hence, a brakeman engaged in connection with an engine in moving cars in and about a railroad yard for the purpose of making up trains, comes within the scope of the Act. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 609. The court said: "The railroad company's sole insistment is that the act applies only to movements of trains over main-line tracks, and not to mere yard movements, such as were made in this case. In construing the act, it must be borne in mind that its purpose, as expressed in its title, was to promote the safety of employees, as well as travelers, upon railroads. Of course, in carrying out this purpose, the mischief sought to be avoided was the mental and physical exhaustion of employees liable to result from permitting or requiring them to remain on duty for excessive lengths of time. The act provides that the term 'railroad,' as used in the act, shall include 'all the road in use by any common carrier operating a railroad.'

"As is well pointed out in the opinion of the learned judge of the court below, no train is excluded from the provisions of the act, except wrecking or relief trains, and there is no limitation as respects the kind of movement or the place in which it shall be made. In this situation, bearing in mind the purpose of the legislation and appreciating that men may as easily become exhausted by overwork in the movement of trains in and about yards as they may in so-called main-line movements, and thus imperil their own, as well as the safety and lives of others, we would have no hesitation, even if we considered this a case of first impression, in holding that Lathero, while at work in the Altoona yards, was engaged in or connected with the movement of a train, and hence that the railroad company is subject to the penalty prescribed in the act for a violation thereof. As was said by Mr. Justice Lurton in Chicago, Ind. & L. Ry Co. v. Hackett, 226 U. S. 559, 564, 33 Sup. Ct. 581, 584 (57 L. Ed. 906), in construing a statute of Indiana, to hold that yard movements such as were made in the Altoona yard were not movements of a train 'would be to make the act meaningless as to the most dangerous class of work which falls to the lot of railroad employees.'

"But we are also of the opinion that the question has been set at rest by the decision of the Supreme Court in United States v. Brooklyn Terminal, 249 U. S. 296, 307, 39 Sup. Ct. 283, 63 L. Ed. 613, where it was held that crews engaged in moving a locomotive with 7 or 8 cars between docks of the Brooklyn Eastern District Terminal and its warehouses or team tracks, a distance of over a mile, were engaged in the movement of a train within the act in question, although there was no main-line movement, in the sense that the train was made up and moved over the main-line tracks as distinguished from yard tracks. It is sought to distinguish that case from the case at bar upon the ground that in the former the crews were not engaged in yard work, but in a part of main-line transportation. We are unable, however, to see any such distinction; if there is any, it is in theory rather than fact. In our judgment, the employees in that case were engaged in yard movements quite as much as was the employé in the case at bar.

"Although a distinction has been drawn in the cases as to one of the sections of the federal Safety Appliance Acts (27 Stat. 531; 29 Stat. 85; 32 Stat. 943; 36 Stat. 298,) between a train consisting of an engine and cars which have been assembled and coupled together for a run or trip along the road, and movements in railroad yards, whereby cars are assembled and coupled into outgoing trains, and whereby incoming trains, which have completed their run, are broken up, and the latter held not to be within the provisions of those acts (U. S. v. Erie R. R. Co., 237 U. S. 402, 35 Sup. Ct. 621, 59 L. Ed. 1019), yet, as pointed out by the Supreme Court in the Brooklyn Terminal Case, and by the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Second Circuit, when that case was before it (Brooklyn Eastern District Terminal v. U. S., 239 Fed. 297, 290, 152 C. C. A. 275), those decisions are not applicable to cases arising under the Hours of Service Act."

- I. Purpose and scope.
- II. Constitutionality and construction.
- V. Employees within act.
- VI. "On duty."
- VII. Night and day offices.

I. PURPOSE AND SCOPE (p. 1388)

Purpose.—"The controlling purpose of Congress in the enactment of this statute was the protection of the lives of the traveling public, by preventing the employment of men charged with responsible duties as to movements of trains by telegraph or telephone for so long a time as to render them incapable of performing their duties efficiently." U. S. v. New York, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 321.

"The statute was intended to promote the safety of employees and the traveling public by affording sufficient time for recreation and rest, so that small periods during their hours of duty for meals would not offer any opportunity for rest as contemplated." U. S. v. Cornwall, etc., R. Co., (M. D. Pa. 1920) 268 Fed. 680.

While the leading idea of the statute is the limitation of hours, Congress sought to make its purpose operative by a classification based upon night and day service. U. S. v. Boston, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 89 (reversing (D. C. Mass. 1920) 265 Fed. 800).

Circumstances of each case control.—Each case must be decided on its own peculiar conditions, since what might under some circumstances be such a period of release as would break the continuity of service and afford such an opportunity for rest and release from responsibility from mental tension as it is the purpose of the act to secure, might be insufficient under other circumstances. U. S. v. New York, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 321. In this case the court held that the operator was not employed more than nine hours in a twenty-four hour period where the following facts were shown: Upon the days in question this operator went on duty at 4 p. m. and remained until from 7:20 to 7:27 p. m., when he was released from duty by the train dispatcher to return at periods varying on the different days from 8:35 p. m. to 9:20 p. m., during which time he was not subject to any call, nor required to remain upon the railroad premises, and could do what he chose with his time, which he employed, as he testified, sometimes in sleeping, sometimes in reading, and sometimes attending the theater. After this definite release he returned to his post and remained to an hour varying from 10 p. m. to 10:14 p. m., when he was again definitely released, under the same conditions, by the train dispatcher from service on 1 day until 12:15 a. m., and upon the other 4 days until 12:30 a. m., and after his return to duty at the end of the second period of release he remained on duty until 12:52 a. m. upon 2 of the days in question, 12:55 a. m. upon 2 others, and 12:58 upon the fifth, when he received a third release from duty until 3 o'clock a. m. upon two days, 3:05 a. m. upon the third day, 3:20 a. m. upon the fourth day, and 2:45 a. m. on the fifth day, and after his return to duty at the expiration of this release he remained at his post until 3:35 a. m. on one day, 3:58 a. m. upon the second day, 3:41 a. m. the third day, 4:10 a. m. the fourth day, and 3:55 a. m. the fifth day. Upon these days the aggregate of his actual service varied from 5 hours 13 minutes upon one day to 6 hours 9 minutes upon another, and his periods of release aggregated from 5 hours 46 minutes to 6 hours 41 minutes.

II. CONSTITUTIONALITY AND CONSTRUCTION (p. 1389)

Construction.—In interpreting this provision it must be given such reasonable, sensible construction as will promote its beneficial purpose and effect the intention of the Congress that enacted it. U. S. v. Cornwall, etc., R. Co., (M. D. Pa. 1920) 268 Fed. 680.

V. EMPLOYEES WITHIN ACT (p. 1391)

Bridge tender.—A person who is employed by an interstate railroad as a bridge tender and who is injured while instructing a co-employee in his duties, is within the scope of this act. Desmond v. Boston, etc., R. Co., (Mass. 1921) 129 N. E. 596.

VI. "ON DUTY" (p. 1396)

Dividing hours of service.—In U. S. v. Boston, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 89, it was said: "We think the significant idea and the real purpose of Congress was to declare that telegraph and telephone operators should not be kept at the post of duty more than 9 hours out of the 24 in night and day service, and, that being the public policy sought to be enforced, that the purpose should become operative, unless the terms of the statute are so indefinite and uncertain as to defeat it."

"According to the agreed statement in the case before us, the operators were relieved from duty for certain periods. But still the hours of service during the 24 exceeded 9 hours, and we think the reliefs under a description so general as that of the agreed facts should be viewed as negligible intermissions (United States v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 224 Fed. 667, 140 C. C. A. 177) or as said in United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 220 U. S. 37, 44, 31 Sup. Ct. 362, 55 L. 361, 'trifling interruptions,' not to be considered, and not as such rest from the strain of excessive hours of duty as to defeat the operation of the statute, which declares that no operator shall be permitted to remain on duty for a longer period than 9 hours in any 24."

Continuity of service—Period allowed for meals.—To same effect as original annotation, see U. S. v. Cornwall, etc., R. Co., (M. D. Pa. 1920) 268 Fed. 680.

Relieved train crew riding on train.—The members of a relieved train crew are not "on duty" within the meaning of this act when they are riding on one of their employer's trains from the point where they were relieved to a nearby town. Payne v. Industrial Commission, (1921) 296 Ill. 223, 129 N. E. 830.

VII. NIGHT AND DAY OFFICES (p. 1400)

In general.—Regarding what constitutes night offices and day offices within the meaning of this section, the court in U. S. v. Boston, etc., R. Co., (D. C. Mass. 1920) 265 Fed. 800, said: "The meaning of the statute, as has been pointed out (U. S. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 220 U. S. 37, 31 Sup. Ct. 362, 55 L. Ed. 361; U. S. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. R. Co., 211 Fed. 897, 123 C. C. A. 275), is far from clear. It divides stations or places into those that are 'continuously operated night and day' and those 'operated only during the daytime.' Giving the language its ordinary meaning, it is evident that there might be, and in fact there are, places operated longer than 'during the daytime,' but which are not 'continuously operated night and day.' As everybody knows, many stations in country districts are kept open for the public convenience during the early hours of the evening as well as during the daytime, observing roughly the same hours of opening and closing as stores in their vicinity. The railroad agent at these places not infrequently does such telegraphic work as the business of the railroad requires, in addition to his other duties.

"It is settled that the expression 'continuously operated night and day' is to be understood as including stations which are closed part of the night, if they are operated during the daytime and a substantial portion of the night. U. S. v. Atchison, etc., supra. The same decision makes it clear that the mere keeping open of a station after 6 p. m. does not bring it within the 9-hour class. As applied to the case before me, the most significant word in the act is 'night.' Unless an office be operated in the night, as well as during the day, the 9-hour limitation does not apply."

"What constitutes night operation is a question of fact. The division into day and night which the statute contemplates apparently refers to the business day; e. g., 'a day watchman' and 'night watchman,' 'day shift' and 'night shift.' It would hardly be contended that a station kept open in the early evening primarily as an accommodation to the public was 'operated' during the night. On the other hand, if kept open after hours when the public which it served would be likely to do business with it, and for purposes connected with the running of trains, it would be a night office."

"Nine o'clock in the evening is evidently on the border line. In such cases it seems to me that the purpose for which the station was kept open is the decisive factor. If it be primarily for the accommodation to the public, the station would not, I think, be operated at night within the statute. This seems to me to be what Congress intended. 'Operated,' in the statute, signifies more than 'kept open.' The very looseness of the language was perhaps not unintentional. It is to be remembered that too severe limitation on hours of service at small stations will result in their being closed, thereby inconveniencing the public, without any corresponding advantage."

"The agreed statement throws no light on the purpose for which the stations in question were kept open during the evening, nor on the sort of work then done at them. It devolves on the plaintiff to establish the facts essential to recovery."

"Stations continuously operated night and day."—This phrase should not be taken in its strict sense as meaning every moment of the time either of the day or of the night. U. S. v. Boston, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 89.

"It appears that, where an office is open such a length of time as to require more than one operator with a 13-hour period, then, there being two or more operators require to complete such period, 9-hour periods would become practicable. And such, indeed, was the view of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the administrative body charged with the enforcement of the act, who, on March 8, 1908, made a ruling—287(g):

"The commission interprets the phrase 'continuously operated night and day' as applying to all offices, places, and stations operated a portion of the day and a portion of the night, a total of more than 13 hours. The phrase 'operated only during the daytime' refers to stations which are operated not to exceed 13 hours in a 24-hour period, and is not considered as meaning that the operator thereat may be employed only during the daytime."

"It has been repeatedly decided that the ruling of an administrative body charged with the enforcing of a law is not lightly to be disregarded, but is entitled to great weight." U. S. v. Cornwall, etc., R. Co., (M. D. Pa. 1920) 268 Fed. 680.

The words "night" and "day" were apparently used in a general sense, and not in the sense that, in and of themselves, the words were to be accepted as arbitrarily decisive of a classification based strictly upon a division between night and day. This seems obvious, because the word "night," in its common acceptance, means the dark half of the day; that part of the complete day during which the sun is below the horizon; the time from sunset to sunrise; while "day" means the period during which the sun is above the horizon; the interval of light, in contradistinction to that of darkness, or to night. And the division between day and night which the statute contemplates does not refer to the business day established by the railroads, based upon shifts in respect to day watchman and night watchman, and similar rules and regulations of railroads. U. S. v. Boston, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 89.

Offices "operated only during the daytime."—An office open fifteen hours a day in winter and sixteen and a half hours in summer is not such an office as was contemplated by Congress in the term "operated only during the daytime." But an office may be operated a portion of the night and a portion of the day and yet fall beneath the class which is called "daytime" offices. U. S. v. Cornwall, etc., R. Co., (M. D. Pa. 1920) 268 Fed. 680, wherein the court said:

"It is reasonable to suppose that Congress intended in general to include in the 'daytime' class such offices as had the lighter business, which could be readily handled by one operator, and to include in the 'night and day' class those offices which had such amount of business as would require several operators, in which case only would it be practical to have a 9-hour limit. Therefore in the former class the 13-hour period was allowed; in the latter, only a 9-hour period."

V. Excuses for excess of service.

3. "Casualty or unavoidable accident."

VII. Evidence.

V. EXCUSES FOR EXCESS OF SERVICE

3. "Casualty or Unavoidable Accident" (p. 1411)

In general.—A delay to a train by an unavoidable accident is not a license to a carrier for any officer or agent to keep the crew of such train on duty over 16 hours. To excuse such service it must be shown that the officer or agent made at least some effort to avoid excess service. U. S. v. Geer, (W. D. Pa. 1920) 268 Fed. 385.

Unavoidable accident.—In an action under this act for the recovery of penalties it has been held that a judgment for the defendant is proper where among the facts found by the court below and set down in its special findings were these: That the delays of the three trains on account of which the employees were detained in service more than 16 consecutive hours were caused by unavoidable accidents, which were the results of causes not known to the carrier or its officers or agents in charge of the employees at the times they respectively left the terminals; that these causes and accidents could not have been foreseen; that the detention of these employees on these trains on duty more than 16 hours was caused wholly by these accidents; and not that the keeping of them on duty for more than 16 consecutive hours could not have been avoided by the defendant by the exercise of reasonable diligence after the respective accidents. U. S. v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 1.

Adding time of delay to statutory period.

—A railroad company does not have the right to add the time the respective trains were delayed by accident or casualty to the sixteen hours that the employees might be held in service. Denver, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 63.

VII. EVIDENCE (p. 1416)

Burden of proof.—Where the original delay of a train was caused by unavoidable accidents or casualties the burden of proof was on the railroad company to show that it exercised the required diligence to relieve the crews and to prevent the excess service of its employees. Denver, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 63.

"Excess service may be justified under the facts, but the excuses embodied in the proviso are separate and affirmative defenses which must be specially pleaded and established." U. S. v. Geer, (W. D. Pa. 1920) 268 Fed. 385.

Admissibility on cross-examination.—An objection to a question on cross-examination of the superintendent of the defendant as to a delay on another date than that specified in the action is properly sustained where no evidence in regard thereto had been brought out on his direct examination. U. S. v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 1.

Vol. VIII, p. 1418, sec. 4. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 584,]

Interpretations and regulations of Interstate Commerce Commission.—While the act in question provides for suits by the United States for recovery of the penalties provided, its enforcement is largely committed to the Interstate Commerce Commission, because it is expressly provided that such commission shall execute and enforce its provisions, and all powers are extended to such commission, together with the power to extend the period within which common carriers shall comply with its provisions, and therefore, while interpretations and regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission are not conclusive upon courts, in view of the concurrent power and responsibility contemplated by the statute, due weight should be given to the interpretations of its terms by that tribunal. U. S. v. Boston, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 89.

Purpose of act.—See Wilson v. Central Vermont R. Co., (Mass. 1921) 131 N. E. 169.

Order of Director General to cancel ratings on silk held to present judicial question and preliminary injunction was granted. Cheney v. Hines, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 310.

Regulation limiting recovery for loss of baggage.—"The authority of the Director General of Railroads to promulgate a baggage regulation limiting the amount of recovery to $100, where no value is declared on intrastate as well as interstate transportation, the sufficiency of the notice of the regulation, and every objection raised to the application of the Federal Control Act have been settled by decisions of the Supreme Court adversely to the plaintiff's claim. . . . Northern Pacific Railway Co. v. North Dakota, 250 U. S. 135, 39 Sup. Ct. 502, 63 L. ed. 897; Hines v. Burnett, (Va. 1921) 107 S. E. 657."

"Railroads and systems of transportation."—In Hines v. Dahn, (C. C. A. 8th Cir.

1920) 267 Fed. 105, the court, in discussing the meaning of the words "railroads and systems of transportation," as used in this and other sections of the Federal Control Acts, said:

"We do not think there can be any doubt about the meaning of the words 'railroads and systems of transportation' as used in the several acts of Congress and the proclamation of the President. In our judgment they refer only to the physical properties which constituted the system or systems. The system is composed of the roadbed, tracks, engines, cars, and other appurtenances which are used in the transportation of passengers and freight from one place to another. The system is entirely distinct from the corporate entity which may own or manage the system. The President had no authority, nor did he pretend by the language of his proclamation, to take over the railroad corporation or corporations, which owned the several systems. The whole Federal Control Act is opposed to any such interpretation, because it provides for the payment to the different corporations of a compensation for the use of the several systems and elaborate provisions are made for the protection of the rights of both parties. The United States owned no railroad stock and did not seek to obtain control of the railroad corporations. The fundamental idea underlying the decision of the United States to take control of the systems was that it was necessary so to do in order that the great task of transporting troops, munitions, and supplies might be carried on by the different systems to the exclusion of all other traffic if necessary. Any further control than to accomplish this object was not needed, sought, or obtained."

Effect of federal control.—"The railroad properties within the continental United States, while federal control lasted, were organized into a unified national system of transportation under a single head, the Director General of Railroads." Globe, etc., F. Ins. Co. v. Hines, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 774.

Legislation and the powers conferred on the President, and through him upon the Director General, the government in no sense became a common carrier, but exercised control over the carriers to the end that said systems of transportation be utilized for the transportation of troops, war material, and equipment to the exclusion, so far as may be necessary, of all other traffic thereon. U. S. v. Geer, (W. D. Pa. 1920) 268 Fed. 385.

Act as suspending Safety Appliance Acts, etc.—"Keeping in view the purpose, and only purpose, of the legislation, it would be very anomalous if the existing acts of Congress, such as the safety appliance acts, the hours of service acts, and others passed solely for the purpose of protecting the public, should be held to be suspended or repealed, and that the nation could not thus exercise the extraordinary powers of government for national preservation without temporarily invalidating the existing legislation passed for the protection of the traveling public." U. S. v. Geer, (W. D. Pa. 1920) 268 Fed. 385.

Act as suspending state control over intrastate rates.—See Public Service Commission v. New York Cent. R. Co., (1920) 230 N. Y. 149, 129 N. E. 455, 14 A. L. R. 449.

Suits for money due from government under act.—See Wilson v. Central Vermont R. Co., (Mass. 1921) 131 N. E. 189.

Right of action against railroad.—Where at the time the cause of action arose for injuries caused by a collision the railroad was being operated by the Director General of Railroads, the liability if any for such injuries was held to be on the Director General and a demurrer to an action against the railroad company was sustained. Galehouse v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (N. D. Ohio 1921) 274 Fed. 370.

In Morgan's Louisiana, etc., R., etc., Co. v. Johnson, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 207 it was declared: "The alleged cause of action arose while the government was operating the lines of railroad of the defendants, and the suit was brought after the promulgation of General Order No. 50 of the United States Railroad Administration, which required such a suit to be brought against the Director General. The question of the right of the plaintiff to maintain the suit against the defendants, or either of them, was duly raised, and the action of the court in allowing the recovery complained of is duly presented for review. The court erred in overruling the objections of the defendants to the maintenance of the suit against them."

In Erie R. Co. v. Caldwell, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 947, it was said: "The Director General of Railroads having lawfully taken full possession and control of this company's property, the company itself could not be liable for negligence resulting in injury to employees or others during the time its property was being operated by governmental agencies over which it had no control."

But no liability exists and no action can be maintained against the Director General of Railroads on a cause of action arising prior to the period of federal control. An action for such a cause must be brought against the railroad. Standley v. U. S. Railroad Administration, (N. D. Ohio 1920) 271 Fed. 794.

Jurisdiction of prosecution for larceny.—A state court has jurisdiction of a prosecution for larceny of goods en route on a railroad under federal control. State v. Ferree, (W. Va. 1921) 107 S. E. 126.

1918 Supp., p. 760, sec. 3.

Termination of power of board.—The power of a board organized under this section terminates with the end of federal control, though the dispute before it is one with employees and provision is made in the Transportation Act of 1920 [1920 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. 72 et seq.] for the board to try such disputes. Gregg v. Stark, (1920) 188 Ky. 834, 224 S. W. 459.

1918 Supp., p. 762, sec. 10.

Repeal of section.—While this section expressly provides that actions might be brought by and against carriers, and judgments rendered "as now provided by law," that provision was subsequently nullified by General Order No. 50, which directed that actions should be brought against the Director General. Globe, etc., F. Ins. Co. v. Hines, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 774; Blevins v. Hines, (W. D. Va. 1920) 264 Fed. 1005.

Effect of act on state laws as to rates.—Where a railroad was required by the state law to carry passengers between certain points within the state at a rate not exceeding two cents per mile, it was held that an order of the Director General of Railroads issued under this section increasing the rate of carriage of passengers both interstate and intrastate to three cents per mile was a constitutional exercise of the war power of Congress. New York Cent. R. Co. v. Public Service Commission, (N. D. N. Y. 1920) 268 Fed. 558, wherein it was further held that this Act did not repeal, but merely suspended, a state statute regulating intrastate passenger rates and that on the termination of federal control the state continued to control the rates ex proprio rigore.

General orders 18 and 18a are invalid. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Turner, (Tex. 1920) 225 S. W. 383; Young v. Hines, (Mo. App. 1921) 229 S. W. 417; Hill v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., (1920) 180 N. E. 428, 105 S. E. 19.

General order 50 is invalid. American R. Express Co. v. Compton, (Ala. 1921) 87 So. 810; Hines v. Mauldin, 146 Ark. 170, 225 S. W. 639; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Rogers, (1920) 146 Ark. 232, 225 S. W. 640; Parkinson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1920) 43 S. D. 161, 178 N. W. 293; Pullman Co. v. Uribe, (Tex. 1920) 225 S. W. 189; Beebe v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., (Wis. 1921) 182 N. W. 743.

"General Order No. 50, promulgated by the Director General, October 28, 1918, directing that actions at law, suits in equity and other proceedings thereafter brought in any court based on contract binding upon the Director General, claim for death or injury to person, or for loss and damage to property arising since December 31, 1917, growing out of the possession, use, control or operation of any railroad or system of transportation by the Director General, which action, suit or proceeding but for federal control might have been brought against the carrier company, shall be brought against William G. McAdoo, Director General, and not otherwise, is an interpretation of the laws regulating Federal Control of Railroads by that department of the government charged with the duty of executing the same, and such interpretation has always been regarded by the courts with great respect." Hines v. Dahn, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 105.

Proceedings in admiralty not excluded by this section, see Hines v. Sangstad Steamship Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 502.

Right to sue in name of Director General.—The act and the rules promulgated by federal authority in pursuance thereof, did not intend either to extinguish or impair, but, on the contrary, expressly preserved, the rights of parties to prosecute to judgment, in the name of the Director General of Railroads any cause of action against the railroad companies to which they as parties were entitled under the federal, state, or common law. Rose v. Hines, (1920) 25 Ga. App. 791, 104 S. E. 794.

When the carrier in question was at the time of the shipment operated by the United States government through an officer called "Director General of Railroads," suits for the freight were properly brought in the name of that official against the party or parties, whether consignor or consignee, or both, who procured the transportation to be made. Clemons v. Payne, (Ga. App. 1921) 105 S. E. 623.

Suits against Director General—Liability for fire damage.—The Director General is liable for personal injury to one burned while attempting to put out a fire started by a locomotive not equipped with a proper spark arrester. Hines v. Bellah, (Ga. App. 1921) 106 S. E. 559.

The liability of the Director General of Railroads is not limited to actions brought solely to enforce common carrier liabilities by virtue of the provisions of section 10 of the Federal Control Act. He may be joined with a railroad company as defendant in an action brought to recover damages caused by a railroad fire. Anderson v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., (1920) 146 Minn. 430, 179 N. W. 45.

Liability for injury at crossing.—The liability of the Director General is not limited to claims growing out of a breach of a contract to transport passengers or freight but extends to an accident at a highway crossing. Hines v. Zellner, (1920) 25 Ga. App. 272, 103 S. E. 97.

Action for conversion.—An action against the Director General and the carrier for conversion is not an action against the government and special authority from the United States to one is not necessary. Chambers v. Hines, (Tex. 1920) 225 S. W. 200.

Double damages for killing stock imposed by a state statute, may be recovered, despite federal control. Chilton v. Hines, (1920) 205 Mo. App. 130, 224 S. W. 18.

Suit by soldier.—A soldier in active service has no right of action against the Director General for injuries due to the negligent management of the train in which he is being transported. Moon v. Hines, (Ala. 1921) 87 So. 603, 13 A. L. R. 1020.

Liability of railroad to suit—In general.—Federal control does not change the status of a railroad company as to liability to suit. It may be sued after being taken over by the government the same as before. Hines v. Henaghan, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 831. To same effect, see Hines v. Atlantic Refining Co., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 839; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson, (1920) 204 Ala. 150, 85 So. 372. See also Ellis v. Atlanta, etc., R. Co., (N. D. Ga. 1921) 270 Fed. 279.

Liability of railroad for acts or omissions of Director General.—The owner companies were not made liable for acts or omissions of the Director General in operating the railroads by the provision of this section, that carriers, while under federal control, should remain subject to all existing laws and liabilities, and may sue and be sued as heretofore. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Ault, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 593, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1919) 140 Ark. 572, 216 S. W. 3. To the same effect, see Norfolk-Southern R. Co. v. Owens, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 587, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1919) 178 N. C. 325, 100 S. E. 617.

Cause of action arising prior to federal control.—Where the cause of action arose prior to federal control the suit is properly brought against the carrier rather than the Director General. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Spears, (Ky. 1921) 232 S. W. 60.

Cause of action not arising against railroad as common carrier.—This section did not exclude an action against a carrier under federal control on a cause of action not arising against it as a common carrier. Hines v. Sangstad Steamship Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 502.

A criminal prosecution for failure to comply with a state statute relating to the maintenance of waiting rooms will not lie where the railroad was under federal control at the time of the acts complained of. Com. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1920) 189 Ky. 309, 224 S. W. 847, 11 A. L. R. 1448.

An action against Pullman Company for negligence was held to be improperly brought while railroads were under federal control, in Pullman Co. v. Sweeney, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 764.

Employees within Employers' Liability Act.—A railroad employee injured while the railroad was under federal control is within the terms of the Employers' Liability Act. (8 Fed. St. Ann. (2d ed.) 1208); Hite v. St. Joseph, etc., R. Co., (Mo. 1920) 225 S. W. 916.

Award under state workmen's compensation act against corporation under federal control.—See Pullman Car Lines v. Riley, (Del. 1921) 114 Atl. 920.

Action as one arising under law of United States.—An action against the Director General of Railroads for the alleged negligence of railroad employees is one arising under a law of the United States. Blevins v. Hines, (W. D. Va. 1920) 264 Fed. 1006.

Statutory presumption of negligence applicable.—The statutory presumption of negligence as set forth in state statute, is applicable in a suit against the Director General of Railroads, where the damage sued for was caused by the running of the locomotives or cars of any of the railroads under his control as Director General. Hines v. McCook, (1920) 25 Ga. App. 396, 103 S. E. 690.

Venue of action against Director General, see Ellis v. Atlanta, etc., R. Co., (N. D. Ga. 1921) 270 Fed. 279.

Service of process on the agents of the Director General who were formerly the agents of the carrier is insufficient to bring him into court. Lanier v. Pullman Co., (1920) 180 N. C. 406, 105 S. E. 21.

Form of designating Director General in complaint.—In Hines v. Wimbish, (1920) 204 Ala. 350, 85 So. 765, the Director General was held to be sued as an official and not as an individual, the caption of the complaint being as follows: "Walter D. Hines as Director General of Railroads of the United States, and the Director General of Railroads of the United States, defendants."

Parties defendant in action under Employers' Liability Act against railroad under federal control.—See Atkinson v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (1921) 137 Md. 632, 113 Atl. 110.

The substitution of the Director General by consent obviates all question as to the validity of general order 50 and neither the plaintiff nor the Director General can object to the substitution. Kersten v. Hines, (1920) 283 Mo. 623, 223 S. W. 586.

Though it is improper to join the carrier as a party to a suit for a cause arising under federal control, the Director General is not prejudiced thereby, and an appellate court may dismiss as to the carrier and affirm as to the Director General. Morrell v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (N. D. 1920) 179 N. W. 922. See also Adams v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., (Mo. 1921) 229 S. W. 790.

The joinder of the carrier in an action against the Director General, while proper, is a useless formality whose mission may be ignored. Hines v. Collins, (Tex. 1921) 227 S. W. 332; Hines v. Parry, (Tex. 1921) 227 S. W. 339.

Under general order No. 50 a suit for personal injuries against a railroad while it is under federal control, should be brought against the Director General rather than against the railroad. Mardis v. Hines, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 171.

Defenses available to Director General.—The Director General of Railroads, so far as the suit was concerned, was merely a substitute for the railroad company, and, under the law, assumed all of its burdens; and we think it quite clear that under the act of Congress of March 21, 1918 (40 Stat. 456, c. 25, § 10,) the Director General of Railroads was precluded from making any defense in this case that the railroad company itself could not have made. Hines v. McCook, (1920) 25 Ga. App. 396, 103 S. E. 690.

Punitive damages may be recovered against the Director General for a willful violation of duty by train employees producing a crossing accident. Davis v. Elzey, (Miss. 1921) 88 So. 630.

A provision on judgment for execution while erroneous is harmless and does not affect its validity. Hines v. Robey, (Tex. 1920) 225 S. W. 201.

Garnishment.—The Director General is not put to garnishment, which is in effect, as regards the garnishee, primarily only an action or suit in personam by the defendant, brought in the plaintiff's name against the garnishee, ancillary to the main action at law between the plaintiff and the defendant, and is not in effect a "levy" until the actual payment or delivery to the court or judicial officer of the moneys or properties after judgment against the garnishee. Hines v. Minor, (Ga. App. 1921) 105 S. E. 851.

Appeal bond.—So much of general orders 50 and 50a as provides that no appeal bond shall be required of the Director General, is invalid. Bryson v. Payne, (Tex. 1921) 232 S. W. 362.

Suits for statutory penalty.—The Director General is not made liable for statutory penalties for violation of state laws by the provisions of this section that carriers, while under federal control, shall be subject to all laws and liabilities as common carriers, whether arising under state or federal laws or at common law, and of § 15, that the lawful police regulations of the several states shall continue unimpaired. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Ault, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 593, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1919, 140 Ark. 572, 216 S. W. 3. wherein it was further held that the question whether the liability imposed by state statutes for violations of those statutes should be deemed compensation or penalty, presented a question not of state but of federal law, open to review in the federal supreme court on writ of error to a state court.

To the same effect as the above case, see Norfolk-Southern R. Co. v. Owens, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 597, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1919) 178 N. C. 325, 100 S. E. 617.

The Director General is not liable to a statutory penalty for failure to keep depot grounds lighted. State v. Hines, (Tex. 1921) 228 S. W. 667.

A statutory penalty for killing animals may be recovered. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Rogers, (1920) 146 Ark. 232, 225 S. W. 640.

1918 Supp., p. 763, sec. 11.

Evidence as to possession of goods stolen from others.—Where it was charged that defendant knowingly had and retained railroad tools and materials in his possession without any right or title thereto and without the consent of the United States and that said property was part of the property used in the operation of the railroad, it was held evidence was admissible of the possession of stolen goods other than those which the defendant was accused of stealing even though the goods belonged to another owner. Vaughn v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 451.

Sufficiency of evidence.—In Vaughn v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 451, the evidence showed that the plaintiff in error was a switchman for the Southern Pacific Company working in the Brooklyn yards at Portland, Or. It was shown by the evidence of the general foreman of the store department at the yards that there had been a standing shortage of journal bearings. Another witness testified that the railroad had had many complaints on account of articles missing from the Brooklyn yards and the caboose stores, etc., and that boxes in which journal brasses were kept had been broken into and the journals stolen. There was testimony that on February 21, 1919, a special agent of the United States Railroad Administration, accompanied by detectives, searched the defendant's residence and found in the basement thereof a sack of journal bearing brasses broken into small pieces, marked with the initials "O. W. R. & N." and "So. Pac. Co."; also four large pieces of babbitt metal, paint brushes which had been filed or rasped around the initials "S. P. Co.," so that the initials were scarcely legible, and one cold chisel with "S. P. Co." stamped on it, one hammer with the initials "S. P. Co.," and other articles marked "S. P." Another witness identified certain keys and locks and journal brasses found in the basement of the defendant's house as property of the Southern Pacific Company, and testified that he found in the pocket of defendant's trousers section house keys. There was evidence that the defendant had been seen carrying bundles away from the yards, and had been seen taking away plumbing material. This evidence was held sufficient to establish the corpus delicti. The foregoing considerations also were held to answer the contention that there was complete failure of proof that either the railroad or the government ever owned or used the property described in the indictment.

1918 Supp., p. 765, sec. 15.

"South Dakota Workmen's Compensation Law" was held applicable in suit against Director General of Railroads in Hines v. Meier, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 182.

REPLEVIN

Vol. VIII, p. 1425, sec. 934. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 766.]

Bond where property libelled for condemnation and forfeiture.—Under this section it has been held that where an automobile has been seized while being used to transport intoxicating liquor, an order may be made delivering it to the claimant on his giving a claimant's delivery bond in the sum for which the automobile has been appraised. U. S. v. One Chevrolet Automobile, (M. D. Tenn. 1920) 267 Fed. 1021.

RIVERS, HARBORS AND CANALS

Vol. IX, p. 12, sec. 2476. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 787.]

Determination of navigability.—A river having actual navigable capacity in its natural state, and capable of carrying commerce among the states, is within the power of Congress to preserve for purposes of future transportation, even though it be not at present used for such commerce, and be incapable of such use according to present methods, either by reason of changed conditions or because of artificial obstructions. Economy Light, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1921) 256 U. S. 113, 41 S. Ct. 409, 65 U. S. (L. ed.)

—, affirming (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 256 Fed. 792, 168 C. C. A. 138.

Vol. IX, p. 24. [Condemnation, purchase, etc.] [First ed., vol. VI, p. 827.]

State law as controlling.—This statute subjects such proceedings to the state laws only in respect to matters of procedure and not to matters of substance. In this connection it is further said: "The right to determine the necessity of the taking of property for public use, under the power of eminent domain, is necessarily incident to the sovereign power of the United States government to determine for itself whether it needs any particular property for such use. This right and power cannot be limited or affected by the laws of a state unless Congress so provides, and no federal legislation to that effect has been enacted." In re Condemnations, etc., (E. D. Mich. 1920) 266 Fed. 105.

Vol. IX, p. 33. [Condemnation of land for improvements, etc.]
[First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 608.]

Constitutionality.—This section is not unconstitutional as delegating to private parties the right of eminent domain. In this connection it is said of the act: "It merely provides that when, as here, the government desires to take private land necessary for a public use mentioned in the statute, but wishes to have such land donated by private interests, willing, but unable, to do so, because unable to purchase and acquire a valid title thereto, in that event the United States government, instead of receiving the land itself from such person, company, or corporation, as it would have the right to do (Act April 24, 1868, c. 194, 25 Statutes at Large 94, [9 Fed. St. Ann. (2d ed.) p. 24], may, under the circumstances mentioned, accept, from the private interests concerned, reimbursement of the expense of acquiring such land by condemnation; that is, payment of the just compensation which must be made therefor, when, and as, duly determined in condemnation proceedings properly brought in the name of, and by, the government against the owners of the land so needed. The government, not the private interest, condemns and takes the land. The only connection with the matter which such private interest has is its arrangement with the government to save the latter harmless from the cost of such taking." In re Condemnations, etc., (E. D. Mich. 1920) 266 Fed. 105.

Questions as to nature and necessity of use.—"It is well settled that the question whether the use for which property is sought to be taken as a public use is a judicial question." . . . "If the use for which any particular property is sought to be taken is a public use, the question whether such property is necessary for such use is a legislative question, and the determination thereof by the proper legislative body cannot be questioned in condemnation proceedings brought for the taking thereof." In re Condemnations, etc., (E. D. Mich. 1920) 266 Fed. 105.

The fact of inability to purchase the land desired is not a jurisdictional question which, like other facts on which the jurisdiction of the court depends is one of the issues in the case. The question whether the local interests have been unable to acquire the lands involved, as well as the necessity for using such lands really enters into and becomes a part of the broad question of the necessity for instituting condemnation proceedings which the Secretary of War, not the court, must decide. In re Condemnations, etc., (E. D. Mich. 1920) 266 Fed. 105.

"The duties and powers of the Secretary of War in connection with proceedings of this kind are confined to determining whether particular lands are needed in connection with any certain work of river and harbor improvement duly authorized by Congress, and, if such lands be so needed, to deciding whether condemnation proceedings are to be instituted in the name of the United States for the acquirement of such lands. In determining whether he will cause such proceedings to be instituted, the Secretary of War, acting within the exercise of 'his discretion,' must necessarily decide some questions, at least to his own satisfaction. When he has requested the Attorney General to institute and conduct such proceedings, it becomes the duty of the latter officer to comply with such request, and when the proceedings have been commenced questions arising thereafter, such as those concerning the nature of the use for which the land is sought, the amount of compensation to be made to the owners of such lands, the practice to be followed, and kindred questions, are to be determined in the condemnation proceedings. With none of these last-mentioned questions has the Secretary of War any official concern or connection. The duties imposed, and the powers conferred, upon him are ultimately to decide whether he will cause condemnation proceedings to be instituted. In making this decision, he must first determine the necessity for the taking. His determination as to the necessity of such taking is final, and not reviewable by the courts." In re Condemnations, etc., (E. D. Mich. 1920) 266 Fed. 105.

Delegation to government officials of power to determine necessity.—The power to determine the questions of the necessity of the use may be delegated by Congress to executive officials of the government, and the finding by such officials on this question, made in the exercise of such delegated power, is not subject to review by the courts. In re Condemnations, etc., (E. D. Mich. 1920) 266 Fed. 105.

Elements not affecting character of use.—"The mere fact that the taking of property for a public use will result in greater benefit to some persons than to others, or that private individuals contribute to the expense of such taking, does not affect the character of such use, or render it any the less public, within the meaning and scope of the law of eminent domain." In re Condemnations, etc., (E. D. Mich. 1920) 266 Fed. 105.

Use of property to improve navigation as public use.—Use of property by the United States, when necessary for the purpose of improving the navigability of navigable river, within its jurisdiction, is a public use for which it is entitled to take such property by the power of eminent domain." In re Condemnations, etc., (E. D. Mich. 1920) 266 Fed. 105.

A hearing on the question of necessity is not essential to due process of law in the sense of the Fourteenth Amendment. In re Condemnations, etc., (E. D. Mich. 1920) 266 Fed. 105.

Payment of compensation.—"While private property cannot be taken, even under the right of eminent domain, unless necessary for public use, and then only if just compensation be paid therefor, yet it is not necessary, in the absence of express constitutional or statutory requirements to that effect, that such compensation be paid before the actual taking of the property, provided that reasonably certain, prompt, and adequate provision for the payment of just compensation be made, or the public faith and purse be pledged for such payment." In re Condemnations, etc., (E. D. Mich. 1920) 266 Fed. 105, wherein it was held that the mere commencement of condemnation proceedings was not the taking of any property, and that the actual payment of compensation, therefore, need not precede or accompany the filing of the petitions. In re Condemnations, etc., (E. D. Mich. 1920) 266 Fed. 105.

Vol. IX, p. 37, sec. 8. [First ed., 1914 Supp., p. 369.]

Validity of contract binding government to pay more than amount appropriated.—The making of a contract binding the government to pay more than the amount appropriated was not within the power of the Secretary of War, under the River and Harbor Act of July 25, 1912, making an appropriation for completing a specified improvement, and providing in this section that whenever the appropriations made or authorized to be made for the completion of any river and harbor work shall prove insufficient therefor, the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, on recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, apply the funds so appropriated or authorized to the prosecution of the work,—especially in view of the provisions of U. S. R. S. § 3733, (see Vol. 8, p. 355) that no contract for any public improvement shall bind the government to pay a larger sum than the amount in the Treasury appropriated for the specific purpose, and of §§ 3722 (see Vol. 8, p. 351) and 5503 (see Vol. 7, p. 651), and of the Act of June 30, 1906, (see Vol. 3, p. 153) that no act shall be construed to authorize the execution of a contract involving the payment of money in excess of appropriations made by law unless such act shall, in specific terms, declare an appropriation to be made, or that a contract may be executed. *Sutton v. Ct. 563, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, modifying, and as modified, affirming (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 193.

Vol. IX, p. 42, sec. 1. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 796.]

Purpose.—The purpose of the statute is to prevent discharging or depositing matter into the harbor which will obstruct or injure it. Warner-Quinlan Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 503.

"Or any other matter of any kind."—"The statute enumerates the specific materials which, in the opinion of Congress, would ordinarily be deposited into the waters and would obstruct and injure the harbor, but made sure that it should not be obstructed or injured because of the failure to mention all the materials that might possibly be placed or deposited in the prescribed limits, and so Congress added the words, 'or any other matter of any kind.' This means, applying the maxim of ejusdem generis, matter of the same general class as before mentioned. The materials mentioned except acid, are mostly solids, and the injury which they would do the harbor would be to obstruct it. While obstruction is the principal injury Congress had in mind, it was not the only one; for 'acid' would not obstruct, but would corrode and be detrimental to boats, wharves, etc., and would thus be injurious to the harbor as such." Warner-Quinlan Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 503.

Refuse from refining of petroleum.—In Warner-Quinlan Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 503, it appeared that there came from the plant of the defendant a material described by the witness as "fuel matter," "sludge," "black oil," and "oil and tar." The court declared:

"'Sludge' is specifically mentioned in the act, and is defined by the Standard Dictionary as: 'Refuse, acid, or alkali from the refining of petroleum; muddy or pasty refuse of various kinds; slime of ores; the plate covering an opening in a boiler for removal of sediment; also, the sediment.'"

"This matter which came from the defendant's plant sometimes became solid and settled as a sediment. If it continued to be discharged or placed in the waters of the harbor, without restriction, it would in time obstruct and injure the harbor. Masters of boats would naturally and ordinarily object to entering waters covered with oil and tar. These would surely prove injurious to the harbor, if not actually obstructive. We think the evidence establishes that the matter coming from the defendant's plant would be both obstructive and injurious to the harbor, and included in that general class of matter forbidden to be placed, discharged, or deposited by any process or in any manner in the tidal waters of the harbor of New York."

Evidence required to sustain conviction.—

In order to sustain the conviction, it is necessary that the evidence show, first, that the supervisor, in pursuance of the statute, had prescribed limits in the tidal waters of the harbor of New York or its adjacent or tributary waters; and, second, that the defendant had, at or within the time or times specified in the indictment, placed, discharged or deposited by some process or in some manner some of the forbidden matter within those prescribed limits. Warner-Quinlan Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 503.

Vol. IX, p. 53, sec. 10. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 813.]

Parties who may complain of obstruction.—The only party who may complain of a dam as being in violation of this section is the United States, unless one is individually injured differently from the general public in degree and kind. Silvey v. Montgomery County, (S. D. Ohio 1921) 273 Fed. 202.

Loading crane projecting beyond edge of wharf and over navigable waters has been held an obstruction of such waters rendering the owner liable to a colliding vessel it appearing that it had been erected without making an application to the Secretary of War for his approval and authorization. F. S. Royster Guano Co. v. Outten, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 484.

Liability for obstruction.—In case of an obstruction deliberately placed in a navigable channel without giving any warning of it the owners will be responsible to owners of vessels injured thereby while themselves exercising due care. The Mahanoy, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 668.

Vol. IX, p. 56, sec. 11. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 815.]

Authority of Congress.—The right of the government to establish harbor lines is not exhausted by one exercise of the power but it may change these lines just as often as it may deem necessary in order to protect navigation from obstruction. U. S. v. Pennsylvania, etc., Dock Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 839.

Vol. IX, p. 58, sec. 13. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 816.]

Beached barge as "refuse."—Where the line, by which a barge is being towed, parts and the barge drifts ashore, later breaks up during a storm and damages a cottage on the beach, there is no violation of this section since the barge cannot be regarded as refuse thrown from a vessel nor as material deposited on the shore of navigable water. Longstean v. McCaffrey (1920) 95 Conn. 486, 111 Atl. 788. The court said: "The statute upon which the court based its charge, Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d Ed.) vol. 9, p.

58 provides in its first part that it shall not be lawful 'to throw, discharge or deposit' from or out of any ship, barge, or floating craft of any kind any refuse matter of any kind other than that flowing in street or sewer in liquid state into any navigable waters of the United States.

"Depositing refuse in any navigable waters of the United States from or out of any floating craft constitutes the offense of the statute, and its violation would furnish, if it occasioned injury and was the proximate cause of the damage, a cause of action for negligence for the damage done. Myrtle Point Transportation Co. v. Port of Coquille River, 86 Or. 311, 168 Pac. 625.

"A barge beached upon the shore of navigable water cannot be held to be refuse within the meaning of this act, whether the barge came there through fault of the owner or unavoidable accident, or whether it was abandoned from the time it became beached. And by the terms of this offense the refuse must have been thrown, deposited, or discharged or been permitted to be thrown, discharged, or deposited from or out of the barge. None of the conditions constituting the offense described in the first portion of the statute are present in the situation detailed before us. An even more controlling reason made this part of the statute and all of it inadmissible. The court, as appears from the instruction, relied upon the latter part, which reads:

"It shall not be lawful to deposit, or cause, suffer, or procure to be deposited material of any kind in any place on the bank of any navigable water or on the bank of any tributary of any navigable water, where the same shall be liable to be washed into such navigable water, either by ordinary or high tides, or by storms or floods, or otherwise."

"This portion of the statute was intended to secure the prevention of the impeding or obstruction of navigation by depositing or suffering to be deposited any kind of material, refuse or otherwise on the bank or shore of navigable water, or on the bank or shore of its tributary where the same shall be liable to be washed into such navigable water. Protection of navigation was the purpose of the statute. The violation of a statute which forbids the doing of certain acts does not give a cause of actionable negligence in favor of private individuals unless the statute was designed to prevent such injuries as were suffered by the individual claiming damage and unless it imposes upon the one violating the statute a specific duty for the protection or benefit of him who claims damages for the violation. 1 Thompson on Negligence, § 12; 20 Ruling Case Law, § 33.

"The violation of the ordinance could have had no influence in causing the accident, and the trial court properly withdrew its consideration from the jury. It is a well-settled rule that a person cannot recover from another for negligence based upon the violation of a statute or ordinance which is not intended for his protection.

"The rule which is applicable to actions for negligence based upon the violation of a statutory duty is to all intents and purposes the same as the rule applicable to actions for negligence based upon a violation of a common law duty. Where there is no duty, there can be no negligence. The statutory duty must be owing to the person injured, and not to some one else, in order that a violation thereof shall constitute actionable negligence." Anthony v. Conn. Co., 88 Conn. 700, 707, 92 Atl. 672.

And it must also appear that the violation of the statute was the proximate cause of the injury sustained. Feehan v. Slater, 89 Conn. 697, 701, 96 Atl. 159.

"This statute was for the protection of navigation. It was not designed for the protection or benefit of cottagers upon the shore. This is apparent upon the slightest inspection of the statute. Had this been a proper subject upon which to instruct the jury, the instruction would have been erroneous in omitting the essential element that the pieces of the barge so washed upon the shore did, or were apt to impede or obstruct navigation."

Vol. IX, p. 60, sec. 15. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 817.]

Scope and application of section.—"This act imposes an affirmative and positive duty upon vessels coming to anchor in navigable channels to see that they do not under any circumstances, accidents excepted, prevent or obstruct the passage of other vessels; not that they shall not anchor at all in such a channel, but that when they anchor therein they shall so anchor and in such method, as not to close the channel or unduly or unreasonably prevent or obstruct, the passage of other vessels. The Margaret, (D. C.) 203 Fed. 331; Id., 213 Fed. 975, 130 C. C. A. 381; The Hesperos (C. C. A.) 265 Fed. 921.

"When a vessel intends, not only to stop in a channel in which she is moving, but to anchor and to swing around so that her length obstructs the channel, she is bound to give notice of her movement or intention, or warn others not to approach until she has completed her unusual maneuver. The maneuvers which the Sosua executed took up a large part of the channel upon a dark night. She passed the Hainesport without signal about 75 feet off the Walnut street docks, crossed her bow, and directly after passing Market street began to reverse her engines, all without warning signal and without a lookout.

"She violated the statutory prohibition . . . in swinging around to come to anchor without any warning or indication of her intention. If she had had a lookout properly stationed, the close approach of the Hainesport would doubtless have been observed, and the master and pilot, whose attention was directed to bringing her into a proper position to anchor, would not have had to rely upon chance to observe the approach of the Hainesport with her tow. The very maneuver she executed was an obstruction to the channel. She was bound to refrain from maneuvers calculated to embarrass the vessel in her rear in an attempt to pass." The Sosua, (E. D. Pa. 1921) 271 Fed. 772.

"The statute was intended as an explicit legislative statement that the dominant use of channels is for passage, and not anchorage, and it does not permit a vessel to anchor voluntarily in a channel, when her presence there imperils other vessels, or requires more than ordinary skill or care in their navigation. Obviously masters of vessels are charged with knowledge that the coming of fogs or storms may make an anchored vessel an obstruction, when it would not be in fair weather." The City of Norfolk, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 641.

Duty imposed.—To same effect as original annotation, see The Hesperos, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 921, wherein a large steamship was held to be negligent in anchoring near a channel in such a manner as to allow her stern to swing around with the tide and obstruct it thereby causing a collision with an incoming steamship.

Vessel caught in fog.—In this connection it has been said: "The first thought and object of the master and pilot of a vessel caught by a dense fog in a channel in which the vessel at anchor would be an obstruction to another vessel navigated with due care should be to get out of the way of other vessels by moving on with 'moderate speed' to the nearest anchorage grounds or the open sea. In such navigation 'moderate speed' means speed so slow that the vessel can be stopped within the distance at which another vessel can be seen. If the fog is so dense as to justify the master in believing that another vessel going at a moderate speed could not be seen at the distance in which he could stop his vessel, and that the two vessels would be in danger of collision, then the master should anchor and give the statutory signals. Even if he thus obstructs the channel, he is not responsible, because it is done under necessity. Doubt as to this necessity should be solved by weighing all the circumstances and conditions, such as the width of the channel, the flow of the tide, the force of the wind, the probability of meeting other vessels, the size of the ship, and distance and course to the nearest anchorage. If the navigator of the vessel, upon careful consideration of all the circumstances, reasonably concludes that necessity requires anchorage he should not be held in fault, and in case of collision should be held entitled to the presumption in favor of a vessel at rest against a moving vessel. The duty of the master of the approaching vessel is to stop as soon as he hears the fog signal." The City of Norfolk, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 641.

Effect of provision on local regulations.—A local regulation making an absolute prohibition against anchoring in a channel is supplanted by this section. The City of Norfolk, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 641.

Vol. IX, p. 78, sec. 7. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 224.]

Failure of war department to define anchorage grounds.—Where the War Department did not act in pursuance of the statute and the place at which a vessel anchored was a usual and customary anchorage set apart by a city ordinance and authorized by permission from the office of the port warden, the vessel was held to be protected. The Mexico Maru, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 270 Fed. 800.

Vol. IX, p. 80, sec. 5. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 793.]

Liability of city.—In Conklin v. Norwalk, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 68, the city of Norwalk was held liable for the failure of the bridge tender to open the draw or in case he could not open it to give the required signal.

Vol. IX, p. 81, sec. 9. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 805.]

What is "navigable river."—The prohibition in this section against the construction of a dam in a navigable river of the United States without the approval of the War Department, applies to a river having actual navigable capacity in its natural state, and capable of carrying commerce among the states, even though it be not at present used for such commerce, and be incapable of such use according to present methods, either by reason of changed conditions or because of artificial obstructions. Economy Light, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1921) 256 U. S. 113, 41 S. Ct. 409, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, [affirming (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 256 Fed. 792, 168 C. C. A. 138] wherein it was held that the Desplaines river below the city of Joliet, and just above where the Desplaines joins the Kankakee to form the Illinois river, was a navigable river of the United States, within the meaning of the prohibition in this section against the construction of a dam in a navigable river of the United States without the approval of the War Department.

Approval of War Department.—The requirement of this section that the War Department approve the location and plans for any dam in a navigable river of the United States, is not in substance satisfied by the refusal of the Secretary of War to act because, as he was assured that the river was not navigable, he had no jurisdiction. This cannot be regarded as an equivalent to an approval, either in form or effect, or even as an official inquiry into the navigability of the river. Economy Light, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1921) 256 U. S. 113, 41 S. Ct. 409, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 256 Fed. 792, 168 C. C. A. 138.

Contract to remove collapsed pier.—Even though approval of the secretary of war might have been necessary to alterations in a contract for the construction of a bridge, the failure to obtain it does not affect the rights of the parties in respect to a subsequent contract to remove steel which has fallen into the water when one of the piers collapsed, where it is agreed by the second contract that the question of responsibility for the fall of the pier shall fix the payment to be made under the contract for removing the steel. Midland Bridge Co. v. Houston, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 931.

Effect of subsequent alterations in mere details.—A mere alteration in detail, which in no way contemplates any change in the size, nature, or relation to the stream of the completed bridge does not have to be approved by the secretary of war as a condition to an existing contract for construction continuing of force between the parties thereto. Midland Bridge Co. v. Houston, etc., Valley R. Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 931.

Vol. IX, p. 86, sec. 18. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 818.]

Failure to remove piles.—Where a railroad company, constructing a new bridge across a navigable shifting stream, fails to remove piles which were used to support the former bridge, it is liable for injury to a vessel colliding with such piles. Nor is the question of liability affected by the fact that conditions imposed by the War Department were complied with. Olympian Dredging Co. v. Southern Pac. Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 384.

1918 Supp., p. 772, sec. 5.

Sufficiency of petition.—A petition is sufficient under this section where the petitioner prays that "On filing this petition, an order may be entered therein, by this court, providing for the taking of immediate possession of each and all of said lands by petitioner, for such improvement, and fixing the amount and form of certain and adequate security to be given on behalf of the United States, as petitioner herein, for the payment of such just compensation as may be awarded to the party or parties entitled thereto on account of the taking of the rights of way and otherwise hereinbefore mentioned as required for said improvement, which certain and adequate security, petitioner hereby offers to give as may be, by the court, directed." In re Condemnations, (E. D. Mich. 1920) 266 Fed. 105.

SALVAGE

What constitutes salvage service.—Where a vessel at anchor in a harbor drags its anchor during a gale and collides with another anchored vessel, and the vessels are lashed together to prevent further damage to both, the latter vessel is not entitled to an award for a salvage service in permitting the other vessel to be lashed to her. The Yaye Maru, (D. C. Md. 1920) 265 Fed. 850.

Where it appeared that the vessel had not been abandoned and that the services performed by seamen remaining on the vessel entailed no hardship or exhaustion since they were performed only at regular hours except for the overtime, for which they were paid extra, a libel against the vessel for salvage services was dismissed. The Macona, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 269 Fed. 468.

Vessels traveling in company.—While no one may claim a salvage award for doing that which he is legally bound to do, and for which he is actually or constructively remunerated in other ways, a claim for salvage on the part of one vessel for aiding another when she went aground cannot be defeated by evidence of an agreement of the two vessels to travel in company for protection against submarines. Maru Nav. Co. v. Societa Commerciale, etc., (D. C. Md. 1921) 271 Fed. 97.

Element considered in making award.—“It is fair to consider the value of the property in peril, the degree of peril, and the value of the property employed by the salvor, the risk of life or property incurred, the skill and dispatch shown in rendering the services, together with the foresight and skill used in the preparation to render it, the time consumed, and the labor performed by the salvor. The Blackwall, 10 Wall. 1, 19 L. Ed. 870. The courts do not desire to award so little as to discourage salvage aid, nor so much as to encourage unnecessary and extravagant statement of service. The No. 92, 252 Fed. 118. All these matters are within the sound discretion of the District Judge, who hears the facts and sees the witnesses. It is for him to correctly find the facts, and it is only if the evidence indicates an abuse of discretion that this court interferes. The Kanawha, 254 Fed. 762, 166 C. C. A. 208.” Jacobson v. Panama R. Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 344.

In ascertaining the value of salvage services it is fair to consider the difficulty of safely handling the distressed vessel and the risk run of injury to the salving vessel. The Western Pride, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 920.

The primary consideration in salvage cases is the amount of benefit conferred. The Nord Alexis, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 160.

Amount of award—In general.—In The Bretanier, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 178, it was held that a tug worth, with her apparatus, $175,000, was entitled to a salvage award of $12,000 for hauling a steamship, valued at $500,000 off a shoal and towing it a short distance.

Where barges which had been floating with the ebb tide in ice floes became grounded, it was held that a tow boat which pulled them off and turned them to safety performed services in the nature of salvage services for which an award of $1,500 was proper although it appeared that there was no immediate pending disaster to the barges and that the difficulties encountered by the tow boat were no more than she would have undertaken in towing a schooner up the harbor on the afternoon the services were rendered at ordinary towing rates. Potter v. Payne, (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 269 Fed. 470.

In Bullard v. 230,263 Feet of Lumber, (S. D. Fla. 1920) 267 Fed. 860, wherein salvage was asked for saving lumber from a wrecked schooner, the court said: “The work of salving the lumber appears to have been onerous in the extreme, the men having to work in water most of the time, and continued over a considerable time, with a number of vessels and their crews engaged. The position of the wrecked schooner was an exposed one, adding to the difficulties of the work of the men engaged in salving the cargo.

“Considering all the circumstances shown by the testimony, I am of opinion that an award of 75 per cent. of the net proceeds of the salvaged property, after paying the costs of the suits, and the costs of the damage suffered by the Serafina, the division of salvage to be made according to the wrecking rules, proportioned to the amount of lumber salvaged by each vessel, except when acting in consort.”

“In some foreign countries the amount or proportion to be paid for salvage services is fixed by law. But in England and in this country the rate of salvage compensation is governed by no determinate rules applicable to all cases. The proper rate of compensation is necessarily to some extent in the discretion of the court on a just estimate of all the circumstances of the individual case. Each case of salvage is to be disposed of on its own merits. There are, however, certain general principles which serve to guide courts in the exercise of their discretion. When the risk is inconsiderable and the service slight, the award should be little more than mere remuneration pro opere et labore. The Benjamin A. Van Brunt, (D. C.) 164 Fed. 775. If the service is attended with unusual danger and difficulty, the award will be proportionately higher. Luckenbach v. Scows 3 & 16, (D. C.) 50 Fed. 570. The highest compensation ordinarily allowed in the most meritorious cases is one moiety, which is rarely given except in the case of a derelict. While seldom more than one-half or less than one-third is given there are many cases in which the award has been under 5 per cent." The High Cliff, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 202. In this case an award of $5,000 was reduced on appeal to $2,000 where it appeared that a barge which broke loose during a storm and when drifting up a slip was taken in charge by a tug and carried further into the slip to a place of safety, there being no danger and the time required being about three-quarters of an hour.

Computation of award.—See The Copperfield, (S. D. Fla. 1920) 268 Fed. 77.

"The mere towing to safety a drifting barge or scow is usually regarded as salvage service of a low order of merit, and is compensated by a small award." The High Cliff, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 202.

Salvage in harbor.—"It has long been settled in this circuit that salvage services rendered in harbor cases, where tugs are abundant and on the ground or near by are not services of a high order." The High Cliff, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 202.

Effect of retention by captain of articles taken from wreck.—Where the captain of a salvaging vessel retained certain nautical instruments, books and papers and a small loot taken from the wreck until after answer filed by the claimant the court declared that while "the evidence is such that I can visit this conduct upon the other salvors, it is necessary that the court should visit it upon the guilty party, and this I do by depriving the master of the tug of all participation in the salvage awarded the crew; the master's share to inure to the benefit of the claimants of the schooner and cargo, in proportion to the value of each as found above." The Copperfield, (S. D. Fla. 1920) 268 Fed. 77.

Interest.—The allowance of interest on a salvage award is within the discretion of the trial court. Maru Nav. Co. v. Societa Commerciale, etc., (D. C. Md. 1921) 271 Fed. 97.

Rights of members of crew.—The members of a crew have an independent right accorded them by law for salvage, are entitled to a maritime lien as protection and may maintain an action in personam to the extent of their lien for salvaging services. Jacobson v. Panama R. Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 344.

Vol. IX, p. 122, sec. 5. [First ed., 1914 Supp., p. 385.]

Government owned vessels.—The fact that both vessels were government owned ships and under the control of the Emergency Fleet Corporation has been held not enough to deprive the master and crew of the salvaging vessel of compensation for salvaging services. Jacobson v. Panama R. Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 344.

SEAMEN

Vol. IX, p. 139, sec. 4511. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 853.]

Scope of section.—This section and amendments and the form provided in the schedule annexed and R. S. sec. 4530 [9 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 158] and its amendments for the protection of seamen, relate to the voyage and impose duties on the ship and seamen for the voyage. "Neither can renounce those duties during the voyage. These statutes on their face, and the judicial construction given them, leave no doubt of these conclusions: (1) The master cannot discharge the crew, and the crew cannot demand wages in full, until the end of the voyage; (2) the end of the voyage is not a port of distress, but the port of destination; (3) seamen are bound to serve until the voyage ends in the port of destination, unless there has been a breach of the contract by the master as to the time of the voyage or in some other material particular; (4) extension of the time of the voyage by intention or neglect of the master is such breach of the contract as entitles the seamen to demand their release on that ground in any safe port; (5) but extension of the voyage beyond the time mentioned in the contract, due to perils of the sea which the master or owner could not be reasonably expected to guard against, is not a breach of the contract as to time, and does not warrant seamen in leaving the vessel or demanding wages in full before reaching the port of destination; (6) on the other hand, seamen are entitled to their wages and discharge when the ship reaches the port of destination before the expiration of the stipulated time of the voyage." Hamilton v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 15.

Nature and construction of shipping articles.—"Shipping articles are mercantile documents, and are entitled to a liberal construction in order to accomplish the purpose the parties had in mind. They are not to be scrutinized as if they were legal pleadings." U. S. v. Westwood, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 696.

Requirements of articles.—Baggage must be specified.—It is required that the articles a seaman is asked to sign shall tell him in general terms, at least, what kind of a voyage the master is then planning to undertake, reserving on their face, if need be, sufficient latitude for the changes which may subsequently arise from the exigencies of a successful participation in the world's carrying trade. U. S. v. Westwood, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 696.

Duration of voyage—Extension of time.—Seamen are bound to serve until the voyage ends in the port of destination, unless there has been a breach of the contract by the master as to the time of the voyage or in some other material particular.

Extension of the time of the voyage by intention or neglect of the master is such breach of the contract as entitles the seamen to demand their release on that ground in any safe port.

But extension of the voyage beyond the time mentioned in the contract, due to perils of the sea which the master or owner could not be reasonably expected to guard against, is not a breach of the contract as to time, and does not warrant seamen in leaving the vessel or demanding wages in full before reaching the port of destination.

If, however, the voyage cannot be completed, or is ended by mutual agreement, the former articles are of no effect upon the future status of the crew, who are free to make a new agreement with the captain, if he has the authority so to do. Shanley v. U. S., (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 274 Fed. 691.

Employment and discharge of seamen.—The master virtute officii employs and discharges seamen. Hughes v. Southern Pac. Co., (S. D. N. Y. 1918) 274 Fed. 876.

Vol. IX, p. 153, sec. 4527. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 864.]

Seamen in coastwise trade.—The master and seamen may voluntarily use shipping articles in the shipping of seamen for the coastwise trade in which case the provisions of this section apply. Hughes v. Southern Pac. Co., (S. D. N. Y. 1918) 274 Fed. 876.

Vol. IX, p. 156, sec. 4529. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 227.]

Construction.—The section is penal and the right stricti juris. Petterson v. U. S., (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 274 Fed. 1000.

Applicability.—It has been held that this section is not applicable to foreign vessels. The City of Norwich, (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 273 Fed. 304.

Seamen as wards of court.—“Seamen are wards of the courts, no doubt, and are protected against their own carelessness. The statutes, especially the revision of 1915, show an increased solicitude for their welfare, which courts have no right to view with jealousy. Still they remain in some measure persons sui juris, and there is neither justice nor policy in aiding them to catch at penalties, where they have suffered no wrongs.” Petterson v. U. S., (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 274 Fed. 1000.

“Without sufficient cause.”—Where a master refuses to pay seamen their wages “without sufficient cause,” a payment of full wages subsequently made to them should be credited as part payment of the penalty provided for in the statute. Vincent v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 889.

Where seamen signed shipping articles at the port of San Francisco to Manila for final discharge, it was held on a libel for the penalty that they were entitled to their discharge at Manila and that there was absence of a fair ground of dispute though the insular collector of customs, acting as shipping commissioner, wrote a letter stating: “Whereupon the master thereof rated the said seamen as such deserters, and this office so confirms.” This being construed as meaning that the collector merely confirmed the fact that the master rated the men as deserters. Vincent v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 889.

Sufficient cause—Attachment against wages.—An attachment under a state statute is not “sufficient cause” under this section for withholding a seaman's wages. Burns v. Fred. L. Davis Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 439.

Evidence insufficient to show discharge.—In Petterson v. U. S., (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 274 Fed. 1000, it was held that an agreement to an extension of the articles and a return to the ship after a demand for pay and a refusal to be responsible for the safety of the ship, followed by payment and a month's bonus together with the giving of a release at the end of the extended voyage, did not show a discharge before the articles for extension were signed.

Duties imposed on ship and seamen.—R. S. sec. 4511 [9 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 139] and amendments and the form provided in the schedule annexed and this section and its amendments for the protection of seamen, relate to the voyage and impose duties on the ship and seamen for the voyage. “Neither can renounce those duties during the voyage. These statutes on their face, and the judicial construction given them, leave no doubt of these conclusions: (1) The master cannot discharge the crew, and the crew cannot demand wages in full, until the end of the voyage; (2) the end of the voyage is not a port of distress, but the port of destination; (3) seamen are bound to serve until the voyage ends in the port of destination, unless there has been a breach of the contract by the master as to the time of the voyage or in some other material particular; (4) extension of the time of the voyage by intention or neglect of the master is such breach of the contract as entitles the seamen to demand their release on that ground in any safe port; (5) but extension of the voyage beyond the time mentioned in the contract, due to perils of the sea which the master or owner could not be reasonably expected to guard against, is not a breach of the contract as to time, and does not warrant seamen in leaving the vessel or demanding wages in full before reaching the port of destination; (6) on the other hand, seamen are entitled to their wages and discharge when the ship reaches the port of destination before the expiration of the stipulated time of the voyage." Hamilton v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 15.

Right to one-half wages—Generally.—Under this section seamen making a demand of the master are entitled to one-half of the wages earned and still unpaid. Low Ling Sing v. Standard Transp. Co., (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 274 Fed. 1017.

Necessity of demand.—"The statute authorizing this libel presupposes a reasonable demand (The Pinna, 265 Fed. 642, 167 C. C. A. 18) plainly made. It must be plainly made, in order that the shipmaster may know exactly what is demanded of him; for by the statute, if he refuses half wages, whole wages instantly become due, together with possible damages. Where such important consequences hinge upon the making of a demand, it is obvious that clearness both in language and in proof is due from those who rely upon it." The Hougomont, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 881.

Amount.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see The Hougomont, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 881.

Waiver.—In The Hougomont, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 881, the rights of seamen as libelants were held to be defeated by waiver arising from the receipt by the seamen of payments after demand for half wages and by remaining on board the ship after like was filed and performing services.

Vol. IX, p. 179, sec. 12. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 233.]

Fisherman's wages.—A state statute excluding fishermen from an exemption from garnishment accorded seamen, is invalid as this section expressly states that its provisions shall "apply to fishermen employed on fishing vessels as well as to seamen" and the power of Congress being paramount the state statute must give way. Burns v. Fred L. Davis Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 439.

Vol. IX, p. 180, sec. 20. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 250.]

"Seamen having command."—A foreman having direct command of the work in hand and of the men is not a fellow servant of a seaman under his authority. George Leary Constr. Co. v. Matson, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 461.

Negligence in selection of appliances and appurtenances.—Since under the statute the master of the vessel, or seaman in command, is not a fellow servant of those under his authority, his selection and supply of the appliance and appurtenances used for the service on the ship under his direction is the selection and supply of the owner, and for injury to a seaman due to negligence in such selection and supply the owner is liable for full indemnity for the injury. George Leary Constr. Co. v. Matson, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 461.

Vol. IX, p. 181, sec. 4549. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 884.]

Mode of discharge.—A seaman when discharged must be discharged before a shipping commissioner. Any other discharge is wrongful. Hughes v. Southern Pac. Co., (S. D. N. Y. 1918) 274 Fed. 876.

Vol. IX, p. 182, sec. 4552. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 885.]

Release—Conclusiveness.—Where a dispute as to the rate of wages was taken before the shipping commissioner at the end of the voyage but he apparently did not go into the merits of the claim by the crew but denied it as a matter of course, a release signed under such circumstances cannot be used as a receipt in full. Shanley v. U. S., (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 274 Fed. 691.

Mistake in signing.—In Pacific Mail Steamship Co. v. Lucas, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 938, it was held under the evidence that a seaman neither sought nor desired a discharge, that he was only asked to sign for his wages and did not know that he signed a release, and that the alleged discharge could not be sustained because it was not fully explained to him.

Wages where seaman becomes sick.—A seaman who falls sick on a voyage is entitled to recover his full wages for the trip for which he was engaged, and the necessary expense incurred in his cure. Pacific Mail Steamship Co. v. Lucas, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 938.

Vol. IX, p. 185, sec. 4556. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 887.]

Duty of seamen as to serving.—The importance of obedience and discipline on a ship, to the end that it may proceed on its voyage, imposes on the crew, after they have commenced the voyage, the duty to use reasonable means to ascertain the actual condition of the vessel, including a resurvey, if that be practicable, before refusal to serve for unseaworthiness. . . . But they are not bound to serve on a vessel which is unseaworthy, and they should be acquitted of the charge of desertion or revolt, or endeavor to revolt, if in apprehension of danger they leave the ship or refuse to serve, asserting and believing on reasonable grounds that the ship is unseaworthy, although it may turn out on further close investigation that it was in fact seaworthy, for reasonable apprehension of loss of life or limb is set above delay of the vessel. Hamilton v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 15.

Vol. IX, p. 201, sec. 4577. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 901.]

Aliens.—An alien who is employed as a seaman on an American vessel and who has been discharged at a foreign port because of sickness, is entitled under this section to be returned to the United States. The Santa Elena, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 271 Fed. 347.

Vol. IX, p. 203, sec. 4580. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 902.]

Justification for discharge—Generally.—Just grounds for the discharge of a seaman by the master must be shown. Mattes v. Standard Transp. Co., (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 274 Fed. 1019.

What constitutes a discharge.—Where at a port which was not the port of final discharge the men were not requested to continue on the voyage under the articles but were requested to sign new articles for a new voyage, which they refused to do, it was held that the vessel by its own conduct fixed the status of the men with relation to the proceeding before the court, and that they were entitled to their wages and transportation to the port from which they sailed, if they so desired. Jenkins v. U. S. Emergency Fleet Corp., (W. D. Wash. 1920) 268 Fed. 870.

Approval of consul.—“It is hornbook law for masters that discharges must be approved by consuls and the law of the United States is in substance the same.” Mattes v. Standard Transp. Co., (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 274 Fed. 1019.

Vol. IX, p. 205, sec. 4581. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 904; 1916 Supp., p. 251.]

Seaman discharged by consent.—A seaman who is discharged by voluntary consent before a consul is not entitled to a month's bonus. Petterson v. U. S., (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 274 Fed. 1000.

Disease contracted by seaman through his own fault.—“It is well settled that, while the vessel is liable for the cure and maintenance of a sailor who is taken ill while serving the vessel, she is not liable for such maintenance and cure when the disease was contracted from the indulgence by the sailor in case of gross indiscretion, or indulging his own vices.” The Coniscliff, (S. D. Ala. 1920) 266 Fed. 959.

Vol. IX, p. 215, sec. 4596. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 230.]

Scope of section.—This section relates to mere ordinary disobedience or neglect of duty by one of several seamen. Hamilton v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 15.

Desertion—What constitutes.—To constitute “desertion” in the sense of the word used in this section the seaman must quit the ship and her service, not only without leave, but without justifiable cause, and with intent not again to return to duty on the vessel. The Margaret Spencer, (S. D. Fla. 1921) 274 Fed. 930, wherein a cook was held to be guilty of desertion where, following what he claimed was an unreasonable delay in the delivery of his mail, he cursed and abused the master, refused to obey orders and, on his discharge from arrest by the harbor police, refused to return to the vessel in accordance with the order of the vice consul.

Vol. IX, p. 343, sec. 14. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 655.]

Suspension of rules by war regulations.—The rules governing the length of hawsers established in pursuance of this section were not suspended as a result of war regulations, particularly where the violation at issue occurred more than a year after the signing of the armistice. The Berkley, (E. D. Va. 1921) 271 Fed. 35.

I. Introductory.

III. Person entitled to lien.

V. “Repairs, supplies or other necessities.”

VIII. Necessity that credit was given to vessel.

X. Jurisdiction.

I. INTRODUCTORY (p. 347)

Purpose and scope.—In Piedmont, etc., Coal Co. v. Seaboard Fisheries Co., (1920) 254 U. S. 1, 41 S. Ct. 1, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1918) 253 Fed. 20, 165 C. C. A. 40), Mr. Justice Brandeis said that reports of Congress state that the purpose of this act was this: “First, to do away with the artificial distinction by which a maritime lien was given for supplies furnished to a vessel in a port of a foreign country or state, but denied where the supplies were furnished in the home port or state. The General Smith, 4 Wheat. 438, 4 L. ed. 609. Second, to do away with the doctrine that when the owner of a vessel contracts in person for necessities, or is present in the port when they are ordered, it is presumed that the materialmen did not intend to rely upon the credit of the vessel, and that hence, no lien arises. The St. Jago de Cuba, 9 Wheat. 409, 6 L. ed. 122. Third, to substitute a single Federal statute for the state statutes in so far as they confer liens for repairs, supplies, and other necessities. Pevroux v. Howard, 7 Pet. 324, 8 L. ed. 700. The reports expressly declare that the bill makes 'no change in the general principles of the law of maritime liens, but merely substitutes a single statute for the conflicting state statutes.' The act relieves the libellant of the burden of proving that credit was given to the ship when necessities are furnished to her upon order of the owner, but it in no way lessens the materialman's burden of proving that the supplies in question were furnished to her by him upon order of the owner, or of someone acting by his authority. The maritime lien is a secret one. It may operate to the prejudice of prior mortgagees or of purchasers without notice. It is therefore stricti juris, and will not be extended by construction, analogy, or inference."

This provision is merely a statutory declaration of a principle long recognized in maritime jurisprudence. The Coaster, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 273 Fed. 609.

The purpose of this act was to give certainty where uncertainty and conflict of decision had arisen on the question of the liability of a ship for materials and service. The Portland, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 401. The court said: "The cases cited show how the courts differed in their construction, depending upon whether supplies were furnished in a foreign or domestic port, or were furnished upon the credit of the representative of the ship, or upon the credit of the ship, and whether they were furnished upon the order of the owner or the master. We shall not take up the discussion further than to say that Congress, presumably knowing of the confusion, endeavored by the act of 1910 to make the law more certain by providing in effect that proof that credit was given the ship is dispensed with in the first instance, in that a presumption shall obtain that certain persons have authority to procure supplies and that the ship's husband or master is one of the persons. No lien accrues if such persons did not have authority to bind the ship, and such lack of authority was known, or ought to have been known, to the furnisher of supplies."

This statute did not enlarge the subject matter of maritime liens, but did grant a lien where labor or materials (which previously could have been the basis of a maritime lien) were furnished to a vessel, even in a home port by the order of the master, or anywhere upon the order of the master or owner, although no proof of credit to the vessel was offered. The Harvard, (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 270 Fed. 668.

This act was intended to furnish a complete system within itself. "The first section gives the right of lien to all who furnish repairs or supplies, without distinction as to whether the vessel is foreign or domestic, and imposing only the condition that they should be necessities and furnished upon the order of the owner or by some person by him authorized, and provides further that this lien shall be enforced by a proceeding in rem, and exempts the claimant from any requirement to aver or prove that the repairs or supplies were furnished on the credit of the vessel. Section 2 of the act lists those who are presumed to possess the required authority, and denies such authority to those who are in physical possession or charge of the vessel, if their possession is tortious or unlawful. The third section somewhat extends the list of those who are thus presumed to have authority, but takes away the right of lien from any claimant who knew, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence might have learned that the person on whose order the repairs or supplies were furnished was without authority to bind the vessel." The Lord Baltimore, (E. D. Pa. 1921) 269 Fed. 824, wherein the court further said: "A new statement of the policy of the law has been introduced. Those who make repairs or furnish needed supplies to vessels on the order of any one in apparent control are given the right of lien. There is thus wiped out the old distinction of work done or sales made on personal credit, and those made on the credit of the vessel, unless, of course, the right of lien has been waived. There is also wiped out the other distinction between vessels in a foreign and in a home port. A claimant may now maintain a lien, notwithstanding the fact that the person on whose apparent authority the supplies were furnished did not have authority to bind the vessel, if the claimant did not know, nor could with reasonable diligence have found out, such lack of authority."

"The purpose of this section was to alter the then existing presumption that repairs, supplies, or other necessities ordered by the owner in any port or by the master in the home port were furnished on the credit of the owner, in the absence of proof that credit was given to the vessel. The act gave a maritime lien in such cases on the vessel enforceable in rem for repairs, supplies, and necessities ordered by the master or by a person authorized by him, without the necessity of proving that credit was given to the vessel." The Susquehanna, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 811.

Construction.—"A construction must be given to the act which will afford a practical working rule to those dealing with vessels. The act of Congress results in at least the possibility that one person may be called upon to pay the debt of another, and any lien claimant is charged with notice of this possible result. A consequence is that the act must be strictly construed, and the claimant must do his part to minimize the danger of such a result. At the same time the act must be given such a construction as not to defeat its main purpose, which is to enable those in charge of a vessel to obtain all necessary supplies." The Lord Baltimore, (E. D. Pa. 1921) 269 Fed. 824.

"Order" and "procure."—In The Portland, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 401, the court said regarding the meaning of these words: "Appellant puts special stress upon the fact that there was a general contract between libellant and the charterer to buy fuel oil used by the charterer in operating its ships, and that the charterer therein agreed to provide and pay for the fuel oil used by the ship, and says that the oil was in fact 'procured' by the charterer under a personal contract obligating libellant to furnish the same. It is to be noted that section 1 of the act uses the words 'upon the order' of the owner, while section 2 declares what persons shall be presumed to have authority from the owner 'to procure' supplies, and in section 3 we find the words 'person ordering the repairs,' etc. We cannot perceive, however, that the words 'order' and 'procure' were used with different significance. Fuel furnished by a person upon the order of the master is equivalent to fuel which the master has authority to procure. The first section confers the right of lien where the furnishing is done on order; the second defines those who are presumed to have authority to obtain the fuel."

The presumption of the statute may be removed and the right of lien based on it destroyed by proof which overcomes it. The Coaster, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 273 Fed. 609.

III. PERSON ENTITLED TO LIEN (p. 348)

In general.—"No one with knowledge that fuel or supplies are ordered by one without authority acquires a lien, and one cognizant of circumstances which suggest inquiry may not close his eyes and avail himself of presumptions of the law. Under these circumstances a lien may not be impressed." The Coaster, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 273 Fed. 609.

Duty of person claiming lien.—"Every claimant is bound to know that the supplies are in fact for the vessel and in fact reached it; he is further put on guard to know that the supplies are such as are ordinarily required on board a vessel, and in this sense reasonably necessary, and he must further, at his peril, make sure that the person ordering these supplies is clothed with either the actual or the apparent authority to bind the vessel. When these features are present, the claimant may safely sell in reliance upon his right of lien. If any of them are absent, he is left to his other rights and remedies." The Lord Baltimore, (E. D. Pa. 1921) 269 Fed. 824.

V. "REPAIRS, SUPPLIES OR OTHER NECESSARIES" (p. 349)

In general.—There is no hard and fast definition of "supplies or other necessities" in the maritime law as declared by the Act of June 23, 1910. The test of what is necessary is what is reasonably needed in the ship's business. The Penn, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 990.

Work and materials furnished in "repairing, altering, enlarging and improving the vessel's carrying capacity" in order to fit it for the service which was desired while the boat was temporarily withdrawn from service, but while afloat and in no way removed from its maritime character and surroundings are of a maritime nature for which a lien is given by this section. The Harvard, (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 270 Fed. 688.

What constitutes necessities.—"No hard and fast definition of 'necessaries' can be given. When supplies are furnished to a ship on the order of one in apparent authority, whatever comes within the reasonable requirements, not of a ship, but of the ship to which furnished, are necessities. The test is whether in kind and quantity what is furnished is within the reasonable needs of the ship's business.

"In every instance of the furnishing of supplies, the situation speaks for itself to tell the claimant whether he has a right of lien. 'Res ipsa loquitur.' We must, however, know what the res is which is speaking. The ship tells the story of what she does. The thing to be supplied informs the claimant of whether or not it is reasonably within the ship's requirements. By holding that whatever is reasonably within the requirements of the ship are necessities, it is not intended to rule that the owner assumes the burden of proving a negative. The lien is based upon the theory or presumption that the supplies are furnished to the ship and for the ship on the order of the owner. The natural inference is that the ship had need of them, unless something else appears. In the absence of anything contradictory of this, a finding of necessities is prima facie called for and may be made." The Lord Baltimore, (E. D. Pa. 1921) 269 Fed. 824.

Coal.—A dealer furnishing coal to a vessel is entitled to a lien under this section. The Dana, (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 271 Fed. 356; The Castor, (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 267 Fed. 606.

Gasoline regularly furnished to a motor boat on orders from her captain the bills for which are paid by the owner without question, entitles the dealer so furnishing to a maritime lien under this section. The Norman, (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 271 Fed. 15.

Supplies for ship's restaurant.—Supplies for the restaurant of a passenger ship are necessities within the maritime sense, for which a maritime lien against the ship can be maintained. The Penn, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 990.

Construction work.—Where the work performed and material furnished are clearly in the nature of construction and have no relation to trade and commerce no right to a maritime lien exists. Thus, work and material furnished in converting a war vessel purchased from the government into a fishing vessel has been held to be in the nature of construction work for which no lien is given. The Geo. L. Harvey, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 273 Fed. 972.

Reconstruction work.—It has been held that a lien is not created by this section where the work partakes of the character of reconstruction work rather than repair. The Susquehanna, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 811.

Identity of vessel lost.—Where the identity of a car float was completely lost by its conversion into an amusement steamer it was held that no maritime lien was created on the ground of repairs or supplies furnished. The Jack-O-Lantern, (D. C. Mass. 1920) 266 Fed. 562.

VIII. NECESSITY THAT CREDIT WAS GIVEN TO VESSEL (p. 352)

In general.—To same effect as original annotation, see The Charles A. Day, (D. C. Me. 1920) 265 Fed. 422.

Supplies furnished to corporation owning vessels.—No part of coal delivered to a corporation owning both factories and a fleet of fishing steamers, in pursuance of a contract to furnish such corporation with its season's supply, and thereafter by such corporation distributed in its discretion to its vessels and factories, can be said to have been furnished by the seller to the vessels upon the order of the owner, within the meaning of giving a maritime lien upon a vessel for supplies so furnished without proof that credit was given to the vessel, although the use of the greater part of the coal by the vessels of the fleet was a use which was contemplated by the parties at the time of the purchase, and although both parties understood that the law would afford a lien on the vessels for the purchase price. Piedmont, etc., Coal Co. v. Seaboard Fisheries Co., (1920) 254 U. S. 1, 41 S. Ct. 1, 65 U. S., (L. ed.) — (affirming (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1918) 253 Fed. 20, 165 C. C. A. 40) wherein the court said: "To hold that a lien for the unpaid purchase price of supplies arises in favor of the seller merely because the purchaser, who is the owner of a vessel, subsequently appropriates the supplies to her use, would involve abandonment of the principles upon which maritime liens rest, and the substitution therefor of the very different principle which underlies mechanics' and materialmen's liens on houses and other structures. The former had its origin in desire to protect the ship; the latter mainly in desire to protect those who furnish work and materials. The maritime lien developed as a necessary incident of the operation of vessels. The ship's function is to move from place to place. She is peculiarly subject to vicissitudes which would compel abandonment of vessel or voyage, unless repairs and supplies were promptly furnished. Since she is usually absent from the home port, remote from the residence of her owners, and without any large amount of money, it is essential that she should be self-reliant,—that she should be able to obtain upon her own account needed repairs and supplies. The recognition by the law of such inherent power did not involve any new legal conception, since the ship had been treated in other connections as an entity capable of entering into relations with others, of acting independently, and of becoming responsible for her acts. Because the ship's need was the source of the maritime lien, it could arise only if the repairs or supplies were necessary; if the pledge of her credit was necessary to the obtaining of them; if they were actually obtained; and if they were furnished upon her credit. The mechanic's and materialman's lien, on the other hand, attaches ordinarily although the labor and material cannot be said to have been necessary; although at the time they were furnished there was no thought of obtaining security upon the building; and although the credit of the owner or of others had in fact been relied upon. The principle upon which the mechanic's lien rests is, in a sense, that of unjust enrichment. Ordinarily, it is the equity arising from assumed enhancement in value resulting from work or materials expended upon the property without payment therefor which is laid hold of to protect workmen and others who, it is assumed, are especially deserving, would ordinarily fail to provide by agreement for their own protection, and would often be unable to do so."

Supplies furnished under entire contract to several vessels.—"While one vessel of a fleet cannot be made liable under the statute for supplies furnished to the others, even if the supplies furnished are furnished to all upon orders of the owner under a single contract. Each vessel so receiving supplies may be made liable for the supplies furnished to it." Piedmont, etc., Coal Co. v. Seaboard Fisheries Co., (1920) 254 U. S. 1, 41 S. Ct. 1, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1918) 253 Fed. 20, 165 C. C. A. 40.

Repairs on boat under charter.—Under this section repairs for ordinary wear and tear ordered by a representative of the owner raises the presumption that they were ordered on the credit of the vessel, although they were ordered and made at a time when the vessel was undergoing repairs under contract with the charterer whose charter, however, did not obligate him to make repairs for ordinary wear and tear. The No. 14 (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 271 Fed. 10. But a claimant furnishing supplies to a vessel must exercise reasonable diligence to find out if the person ordering the repairs is the owner, and where he knows that the vessel is under charter and he can by reasonable diligence ascertain the terms of the charter party and who is the owner and what relation the person ordering the supplies bears to the owner, his failure to so exercise due diligence will defeat his right to a maritime lien. The Huron, (E. D. Pa. 1921) 271 Fed. 781.

Effect of changing charges on books.—Changing the charge on the books of the libellant from a corporation to each vessel does not operate to create a lien on the vessel where the libellant had furnished supplies for several years to the corporation which had chartered the vessels. The Coaster, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 273 Fed. 609.

X. JURISDICTION (p. 353)

An account admitted or paid in part may be collected under an admiralty lien, even if there might be also a claim at law or in personam, on the doctrine of estoppel of the right to dispute liability and amount. The Harvard, (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 270 Fed. 668.

Vol. IX, p. 354, sec. 2. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 353.]

Master.—It is said that "a charter party with a provision that charterer shall provide and pay for fuel oil does not take away from the master the authority conferred by the act upon the master to bind the ship. It regulates the rights as between owner and charterer; but as to third persons the right of lien is not affected." The Portland, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 401.

The managing officer of a corporation to which the "working of the charter party" had been assigned by the charterer according to the charter party terms has been held to be a "person to whom the management of the vessel at the port of supply is intrusted" so as to create a lien for supplies furnished on his authority. The Penn, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 990.

Vol. IX, p. 355, sec. 3. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 353.]

Duty as to inquiry.—A supply man who knows nothing about a ship, other than it is a ship in possession of those who order supplies for her, may furnish them upon her credit, without making further inquiry, taking the chance—usually a remote one—that the possession of her was tortiously acquired. The St. Johns, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 1005.

The words "other necessities," used in the statute, must, under the rule of ejusdem generis, be limited in their meaning to such things, of the general nature of repairs and supplies, as are fit and proper for the use of a ship. The Penn, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 266 Fed. 933.

Master.—In the Angie B. Watson, (D. C.

Mass. 1921) 274 Fed. 218, it was held that it was not shown that the person furnishing the supplies knew, or by such diligence as he was bound to exercise, could have ascertained, that the master of a fishing vessel was not authorized to bind the vessel and her owners for the supplies. In this case the owners had let the vessel to the master on a one-fifth lay in accordance with a custom on another part of the coast of which it was not shown that the libellant had any knowledge.

Agent of owner and charterer.—A person representing both the owner and the charterer, who orders coal for a vessel, is within the class of persons who may, like the master, order supplies for the benefit of the vessel, and whose act will bind the vessel, unless it can be shown under this section that the person furnishing the credit knew or could by reasonable inquiry have ascertained that the person ordering the supplies did not have authority to bind the vessel. The Dana, (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 271 Fed. 356.

Terms of charter party as controlling.—Where the services rendered in making stability tests were not shown to have been necessary for the vessel and the libellant knew that the vessel was chartered and was put on inquiry as to the existence of the terms of the charter party, no lien was acquired on the vessel for services not shown to have been necessary for its operation nor to have been a charge for which the owners would be liable under the charter party. The Penn, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 266 Fed. 933.

Vol. IX, p. 357, sec. 4. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 353.]

Proof of waiver.—The lien given by this Act will not be deemed to have been defeated by waiver, unless such waiver is shown by clear affirmative evidence. The Charles A. Day, (D. C. Me. 1920) 265 Fed. 422.

Vol. IX, p. 358, sec. 5. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 353.]

Scope of section in general.—State laws.—This section does not affect a state statute which confers upon persons who perform labor or furnish materials in the construction, launching, or repair of vessels a possessory lien upon the vessel to secure the payment of the debt therefor. The City of Miami, (D. C. Mass. 1920) 265 Fed. 427.

Lien on vessel in process of construction.—"There being no maritime lien for materials and supplies furnished and work done in constructing or building a ship, the state may provide and enforce such lien. * * * The act of Congress of June 23, 1910, only affected the state statute as related to repairs on completed vessels, and not for a lien in the construction of vessels." Lever Transp. Co. v. Standard Supply Co., (Ala. 1920) 87 So. 598.

1918 Supp., p. 785, sec. 1.

Purpose of Act.—"The primary purpose of the act was to provide 'army transports,' and the commercial shipping was incidental. The act is a war measure; emergency is reflected in nearly every sentence. The purpose was to acquire vessels 'for use as naval auxiliaries or army transports,' and the 'navy yards' were to be utilized. Of the great need for transports the Congress was advised, and the public later found out. Every detail of management, relation, and function of the defendant is prescribed and limited in the Marine Act, and the only use made of the incorporation act, the creation of the Congress, was the filing of articles to give it corporate entity as a matter of convenience, and nowhere is there apparent an intention to waive the sovereign privilege. On the contrary, exempting vessels from immunity and submitting them to admiralty seems conclusive that in all things else the sovereignty was asserted and retained." Sloan Shipyards Corp. v. U. S. Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corp., (W. D. Wash. 1920) 268 Fed. 624, holding that a suit involving more than $10,000 against the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation was not maintainable in the district court.

A suit against the Emergency Fleet Corporation is not one against the United States and does not require the consent of Congress to its maintenance. Pope v. U. S. Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corp., (S. D. Fla. 1920) 269 Fed. 319.

"There is nothing in section 1 or elsewhere in the act which prohibits a libel in personam against a corporation in which the United States has the entire stock interest, for a cause of action in which a libel in personam would lie against it under admiralty and maritime law. The apparent intent of sections 1 and 2 of the act is to prevent interference through arrest and seizure with vessels and cargoes while the vessels are being operated or the cargoes are in course of transportation, and to substitute for an action in rem against the vessel or cargo an action in personam.

"Section 13 repeals the provisions of all other acts inconsistent therewith. As the provisions of section 9 of the Shipping Act of September 7, 1916, are broad in their terms, making such vessels while employed solely as merchant vessels subject to all laws, regulations, and liabilities governing merchant vessels, and the act of March 9, 1920, by sections 1 and 2, provides for the substitution of an action in personam where an action in rem would lie, it is evident that Congress did not intend to repeal the pertinent part of section 9 of the act of 1916, so that all suits in admiralty were to be included within the terms of the act of 1920, but that it was solely intended to substitute an action in personam for an action in rem against the vessel or the cargo, and the effect was to take such cases out of the provisions of the earlier act. There would seem to be no sound reason for construing the act of 1920 as doing more than regulating such suits in admiralty as would interfere with the operation of vessels and the possession of cargoes, if brought in rem, leaving the vessel subject in other cases to the broader provisions of section 9 of the Shipping Act of 1916.

"In my opinion sections 1 and 2 of the act of 1920 must be read together. Section 1 does not prohibit suits against corporations in which the United States has ownership of the entire outstanding stock, but prohibition of arrest and seizure of vessels and cargoes is the sole purpose of the section. It is further apparent, from the provision of section 2 that suits shall be brought in the district in which the parties reside or in which the vessel or cargo charged with liability is found, that the procedure was intended to apply only to proceedings in rem against the vessel or cargo." Banque-Russo, etc. v. U. S. Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corp., (E. D. Pa. 1920) 266 Fed. 897.

1918 Supp., p. 788, sec. 9.

Purpose.—It is said to be doubtless true that the principal reason why this section subjected government owned ships, while operated for mercantile purposes, to the laws, regulations, and liabilities governing merchant vessels, was to protect privately owned craft from unfair competition. The Ceylon Maru, (D. C. Md. 1920) 266 Fed. 396.

Construction.—"While it is the duty of the courts to see to it that the operations of the sovereign shall not be hampered by the seizure of its property, nor shall it, without its consent, be subject directly or indirectly, to suits, there is no reason why such legislation as that found in section 9 of the Shipping Act of 1916 shall be narrowly construed. Such statutes are remedial, and are entitled to a fair liberality of interpretation." The Ceylon Maru, (D. C. Md. 1920) 266 Fed. 396.

Liability of vessel to proceeding in rem.—A vessel which was under requisition by the government can be proceeded against by a suit in rem after her return to the owner for a collision occurring while in government service, as the public service in which the vessel was engaged does not afford her immunity. The Mavisbrook, (D. C. Md. 1921) 270 Fed. 1011.

This section expressly subjects government owned ships, when they are operated as merchantmen, to the laws governing merchant ships, and those laws, include liability to admiralty process, so that, a maritime lien in rem existing, and the only objection to its enforcement having been government ownership, and the law having provided that that immunity shall no longer exist when the ship is used as a merchant vessel, it would seem to follow that she must now answer for a tort alleged to have been committed by her while engaged in army service. The Ceylon Maru, (D. C. Md. 1920) 266 Fed. 396.

Sales of ships to aliens—actions for broker's commissions.—Under this section neither a person not a citizen of the United States can buy nor an owner sell to such a person without the consent of the Shipping Board and a broker cannot recover a commission for procuring such a purchaser where the required consent is not obtained. Keeveny v. McCormack, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 314; Damers v. Trident Fisheries Co., (1920) 119 Me. 343, 111 Atl. 418. In the latter case, the court said: "While the question is one of first impression in this court, we are of the opinion that the statute is a complete bar to the action, and this conclusion is supported by reason and the weight of authority. The option was enforceable, and the testimony shows that both parties intended to carry it out in detail, until it was known that a presidential order declaring an emergency and calling into effect the section of the statute above referred to had been issued; and after the emergency was declared, both parties sought relief by appeal to the United States Shipping Board, and were unsuccessful. The fact and date of the President's declaration are admitted. The final question is: Does such declaration making the statute effective excuse the defendant from the performance of its agreements in its option? We think it does. The general rule is that if, after such contract is entered into, a statute is passed rendering it illegal, the promisor is no longer bound. Tiffany on Sales, p. 310, and cases cited. But it is urged that the statute was not passed after the contract was entered into, but was enacted six months before, to wit, on September 7, 1916, and that the statute does not apply for that reason. We do not see the force of this contention. The statute was passed for a definite, serious purpose, by legislators who had in view the gravity of that purpose, and whose intentions were as serious and definite as the expected emergency could induce. The statute was but a preparation, a means to be used instantly if the emergency arose, and was necessarily inactive and without full effect until the emergency was declared by the President to exist. It then became active, and only then had the force and effect of laws passed without limitation or restriction. It could not operate before the emergency was declared, but it was the law nevertheless. It could and did operate thereafter, and possessed all the force which the Congress intended it should have. It therefore was the law after the contract was signed on February 3, 1917, and was a legal excuse and justification for the defendant's refusal to transfer the steamers involved in this action. The proclamation was issued February 5, 1917. All the conditions named in the option were to be performed after that date. It was the duty of the plaintiffs to make a sale or obtain a binding and enforceable agreement for the sale and transfer of the steamers in the first instance; but even then, in the presence of the circumstances in this case, assuming that the plaintiffs had performed all of the conditions required by the contract, they are presumed to have acted with full knowledge of the existence of the law; for, while the statute was to be without effect until an emergency was proclaimed to exist, it was still the law, and they are charged with a knowledge of its existence and provisions, and are bound thereby. Any other conclusion would work an injustice not heretofore tolerated by courts of law."

Shipping Board as a governmental agency.—See Astoria Marine Iron Works v. U. S. S. Corp., (D. C. Ore. 1921) 270 Fed. 635.

Nature of functions of board.—As to this it has been said: "Any one examining this act, even in a cursory manner, will be struck by the fact that its purposes and the broad powers given as to taking over and managing the ships and shipping, and the powers to inquire into all shipping contracts, and to regulate and control them, and finally to inquire into alleged breaches of the terms of the act, must conclude that the functions of the board thereby provided for were governmental, and not those of a private business concern." Southern Bridge Co. v. U. S. S. Corp., (S. D. Ala. 1920) 266 Fed. 747.

Liability of Emergency Fleet Corporation to suit.—The Emergency Fleet Corporation must be regarded as a separate entity, although all of its stock is owned by the United States, and it has the capacity to sue and may be sued the same as other corporations. Eichberg v. U. S., etc., Corp., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 886; American Cotton Oil Co. v. U. S., etc., Corp., (E. D. La. 1921) 270 Fed. 296; Ingram Day Lumber Co. v. U. S., etc., Corp., (S. D. Miss. 1920) 267 Fed. 283; Perna v. U. S., etc., Corp., (E. D. Pa. 1920) 266 Fed. 896; Banque-Russo, etc., Co. v. U. S., etc., Corp., (E. D. Pa. 1920) 266 Fed. 897. But an action cannot be maintained against the Emergency Fleet Corporation for a tort committed by its attorney. Keeley v. Kerr, (D. C. Ore 1921) 270 Fed. 874.

Jurisdiction of suits against Emergency Fleet Corporation—Immunity from process.—In Lord, etc., Co. v. United States, etc., Corp., (N. D. Ill. 1920) 265 Fed. 955, the defendant moved to dismiss the action on the ground that the corporation was a mere instrumentality of the United States and that the federal court lacked jurisdiction of an action against it. In overruling the motion, the court said: "The Shipping Act provides no jurisdiction in which con-trousers may be litigated, except the provision relating to the enforcement by action in the United States courts of orders of the board (sections 29, 30, 31), and except that section 10 provides that disputes growing out of the taking by the President of vessels for naval or military purposes may be settled by appraisers. If the Emergency Fleet Corporation was a mere instrumentality of the United States, performing only governmental functions, an action against it would be in effect an action against the United States, that could only be maintained in some manner prescribed by statute.

"If, on the other hand, the corporation was only used for the purpose of forwarding the commercial shipping interests of the country, it would be subject to suit the same as any other corporation. Bank of the U. S. v. Planters' Bank, 9 Wheat. 904, 6 L. Ed. 244; Panama R. Co. v. Curran et al., 256 Fed. 772, 168 C. C. A. 114. Ownership by the government of all of the stock of a corporation does not change the situation. It remains a corporation just the same as though it had a dozen or more stockholders. Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Mo. Pac. Ry. Co., 115 U. S. 587, 6 Sup. Ct. 194, 29 L. Ed. 499; Bank of the U. S. v. Planters' Bank, supra; Panama R. Co. v. Curran et al., supra.

"One of the objections to the Shipping Act before Congress was that in the bill there was a tendency toward government ownership, and, in refutation of that charge, it was explained to Congress that:

"If there is in this bill any feature of government ownership, it contains in itself the means for the automatic elimination of all elements of government ownership.' May 16, 1916, Cong. Rec. p. 9163.

"Then follows a rather elaborate explanation of the provisions of section 11, above cited, from which it is clearly apparent that it was intended that individuals might become subscribers to a part or all of the capital stock of any such corporation, and that the government's only control over it would be the same as that of a private owner of a majority of the stock, if it remained a stockholder at all. The language of section 11, providing for the creation of the defendant, limits the powers of the board to the formation of a corporation under the general laws of the District of Columbia for a limited and a purely commercial purpose, viz. to deal merely with merchant vessels in the commerce of the United States. I am of opinion that the language of the act justified the interpretation before Congress.

"A note under section 11 in a 1917 government printed copy of the Shipping Act, handed this court, says the defendant 'has been incorporated in accordance with this provision.' It must be assumed, from the very fact of the provision for the incorporation of the defendant, that it was intended that it should be a real corporation, with all its powers, rights, and obligations intact.

To hold otherwise would be to hold that Congress did the wholly purposeless thing of incorporating a corporation, which should not be a corporation at all, to perform, under the board, things which, as a government agency, the board had ample authority to do.

"It is thought that subsequent legislation and executive orders, referred to in defendant's motion, affect the question here raised, viz. the Urgent Deficiencies Appropriation Act approved June 15, 1917, and executive orders relating thereto and to some extent involving the defendant. The emergency shipping fund provision of the Urgent Deficiencies Appropriation Act gave to the President very broad powers with reference to placing orders for such ships and materials as the necessities of the government might require, and authorized the President to exercise those powers and spend the moneys appropriated through such agency or agencies as he should determine, but that act does not in any way refer to the defendant, except as follows:

"Provided, that all money turned over to the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation may be expended as other moneys of said corporation are now expended." Section 1.

"This indicates not an intention to change the corporation, but does clearly indicate that in expending such moneys it should act as a corporation. . . .

"It is not to be believed, except on the clearest evidence, that Congress, when it authorized the incorporation of the defendant under the general laws of the District of Columbia, to forward a specific, limited, and purely commercial undertaking, intended to take away all those corporate rights, and leave those who might deal with the corporation no place to adjudicate those rights, except in and through the slow and cumbersome processes of the Court of Claims, where over $10,000 is involved."

In Ingram Lumber Co. v. U. S., etc., Corp., (S. D. Miss. 1920) 267 Fed. 283, it was contended that a suit against the Emergency Fleet Corporation should be dismissed because it was in fact a suit against the United States. In overruling this contention, the court said: "I do not think this ground is supported by the record, which says clearly it is a suit against the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation (a distinct legal entity), organized as above set forth. True, the United States may have a dual relation to it: (1) That of stockholder and corporation; (2) principal and agent. It has no other connection or relation to the government, and certainly it is not the United States, which has not been made a defendant in this case in any manner known to the law."

Amount in controversy.—A suit against the Emergency Fleet Corporation for a claim in excess of $10,000 can not be maintained in the district court. Sloan Shipyards Corp. v. U. S., etc., Corp., (W. D. Wash. 1921) 272 Fed. 132.

It is held that for its acts performed in its capacity as a governmental entity the Fleet Corporation is not suable except in the Court of Claims for an amount involving in excess of $10,000. Astoria Marine Iron Works v. U. S., etc., Corp., (D. C. Ore. 1921) 270 Fed. 635.

1920 Supp., p. 232, sec. 2.

Purpose of act.—"The principal purpose of the statute under which the proceeding was brought was to prevent within the United States the arrest upon judicial process of any government owned ship or cargo, without thereby working injustice or hardship to those who as against either, had valid claims which, if the vessel or the merchandise had belonged to private persons, they might have asserted in rem; but there is in it, and in its legislative history, cause to believe that it may also have intended to give the consent of the United States to being made a respondent in suits in personam upon some classes of maritime liabilities in which individuals would have been liable in personam, but upon which proceedings in rem could not have been maintained." Blamberg v. U. S., (D. C. Md. 1921) 272 Fed. 978.

Scope of section.—"There is no reason to suppose that Congress intended to make the United States suable under any circumstances in which a suit could not have been instituted in this country, were the ship or cargo privately owned, and yet, if the libelants' contention be sustained, that will be the result here. There was no privity of contract between the United States and the shippers of cargo by the Catskill, nor has the United States done them any actionable wrong. If it were an individual, no proceeding in personam could be brought against it, either in admiralty or at common law. Nor could any libel be maintained against the ship in rem in any court of the United States, because none of them could have taken possession of her. The grant of jurisdiction made by the second section of the act is expressly limited to such proceedings as 'could be maintained at the time of the commencement of the action herein provided for,' and in the instant case at that time there was no court in the United States in which the suit could have been maintained, either in rem or in personam, had an individual occupied the same relation to the cause of action as was borne by the United States.

"Nor is this a narrow construction. It is one in perfect harmony with the most liberal and far-reaching purpose which can reasonably be attributed to Congress. To hold that it intended that a citizen should be no worse off because of government ownership is as far as any one will be justified in going. There is no reason to suppose that it intended to open the doors of its courts, as against the United States, to suits which could not there have been prosecuted against an individual or his property. The general language of every statute must be read in the light of the legislative intent, in so far as that is unmistakably expressed." Blamberg v. U. S., (D. C. Md. 1921) 272 Fed. 978.

Suit by alien.—The provision that suit shall be brought in the "district court of the United States for the district in which the parties so suing or any of them reside or have their principal place of business in the United States, or in which the vessel or cargo charged with liability is found," has been held not to apply in the case of an alien who neither resides nor has a place of business in any district in the United States. Middleton v. U. S., (E. D. S. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 199, wherein the court said: "Assuming, however, that the Japanese corporation is the party alone interested, then, inasmuch as it neither resides nor has any principal place of business in any district in the United States, it would be impossible for it to sue, under the construction placed upon the act by the counsel for the government, in any district in the United States, save one in which the vessels might be found. If no vessel can be found within the United States, then no matter how meritorious the claim of the alien may be, whether in rem or in personam, it would be impossible for him to sue.

"This would not appear to be in accordance with the intention of the statute. Under the principles to be deduced from preceding decisions of the federal courts in analogous cases, it would appear that, where the provision of the act is that the suit must be brought in the district of the residence of one of the parties, then in the case of an alien defendant such restriction does not apply, as that would mean that, unless the alien sued should be found capable of service in the district of the residence of the citizen desiring to sue him, he could not be sued at all. The principle would seem to be that an alien may be considered for the purposes of jurisdiction, if he enters the United States, or is brought into it, for the purposes of suit, to reside in any district.

"If this is a proceeding in personam, brought on behalf of the Japanese corporation alone, an alien corporation, under the principles of these decisions it would appear that it could sue in any district in the United States."

Necessity of induction into service.—In Continental Jewelry Co. v. Minsky, (1920) 119 Me. 476, 111 Atl. 801, it was held that this act had no application to a person who had been accepted for military service but not actually inducted into active service.

1918 Supp., p. 812, sec. 101.

Effect of termination of military service.—The act of Congress known as the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act by its express language becomes inoperative and without effect upon the death or discharge of a soldier or sailor within its protection, and an order of a court, requiring a refundment or return of money paid prior to his entry into the service upon an executory contract for the sale of land as a condition to a cancellation thereof, is not authorized by the act in an action or proceeding commenced subsequent to such death or discharge. Nelson Real Estate Agency v. Seeman, (1920) 147 Minn. 354, 180 N. W. 227.

In Hickernell v. Gregory, (Tex. 1920) 224 S. W. 691, in sustaining the forfeiture of an oil and gas lease for nonpayment of rent it was said: "Hickernell cannot defend under the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of Congress of March 8, 1918. He did not enter the military service until June, 1918, after his lease was executed in February, and he states that he was discharged from the service January 24, 1919. The rent was not due until February 6, 1919. It is provided by section 101, subd. 2, that the 'period of military service' of a soldier or sailor 'shall terminate with the date of discharge from the active service or,' etc. Then, according to his own testimony, he cannot claim the advantages and privileges conferred by the act."

A civilian captain of a transport is not within the protection of the act. Greenwood v. Puget Mill Co., (1920) 111 Wash. 464, 191 Pac. 393.

1918 Supp., p. 814, sec. 200(1).

Who may object to noncompliance.—To attack a default judgment for noncompliance with this section the defendant must show that he was in the military service. Mader v. Christie, (Cal. App. 1921) 198 Pac. 45.

Time for filing affidavit.—An affidavit filed after the entry of a default but before the entry of judgment is seasonably filed. Mader v. Christie, (Cal. App. 1921) 198 Pac. 45.

1918 Supp., p. 814, sec. 200(4).

Application must be made within ninety days after the termination of the military service of the applicant to set aside a default entered in violation of this section. Combs v. Combs, (1920) 180 N. C. 381, 104 S. E. 656.

Application must show meritorious defense.—"It is nowhere made to appear that the defendant has a meritorious or legal defense to the action. In his affidavit the defendant fails to set out that he has any defense to the cause of action as stated in the complaint. While he declares that he has a good and meritorious defense to said action, he fails to set out what that defense is. The statute says that it must be made to appear that the defendant has a meritorious or legal defense. It is not left to the defendant to say that his defense is meritorious or legal, but it must be made to appear so to the judge of the court; for that reason the defendant is required to set out the facts constituting his defense." Combs v. Combs, (1920) 180 N. E. 381, 104 S. E. 656.

1918 Supp., p. 815, sec. 202.

Interest of soldier in subject matter previously extinguished.—Where it appears that the rights of a certain person in property were based on a mortgage which was foreclosed before the war, and that any interest derived from him by the present owners passed before the war, the act has no application, and the fact that the person referred to is in the military service is irrelevant in an action involving the title to which he is not a party. Chance v. Hawkinson, (Minn. 1921) 182 N. W. 911.

1918 Supp., p. 816, sec. 205.

Suit on indemnity insurance policy.—In Steinfeld v. Massachusetts Bonding, etc., Co., (N. H. 1921) 112 Atl. 800, this section was held applicable to a suit on an indemnity insurance policy, which contained a stipulation as to the time within which a suit must be brought after payment of loss. The court said: "The defendant's argument is that the time for bringing suit was limited by the contract, and not by 'any law,' and that therefore the statute does not apply. The defect in the argument is its assumption that the contract is binding, irrespective of any law. This plainly is not so. The contract is valid because some law so declares it. In the defendant's brief it of necessity appeals to the law to sustain its position that the contract stipulation is valid. It is by virtue of the decided cases cited by the defendant that it is able to demonstrate the correctness of that position. Actions are not limited without law. It was the agreement plus the law that created the legal limitation in this case. It is true, as the defendant argues, that a contract is not a law. It is equally true that an agreement without law is not a contract.

"The application of the federal act is not limited to statutory provisions. It applies to all law, and provides, in substance, that, notwithstanding the state law limits the action as by contract agreed, that law shall not apply while the plaintiff is in the service.

"It is manifest that the present case is within the spirit and intent of the act. The purpose was to extend the time for bringing actions generally. Id. § 100. It was not the legislative intent that the remedial purpose of the act should be defeated by a narrow or technical construction of the language used. Halle v. Cavanaugh, 111 Atl. 76."

Suit by husband as executor of wife's estate.—This section does not apply to a suit by a husband as executor of his wife's estate to recover damages for death by wrongful act, but he may appear and prosecute such a suit as one interested in her estate. Halle v. Cavanaugh, (N. H. 1920) 111 Atl. 76.

Running of time to redeem from a sale under a vendor's lien, made prior to the enactment of the statute, is not stayed by this section. Wood v. Vogel, (1920) 204 Ala. 692, 87 So. 174, wherein it was said: "The right of redemption under section 5746 et seq. from judicial and quasi judicial sales of real estate is not a property right, but is a mere personal privilege accorded by the statute, to be exercised in the manner and within the time prescribed by law. Lewis v. McBride, 176 Ala. 134, 57 South. 705; Burke v. Brewer, 133 Ala. 389, 32 South. 602; Parmer v. Parmer, 74 Ala. 285. It is not a right of action in the sense in which statutes of limitations are applicable, and the prescription of a period of two years within which the privilege must be exercised does not create a statute of limitations. That prescription affects the right, and not the remedy, whereas a statute of limitations operates upon the remedy only, except in actions for the recovery of property."

1918 Supp., p. 816, sec. 300 (1).

[Eviction or distress, etc.]

Power of justice's court.—A justice's court is within the provision as to "leave of court" and the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in eviction proceedings is not divested by this act. Riordan v. Zube, (Cal. App. 1921) 195 Pac. 65, wherein the court said: "Though not mentioned in the Constitution as such, the justices' courts are courts of the state of uniform, though limited, jurisdiction. They find their life and power in the acts of the Legislature, which the Constitution expressly authorizes the Legislature to enact. The argument of appellant seems to be that, as the Moratorium Act prohibited the eviction of such dependents except upon leave of court, and that as the term 'court' as used in that act was therein defined to include 'any court of competent jurisdiction of the United States or of any state, whether or not a court of record,' the application should have been made to a superior court, because justices' courts are not included in the enumeration of state courts in the state Constitution. But the Moratorium Act does not pretend to change the jurisdiction of any court which is created under state authority. The provisions of that act are made applicable to all courts of competent jurisdiction, whether created by the Congress or the various states."

Equitable relief against judgment.—In denying equitable relief against a judgment of eviction entered by a justice of the peace, the court in Riordan v. Zube, (Cal. App. 1921) 195 Pac. 65, said: "The justice's court, therefore, had jurisdiction to render the judgment, and it was not void upon its face. The execution was stayed for three months, which was the maximum period of leniency authorized by the Moratorium Act. Section 300, subd. 2. Appellant was thus given the full protection of the law. The justice's court having had jurisdiction of both the person and subject-matter of the action, its judgment was valid upon its face. Defendant in that case having been given all the protection provided by the Moratorium Act, he had no cause in equity to prevent the execution of that judgment. On the other hand, if aggrieved by the judgment in the justice's court, the statute gave him an adequate remedy by appeal to the superior court. His failure to pursue that remedy does not warrant an equitable action to set aside the judgment, which is valid on its face."

1918 Supp., p. 817, sec. 302 (1).

Obligations secured by mortgage, when originating.—Where a mortgage was dated prior to the passage of this act but was not delivered or the consideration paid until after its enactment, the obligation secured by it did not originate prior to the approval of this act. And if a mortgage originating prior to the passage of this act is satisfied after its enactment but is kept alive and assigned as additional security for a new mortgage given at the time of payment, and the new mortgage is subsequently foreclosed, the obligation of the old mortgage is a debt secured by the new one and hence is one originating subsequent to the passage of this act. Kendall v. Bolster, (Mass. 1921) 131 N. E. 319.

State legislation abrogated.—This section abrogates a state moratorium law forbidding absolutely mortgage foreclosure proceedings against persons in the military or naval service. Pierrard v. Hoch, (1920) 97 Ore. 71, 184 Pac. 494, 191 Pac. 328.

Foreclosure completed before act.—In an action to set aside a sheriff's deed upon a mortgage foreclosure by advertisement, relying upon the federal and state moratorium acts, where it appeared that on December 1,

1917, the foreclosure sale was held; that on January 29, 1918, the state act, and on March 8, 1918, the federal Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act were enacted; that on December 6, 1918, the sheriff's deed was issued; that the plaintiff was in the military service from July, 1917, to May 22, 1919; and that in October, 1920, he instituted this action, it was held that the execution of a sheriff's deed evidenced only the ministerial act of the officer to complete the formal transfer of the naked legal title after the expiration of the equity of redemption, and did not affect the expiration of the equity of redemption; that the federal act was not applicable, even though it be assumed that the plaintiff's equity of redemption was suspended during the period of his military service and for three months thereafter, for the reason that such equity of redemption thereafter fully expired before the institution of the present action, and without any alleged offer or tender made to redeem. Olson v. Gowan Lenning Brown Co., (N. D. 1921) 182 N. W. 929.

STATE DEPARTMENT

Vol. IX, p. 376, sec. 205. [First ed., vol. VII, p. 116.]

Duty of Secretary of State as to amendments.—Under this section it is the duty of the Secretary of State, upon receiving notice from three-fourths of the several states that the proposed amendment has been adopted, to issue his proclamation and publish the amendment. He is not required, or authorized, to investigate and determine whether or not the notices state the truth but must accept them as doing so, if they are in due form. U. S. v. Colby, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 265 Fed. 998.

Proclamation as essential to validity.—The validity of a constitutional amendment does not depend in any wise upon the proclamation of the Secretary of State under this section. It is the approval of the requisite number of states in accordance with article 5 of the Constitution, and not the proclamation, that gives vitality to the amendment and makes it a part of the Constitution. U. S. v. Colby, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 265 Fed. 998.

TELEGRAPHS, TELEPHONES AND CABLES

1918 Supp., p. 834. [Government control, etc.]

Federal decisions are controlling as to the construction of the resolution and the proclamation and general orders issued thereunder. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Conditt, (Tex. 1920) 223 S. W. 234.

Government control as defense to action.—In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Poston, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 598, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) — (reversing (S. C. 1920) 107 S. E. 516), it was held that a telegraph company was not liable for damages resulting from negligent delay in delivering a message while its telegraph system was, pursuant to this joint resolution of Congress, and the proclamation of the President of July 22, 1918, in the exclusive possession and control of the federal government, and was being operated by the Postmaster General.

"The complete control and the exclusive possession of this, as well as all other wire lines within the resolution of Congress, as effected through the proclamation of the President, having passed to the United States, the defendant (appellee) was not and could not have been engaged in the business described in the complaint, except, and that only, under the derivative authority, a mere agency, imposed upon the telegraph company by the paramount governmental processes set forth in the plea, to the end that whatever service the physical properties and the company's personnel might render in the transmission of intelligence by wire should be and was a public governmental service or function, to or in respect of the discharge of which, within the realm of the company's legitimate activity under the complete control and exclusive possession of the government, neither the company, as such, nor the persons so serving in the operation of any of the functions of the company so dominated, were subject to individual, corporate, or personal liability to third persons for a breach of a contract or for a tort (the breach of a public duty) predicated alone of a contract for the transmission of intelligence by wire." Candidate v. Western Union Tel. Co., (1920) 203 Ala. 675, 85 So. 10.

That a telegraph company did not disclose to the sender the fact of government control does not make it liable as the agent of an undisclosed principal, all persons being charged with knowledge of the public acts by which federal control was assumed. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Glover, (1920) 17 Ala. App. 374, 86 So. 154.

Recovery cannot be had against a telephone company for death caused by negligence occurring during federal control. McFeena v. Paris Home Telephone, etc., Co., (1921) 190 Ky. 299, 227 S. W. 450.

A telegraph company under federal control is not liable for negligence in the transmission of money by telegraph. Dessery v. Western Union Tel. Co., (Kan. 1920) 192 Pac. 728. See also Western Union Tel. Co. v. Conditt, (Tex. 1920) 223 S. W. 234.

The complete and exclusive possession, supervision, control, and operation of all the telegraph and telephone systems within the jurisdiction of the United States and of all the equipment, supplies, and materials belonging or pertaining thereto for war purposes by the government of the United States, authorized by Joint Resolution No. 38 of the Sixty-Fifth Congress and taken and assumed by the Postmaster General, under and by virtue of a proclamation issued by the President, is not inconsistent with right, power, and duty on the part of an owner of such a system to extend its lines and improve, maintain, and repair it, within the period of such possession, supervision, control, and operation. Accordingly, while there is no liability for negligence in operation there is for negligence in construction, maintenance or repair work. Spring v. American Tel., etc., Co., (1920) 86 W. Va. 192, 103 S. E. 208, 10 A. L. R. 951 (overruling demurrer to declaration on ground that it did not appear that truck alleged to have been negligently driven was used in operation and not in repair).

Resolutions and proclamations thereunder judicially noticed.—See Western Union Tel. Co. v. Conditt, (Tex. 1920) 223 S. W. 234.

Suits to enforce statutory and administrative restrictions affecting Indians.—The United States, though without pecuniary interest in the relief sought, may maintain a suit to enforce statutory and administrative restrictions on the disposal and leasing of allotments to Indians who have not been fully emancipated, but are still wards of the United States. La Motte v. U. S., (1921) 254 U. S. 570, 41 S. Ct. 204, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 256 Fed. 5, 167 C. C. A. 277.

TIMBER LANDS AND FOREST RESERVES

Vol. IX, p. 590, sec. 4. [First ed., vol. X, p. 405.]

Rights of municipality.—In Langdon v. Walla Walla, (1920) 112 Wash. 446, 183 Pac. 1, this section was referred to, the court in answer to a contention that a proposed system of municipal water works was impracticable saying: "The suggestion that the city of Walla Walla might be impeded because it in no event can exercise the right of eminent domain within the limits of the Wenaha National Forest Reserve seems to be answered by the fact that the city has already acquired all necessary rights within the limits of that reservation. If not, it seems plain that it will be enabled to do so under the act of Congress of February 1, 1905, which makes express provision for the acquiring of such rights by the city."

III. CONSTRUCTION OF ACT

1. In General (p. 647)

Necessity of overt act.—To same effect as original annotation, see Langenberg Hat Co. v. United Cloth Hat, etc., Makers, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 266 Fed. 127.

3. Words and Terms Defined and Construed (p. 649)

"Trade or commerce."—"The word 'trade,' in its broadest signification, includes, not only the business of exchanging commodities by barter, but the business of buying and selling for money, or commerce and traffic generally." May v. Sloan, 101 U. S. 231, 237 (25 L. Ed. 797). It means "the buying as well as the selling of property." United States v. United States Steel Corporation et al, (D. C.) 223 Fed. 55, 177.

Webster's Dictionary defines trade as "the act or business of exchanging commodities by barter; the business of buying and selling for money; commerce; traffic; barter"—and says that "Commerce, in its simplest signification, means exchange of goods. * * * It may be said to be trade, traffic, or exchange between different places and communities." And according to the Century Dictionary, commerce is defined as "interchange of goods, merchandise or property of any kind; trade; traffic." "Commerce, briefly stated, is the sale or exchange of commodities." United States v. Swift & Co., (C. C.) 122 Fed. 529. Substantially the same definitions are given in the cases of the United States v. E. C. Knight Co., 156 U. S. 1, 15 Sup. Ct. 249, 39 L. ed. 325; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 189, 190, 6 L. ed. 23; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 5 Sup. Ct. 826, 29 L. ed. 158; In re Charge to Grand Jury, (D. C.) 161 Fed. 834.

Through these definitions runs the idea that trade and commerce require the transfer of something, whether it be persons, commodities, or intelligence, from one place or person to another. The concomitant of this concept is the principle, approved by the Supreme Court of the United States, that "importation into one state from another is the indispensable element, the test, of interstate commerce." National League, etc., v. Federal Baseball Club, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 681.

Manufacturing is not "commerce." Gable v. Vonnegut Machinery Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 66.

IV. MODE OF DETERMINING QUESTION OF VIOLATION

1. General Principles (p. 651)

Reasonableness of restraint.—It is said that one of the most satisfactory ways to "determine what is the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the restraint put upon trade by a contract is to consider the motive.

extent and effect of the contract, consider the circumstances under which it was made, consider what the parties had in mind, what motives served to move them to the various ends they sought to attain, and then, in the light of those considerations, say whether or not that which they did was, under all the circumstances obtaining, in its nature and effect, unreasonable in its restraint upon the free flow of the commerce involved. So measured and tested, if it be unreasonable in its restraints upon trade, it lies within the prohibitions of the Sherman Law; if not, that law has no concern with it." Continental Candy Corp. v. California, etc., Sugar Refining Co., (N. D. Cal. 1920) 270 Fed. 302.

"Rule of reason."—In this connection it is said: "Aside from all other considerations taking the decisions in the Tobacco Case, 221 U. S. 106, 31 Sup. Ct. 632, 55 L. ed. 663, the Standard Oil Case, 221 U. S. 1, 31 Sup. Ct. 502, 55 L. ed. 619, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734, the Trans-Missouri Case, 166 U. S. 290, 17 Sup. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007, the Keystone Watch Case (C. C.) 218 Fed. 502, and even the Steel Trust Case of last spring (decided March 1, 1920) 251 U. S. 417, 40 Sup. Ct. 293, 65 L. Ed. —, 8 A. L. R. 1121, as I read them and as I now recollect them (recalling particularly the emphasis with which Mr. Justice Harlan dissented in some of those cases, and the growing vehemence with which he indicated that the Supreme Court was reading into that law that which Congress had definitely and deliberately refused to incorporate into it, to wit, "the rule of reason")—taking all those cases into consideration, giving the latest expressions paramount weight, and endeavoring to arrive at the proper path to be traveled by us in the construction of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, it seems to me that this much clearly lies within the realm of legal indispute: Regardless of the precise and definite and seemingly controlling language of the statute, as the same has been read here this morning, the Supreme Court of the United States, which is really the final arbiter of our destinies in this country, has said that a contract in restraint of trade, to be within the prohibitions of the Sherman Act, must not only be in restraint of trade, but it must be so unreasonably—to an unreasonable degree." Continental Candy Corp. v. California, etc., Sugar Refining Co., (N. D. Cal. 1920) 270 Fed. 302.

Direct or indirect effect of contract, etc.—Covenants in a contract are not in unreasonable restraint of trade where they at most operate as a partial and not as a general restraint, and are "merely ancillary to the main purpose of a lawful contract, and necessary to protect the covenantee in the enjoyment of the legitimate fruits of the contract, or to protect him from the dangers of an unjust use of those fruits by the other party," or are covenants necessary to protect the corporation in its retained business. Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. Coca-Cola Co., (D. C. Del. 1920) 269 Fed. 796.

The statute does not apply "where the trade or commerce affected is interstate, unless the effect thereon is direct, not merely indirect." If the necessary effect is but incidentally or indirectly to restrict the commerce, "while its chief result is to foster the trade and increase the business of those who make and operate it, it is not violative of this law." National League, etc. v. Federal Baseball Club, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 681.

Neither the Sherman nor Clayton Acts furnishes a remedy against acts merely because they incidentally and indirectly affect interstate commerce; they apply only to acts which directly and immediately relate thereto. Gable v. Vonnegut Machinery Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 66.

Effect of war conditions.—A contract entered into in regard to a sale of sugar which in accordance with suggestions by the government contained restriction against its resale by the vendee, was held, in view of war conditions and circumstances at the time, not to violate this act. Continental Candy Corp. v. California, etc., Sugar Refining Co., (N. D. Cal. 1920) 270 Fed. 302.

V. APPLICATION OF ACT

1. General Principles (p. 657)

Manufacture of articles.—Where goods are being manufactured with the intention of shipping them in interstate commerce when they come into existence in fulfillment of orders therefor, it has been held that the manufacturers are engaged in interstate commerce and that unlawful acts of others in the nature of a conspiracy which prevent such goods from coming into existence are in restraint of interstate commerce within the meaning of this Act. Herket, etc., Trunk Co. v. United Leatherworkers' International Union, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 662.

2. Application in Particular Instances

a. Combinations and Contracts to Affect Prices and Terms of Sale (p. 660)

Combination to fix resale prices.—[The essential agreement, combination, or conspiracy to violate the Sherman Anti-Trust Act of July 2, 1890, by maintaining resale prices, may be implied from a course of dealing or other circumstances. But it is reversible error to charge the jury in a three-fold damage suit founded on an alleged contract, combination, or conspiracy to maintain resale prices, contrary to this act, that, if they find that defendant manufacturer indicated a sales plan to wholesalers and jobbers, which plan fixed the price below which the wholesalers and jobbers were not to sell to retailers, and find that defendant called this particular feature of this plan to their attention on many different occasions, and find a great majority of them not only expressing no dissent from such plan, but actually co-operating in carrying it out by themselves selling at the prices named, they may reasonably find from such fact that there was an agreement or combination forbidden by the statute. Frey v. Cudahy Packing Co., (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 451, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 65, 171 C. C. A. 661.

An agreement by the manufacturer of a talking machine and a retail dealer that the machine supplied the dealer should not be retailed except at a fixed price is an unlawful restraint of trade under this Act and for injury arising out of their mutual conduct neither party can obtain legal redress against the other. However, if after the breach of such a contract by the retailer, the manufacturer in addition to cancelling the dealer's agreement, induces distributors of its machines to whom it has sold them, to refuse to fill the retailer's orders already given or to refrain thereafter from selling him any of its products, it is guilty of an unlawful restraint of trade for which the retailer may recover damages based on the loss he sustains through a sale of his stock in an incomplete condition due to his inability to purchase additions, but he cannot recover for loss of anticipated profits based on evidence of profits made when engaged with the defendant in an unlawful business. Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. Klemeny, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 810.

A contract of absolute sale, made by a medical corporation of its various manufactured preparations, in which the purchaser is to sell all goods purchased at regular retail prices to be fixed by the corporation, where its entire product is sold throughout the country only by means of like restrictive contracts, operates as a "restraint of trade," unlawful as to interstate commerce under Act Cong. July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209. Brooks v. J. R. Watkins Medical Co., (Okla. 1921) 196 Pac. 956.

c. Coal Companies and Producers (p. 663)

A contract which an anthracite coal company, controlled by an interstate railway carrier through stock ownership and common officers, made with a sales company, the stockholders in which were practically identical with those in the railway company, whereby the coal company is to sell the coal mined by it to the sales company, the latter to pay therefor at 65 per cent of the New York prices, and to sell no other coal than that purchased from the coal company, there being further provisions that the coal company shall lease all its facilities, structures, and trestles to the sales company; that either party shall have the right to abrogate and cancel the contract upon giving six months' notice, and that the sales company shall not buy coal except from the coal company,—violates both the commodities clause of the Act of June 29, 1906, (see vol. 4, p. 363) making it unlawful for any railway company to transport in interstate commerce any article which it may own or in which it may have any interest, and the Sherman Anti-trust Act of July 2, 1890, prohibiting contracts in restraint of trade. U. S. v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., (1920) 254 U. S. 255, 41 S. Ct. 104, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, (reversing [S. D. N. Y. 1914] 226 Fed. 399) wherein it was further held that the combination must be so dissolved as to give each of such companies its entire independence, and all contract relations between the coal company and the sales company which would serve in any manner to render the sales company not entirely free to extend its business of buying and selling where and from and to whom it chooses with entire freedom and independence must be enjoined, so that the sales company may in effect, as well as in form, become an independent dealer, free to act in competition with the coal company or railway company.

e. Railroads (p. 665)

Giving exclusive privilege to transfer company.—The giving by a railroad company of an exclusive privilege to a transfer company to transport passengers and baggage from its station does not violate this act. Clisbee v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Tex. 1921) 230 S. W. 235.

f. Miscellaneous Cases (p. 669)

Baseball club.—To same effect as original annotation, see National League, etc., v. Federal Baseball Club, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 691, wherein it was held that baseball contracts by reason of the reserve clause contained therein did not affect interstate commerce.

Bill posters.—In Sullivan v. Associated Billposters, etc., (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 272 Fed. 323, it appeared that in 1891 a number of billposters located in the various cities of the United States combined to monopolize and control the billposting business throughout the United States and Canada, and formed an association, which thereafter, in 1902, was incorporated and became the first of the defendants named in each of the above actions. All of its officers and directors have participated in the combination. The measures adopted to control interstate and foreign trade and commerce were: (a) Membership confined to one billposter in each town; (b) rules preventing members of the association from dealing with any advertiser who furnished business to a nonmember; (c) agreed schedules of prices for billposting; (d) furnishing members with funds to buy competing plants; (e) since July, 1911, prohibiting members from accepting work from advertisers direct, and permitting them only to accept work through solicitors licensed by the association, who were to pay a fixed license fee of $1,000 and receive a commission of 16½ per cent.; (f) threatening to discriminate against lithographers who furnished sample posters to independent billposters or to advertisers desiring to employ independents, by refusing to deal with such lithographers. The court said:

"It is strongly urged by the defendants that they have merely furnished additional facilities for advertising and have been neither engaged in interstate commerce nor have directly affected it. The direct result and intended purpose of the alleged combination, however, was to prevent posters from being transported from state to state, except for erection on billboards by the defendants or their agents. Lithographers who dealt with any independent billposter could not deal with them. As a result, the defendants in the billposting business caused a continuous transmission of billposters from state to state, to be placed by members of the association in their respective localities. No advertiser could place his posters, except through their agency. The members of the association were freed from the competition of independent billposters, for, if the advertiser or the lithographer, dealt with an independent billposter, he could not deal with defendants. Lithographers, who allowed their posters to be placed by independents, would lose the privilege of having their posters placed by the defendants, and could only have their posters handled by independent billposters, who had become few in number and consequently offered limited facilities. The advertiser cannot have his billposters delivered for placing in the various states, unless he arranges his billposting through one of the defendants' solicitors. He cannot even buy his posters from the lithographer, unless he deals with the billposters in the defendant association, for the lithographers cannot allow their posters to be placed by independent posting concerns, because of the risk of boycott by the association. The scheme is not only so devised as to define the agencies which must be employed in placing posters, but is so arranged as to prevent the possibility of purchasing posters from the leading lithographers unless the requisites of the association are met.

"Within the doctrine laid down by the Supreme Court in the case of Hopkins v. United States, 171 U. S. 578, 19 Sup. Ct. 40, 43 L. ed. 290, this arrangement would not constitute a restraint of interstate commerce, in violation of the Sherman Act, if it was limited to preventing members of the association who had purchased posters from the lithographers from being employed by advertisers to post their bills who did not give all their billposting business to such members. But in the complaints under consideration it is stated that billposters not only put up posters for advertisers, but at times themselves purchased sample posters and sold them to, as well as placed them for, advertisers. An agreement among the defendants to purchase from no lithographer who sold sample posters to an independent billposter would clearly be in restraint of interstate commerce. It would be a direct interference with the sale and transmission of posters from one state to another and would violate the Sherman Act."

Forbidding agents to handle auxiliary device.—For an automobile manufacturer to forbid its agents to handle an auxiliary device made by another for use on the automobile is not a violation of this act. McMaster v. Ford Motor Co., (1920) 114 S. C. 100, 103 S. E. 87.

Sale of part of business.—In Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. Coca Cola Co., (D. C. Del. 1920) 269 Fed. 796, it was held that a contract was not violative of this act or the Clayton Act under which the manufacturer of a syrup known as "Coca-Cola" sold the rights to bottle such syrup to another corporation, the purchaser agreeing to buy all of the Coca-Cola syrup necessary to a compliance with the agreement from the seller. The court said: "It is next contended by the defendant that, if the contract be construed as it is now construed by the court, it is void under the law of Georgia, the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act. In this connection it should be observed that the effect of the contract was not a merger or consolidation of businesses theretofore existing in severalty, but was the complete severance of the bottling business from the business of supplying soda fountains with the syrup, while the result which the defendant seeks under statutes intended to prevent monopoly would give to the defendant a complete and exclusive monopoly of both the fountain business and the bottling business. The accomplishment of this result through the instrumentality of the anti-monopoly statutes would, indeed, be unique."

Sale of magazines.—Where the members of a state council of defense in New Mexico during the War with Germany in a publication issued under its authority sought to prevent the sale and distribution of magazines published by a New York corporation and shipped to Mexico for sale such action was held to be in excess of their authority and in violation of the Interstate Commerce Act, it appearing that the magazines contained no objectionable matter and that the action of the council was based on alleged derelictions of a principal stockholder of the corporation as an individual in newspapers published by him. Council of Defense v. International Magazine Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 287 Fed. 390. The court said: "Whatever may have been the derelictions of Hearst as an individual or in his newspapers, it is absolutely clear that complainant, which was engaged solely in publishing and selling magazines, had published no objectionable matter in its magazines, and it had nothing to do with the Hearst newspapers, nor any interest in them. The declared and obvious purpose was to destroy complainant's business in New Mexico. This purpose was proceeding toward success, when halted by the injunction of the court below. The various defendants were planning and acting together to effectuate the above purpose. They were doing so without legal warrant or protection. Their acts amounted to a conspiracy to boycott or blacklist the magazines published by complainant. All of these publications came into the state through interstate commerce. The only purpose of shipping the magazines into New Mexico was for sale there; hence a movement which sought to prevent, and was succeeding in preventing, newsdealers, who were here the importers, from receiving, handling, and selling such magazines, directly interfered with that commerce. We think this situation within the prohibition of the Sherman Act."

VII. PROCEEDINGS UNDER ACT.

1. In General (p. 677).

Jurisdiction of state court.—"The state courts have no jurisdiction of an original action brought under the act of Congress to obtain the relief therein provided for." McMaster v. Ford Motor Co., (1920) 114 S. C. 100, 103 S. E. 87.

VII. VIOLATION OF ACT AS DEFENSE TO SUIT ON CONTRACT.

1. In General (p. 682).

Contract valid.—Recovery of the price on a contract for the sale of goods is not prevented by the fact that the seller is an unlawful combination or trust under this act. Dreyfus v. Corn Products Co., (Ala. 1920) 204 Ala. 593, 96 So. 386.

2. Particular Actions (p. 684)

Action on lease of machinery.—In a suit on leases of shoe-machinery where the defendant sets up in defense that the plaintiff is an illegal combination in violation of this Act, and that the leases sued on are direct and material parts of the combination, but sets out no facts in connection therewith, such allegations are mere conclusions of the pleader and not admitted by demurrer. Witherell, etc., Co. v. United Shoe Machinery Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1919) 267 Fed. 950.

Vol. IX, p. 687, sec. 2. [First ed., vol. VII, p. 340.]

II. PARTICULAR INSTANCES (p. 694)

Railroad in control of coal company.—A railway company which, in combination with a subsidiary coal company controlled by it through stock ownership and common officers, deliberately enters upon a policy of making extensive purchases of anthracite land tributary to the railway company's lines, for the purpose of controlling the mining, transportation, and sale of coal to be obtained therefrom, and of preventing and suppressing competition, especially in the transportation and sale of such coal in interstate commerce, and continues this policy after the passage of the Anti-trust Act of July 2, 1890, with increasing energy and tenacity of purpose, with the result that a practical monopoly is attained of the transportation and sale of anthracite coal derived from such lands, violates the provisions of sections 1 and 2 of such act, forbidding restraints of interstate trade or commerce, and monopolization of or attempts to monopolize a part of such trade or commerce. U. S. v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., (1920) 254 U. S. 255, 41 S. Ct. 104, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (S. D. N. Y. 1914) 225 Fed. 399.

Vol. IX, p. 701, sec. 4. [First ed., vol. VII, p. 344.]

I. Jurisdiction in general.

II. Who may maintain action.

III. Pleading and evidence.

IV. Remedies and relief.

I. JURISDICTION IN GENERAL (p. 701)

Suit to enjoin consolidation of corporations.

—A suit by a stockholder to enjoin the consolidation of two corporations as being a combination in violation of this act is not maintainable under this section. General Invest. Co. v. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 235.

II. WHO MAY MAINTAIN ACTION (p. 702)

Who may sue to enjoin.—Private parties cannot maintain a suit for injunction under this section. Gable v. Vonnegut Machinery Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 66.

III. PLEADING AND EVIDENCE (p. 704)

Evidence.—A conspiracy to interfere with interstate commerce need not be proved by direct evidence. It may be shown by circumstantial evidence. Herket, etc., Trunk Co. v. United Leatherworkers' International Union, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 662.

IV. REMEDIES AND RELIEF (p. 704)

Remedies provided by Act as exclusive.—The remedies provided by the Sherman Anti-trust Act, for enforcing the rights created by it, are exclusive. Geddes v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., (1921) 254 U. S. 590, 41 S. Ct. 209, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, (reversing, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1917) 245 Fed. 225, 157 C. C. A. 417, which held however that the lower federal courts properly assumed jurisdiction of the case presented by a bill filed by minority stockholders to set aside a sale of corporate property on the ground that the purchase was made in pursuance of a purpose to violate the Sherman Anti-trust Act, where such suit was begun before it had become the settled law that the remedies provided by that act for enforcing the rights created by it are exclusive.

Modification of decree.—The jurisdiction of the court is not limited to the making of decrees initially to prevent and restrain violations of the Anti-Trust Act, but extends upon proper occasion to the modification of decrees looking to the continued prevention and restraint of violations. This may be more readily be done where, the modification proposed does not call for revision of the decree on the merits, or against any person concluded thereby. U. S. v. Du Pont De Nemours, (D. C. Del. 1921) 273 Fed. 869.

Vol. IX, p. 713, sec. 7. [First ed., vol. VII, p. 345.]

- II. Right to sue.
- III. Pleading, practice and procedure.
- IV. Evidence.
- V. Damages.

II. RIGHT TO SUE (p. 717)

Who may sue.—It is not necessary that a person suing for damages under this section be himself engaged in interstate commerce. Sullivan v. Associated Billposters, etc., (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 272 Fed. 323; Charles A. Ramsay Co. v. Associated Bill Posters, etc., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 140.

Under this statute those who may sue for threefold damages by virtue of its terms are limited to those "who shall be injured in his business or property." Accordingly, in order to maintain an action it is not sufficient to show that the defendants might have been subjected to criminal prosecution by the government, or to corrective or coercive proceedings at the instance of the Interstate Commerce Commission, but it must be shown that the complainant sustained pecuniary damages. Keogh v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 444.

III. PLEADING, PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE (p. 719)

Limitation of action.—The state statute of limitations applies to a suit brought to recover damages for injuries which are alleged to have resulted from acts done in violation of this act. Jones v. West Pub. Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 563.

IV. EVIDENCE (p. 724)

In general.—The plaintiff in an action under this act must show a direct relation between the restraint and the injury. Sullivan v. Associated Billposters, etc., (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 272 Fed. 323.

V. DAMAGES (p. 725)

Measure of damages.—Only actual damages, proved by facts not based on conjecture or estimation recoverable. Keogh v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 444.

Lawful rates under illegal combination.—Where rates have been declared to be reasonable by the Interstate Commerce Commission a complainant cannot recover under this section, although it appears that the rates are higher because of an unlawful combination of railroads in restraint of interstate commerce than they would have been in the absence of such combination. Keogh v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 444.

Vol. IX, p. 730, sec. 1. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 267.]

Application.—Neither the Sherman nor Clayton Acts furnishes a remedy against acts merely because they incidentally and indirectly affect interstate commerce. They apply only to acts which directly and immediately relate thereto. Gable v. Vonnegut Machinery Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 66.

Vol. IX, p. 733, sec. 3. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 269.]

Constitutionality.—To same effect as original annotation, see U. S. v. United Shoe Machinery Co., (E. D. Mo. 1920) 264 Fed. 138.

Section as retroactive.—In U. S. v. United Shoe Machinery Co., (E. D. Mo. 1920) 264 Fed. 138, it was held that this section was not retroactive. The court in this case referred to Elliott Mach. Co. v. Center, (W. D. Mich. 1915) 227 Fed. 124 (noted in 9 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) p. 733) and declared that the statement therein on this point was obiter.

Purpose.—The object of the section was to make unlawful acts which were not unlawful under the Sherman Act or other antitrust acts. U. S. v. United Shoe Machinery Co., (E. D. Mo. 1920) 264 Fed. 138, wherein the court said: "There is nothing in the Sherman Act, or any other act of Congress, making the acts enumerated in section 3 of the Clayton Act unlawful, 'where the effect' of them 'may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.'"

Application.—This section does not apply to a contract of sale made and performed in the same state. Quincy Oil Co. v. Sylvester, (Mass. 1921) 130 N. E. 217, 14 A. L. R. 111.

Parties.—Railroad companies were held to be necessary parties to a proceeding to annul a contract between them and a can company containing an exclusive clause, in Fruit Growers' Express v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 205.

The words "lease," "sale," "contract for sale," "lessee," and "purchaser," being the words used, and no other relation than lease and sale being mentioned, there is no expressed purpose in the clause quoted to make it cover any other subject than leases, sales, or contracts for sales, and to embrace no other persons than lessees and purchasers. The words are so clear they require no construction, and to needlessly construe, in order to broaden the scope of the statute, whether done by the Trade Commission in administering, or by this court in supervising the administration of, the statute, would be for either or both such agencies to write into the statute what Congress has not expressly written. Curtis Pub. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 881.

Combination made in course of interstate commerce.—The lease or combination made unlawful by this act is one made in the course of interstate commerce. Witherell, etc., Co. v. United Shoe Machinery Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1919) 267 Fed. 950.

Legality of shoe machinery leases.—Regarding such leases, the court said: "The question to be decided is: Do the clauses complained of, or any of them, put it in their power, or have the effect, or tend, if enforced, as the defendants would have the right to do, if they are not unlawful under the Clayton Act—and that is their intention—'to substantially lessen competition' or 'establish a monopoly in trade'?"

"In the opinion of the court there can be no doubt that the enforcement of some of the provisions hereinafter mentioned will have that effect. If shoe manufacturers are not permitted to use machines manufactured by competitors without being penalized, such prohibition tends to lessen competition, and eventually will result in giving the defendants a monopoly in that part of trade or commerce. Who will invest the millions necessary to establish such manufacturing plants, and the evidence convinces that it will require these large sums to establish them, when the product cannot be sold, or at best can find but a very limited market. It is true, there are some competitors; but they are few, and they manufacture only some of the machines required. Some have been obliged to go out of business for lack of trade, caused by these tying clauses, and eventually all will have to discontinue, if shoe manufacturers are prevented from purchasing, leasing, or using their machines, by reason of a strict enforcement of the tying clauses and the rebates and discounts, or those which, in the opinion of the court, are in violation of the Clayton Act." U. S. v. United Shoe Machinery Co., (E. D. Mo. 1920) 264 Fed. 138.

In an action on leases of shoe machinery an answer which alleges that the leases were transactions in the course of interstate commerce but sets out no facts showing wherein they are of such a character is a conclusion of the pleader and being such the allegation is not admitted by demurrer. Witherell, etc., Co. v. United Shoe Machinery Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 950.

Leasing tanks exclusively to distribute products of lessor.—The practice of leasing, at a nominal rental, tanks and automatic measuring pumps, for the storing and distributing of gasoline, upon condition that the tanks and pumps so leased be used by the lessee, the retailer, exclusively for the purpose of storing and marketing gasoline purchased from the lessor, is not a violation of this section. Campbell Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 571; Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 478.

License to manufacture patented article.—A license giving the licensee a right to manufacture a patented article, the patent on which is owned by the licensor, by which the licensee agrees to purchase all materials to be used in making the article from the licensor or persons designated by him is not violative of this act. Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co. v. Diamond State Fibre Co., (D. C. Del. 1920) 268 Fed. 121. The court said:

"A patent gives to the patentee the right, not only to prevent others from making the patented article, but also to prevent others from making any ingredient or part of such patented article with intent that such ingredient or part shall be used in the patented article, for as a patentee may maintain a suit for infringement against a person making such patented article, so he may also maintain a suit for contributory infringement of the ingredients or parts for use in the patentment against a person making and selling the patented article. The right to make the parts and material entering into the patented article, and to exclude others from making them, if such parts and material are unpatented as in this case, would seem to be an inevitable adjunct of the patent and a part of the patent monopoly. There is no evidence in this case that the patentee or his assignee, the plaintiff, ever surrendered this monopoly to the public. I do not see, therefore, that the effect of granting a license to manufacture the Conrad gears, but reserving to the licensor the right to continue to make the gear material, was to surrender to the public the licensor's monopoly to make the material entering into such gears, or to create a 'line of commerce' within the meaning of the Clayton Act.

"Nor do I see how the effect of reserving such right to the licensor may be to lessen competition that never existed or tend to create a monopoly that was complete in the licensor before the contract was made."

Contract between magazine publishers and agents.—In Curtis Pub. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 881, a contract between a magazine publisher and its agents was held not to constitute a "lease or make a sale or contract for the sale of goods." The following extract from the opinion of the court shows the nature and the substance of the contract:

"We note, first that the agreement, which is entitled a 'District Agency Agreement,' is in form and verbiage an appointment by a publisher of an agent, and an agent for limited territory and for a mutually optional time, for the purpose of (a) selling and (b) distributing its magazines. Now, there are no words in the contract which purport or contemplate the sale of such magazines, and there is express provision, if (a) a sale, or (b) a distribution, to third parties, is not effected, the magazines consigned are to be returned to the publisher. Indeed, the nature of the transaction, the necessary haste to get the magazines into the hands of the boys at once, shows of itself that there was no reason for transferring title by sale. It was not the handling of commodities of which sales would naturally be made. It was a contract for distributing and speeding up deliveries of an article whose whole value depended on the haste with which it passed from the agent's possession. Confirming these statements, we note that in clause 1, 'appoint the said second party as district agent for the Saturday Evening Post,' etc., are words aptly used in constituting an agency, viz. 'appoint,' and of restricted territory, 'district agent.'

"We note that clause 3 provides for the return and credit, at consignment prices, of unsold copies, and that clause 5 provides for the payment of interest at 5 per cent. on the money deposit, made by the agent, as security for the magazines consigned. As to the agent making sales of the magazine, clause 8 obligates him to sell a certain number of copies of the magazine, and clause 9 binds him to deliver the magazine to dealers and boys 'early on the morning of the sale date' and at certain specified prices. We also note that, by clause 10, the agent binds himself not to display, distribute, or sell any of the magazines before an authorized sale date, and by clause 11 not to sell any copies in territory controlled by another agent. All of these and other details that might be cited evidence that the relation created by this contract, and by its expressed terms meant to be created, was one of agency, and that there is an entire absence in the contract of any terms or words usual or requisite to effecting or evidencing a sale, as well as of circumstances inviting or necessitating a sale.

"We have not overlooked the fact that the contract provides for the maintenance by the agent in the hands of the publisher of an advance sum of money sufficient to indemnify the publisher for all magazines forwarded. But in our judgment this deposit cannot, in view of the right of return, be regarded as a payment, but rather as an indemnity to secure payment, for all copies the agent does not return. . . . Such being the case, we hold the Commission erred in the legal construction of this contract, and therefore had no proof before it to find, as it did in its third finding, that 'the respondent has made sales of its magazines to, or entered into contract for the sale of the same, with certain persons,' etc., and therefore its legal conclusion from such findings, viz. 'that the act and conduct set forth in paragraph 3 of said findings are, under the circumstances therein set forth, in violation of the provisions of section 3' of the Clayton Act, was in error, as was also the part of its decree which enforced such conclusion."

Vol. IX, p. 737, sec. 5. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 271.]

Scope of section.—This provision is only a rule of evidence. Conclusions of law embodied in the decree could only have the force of precedents, nor can the decree as adjudging facts be taken to override allegations of fact as to the nature of defendants' combination appearing elsewhere in the complaint. Sullivan v. Associated Billposters, etc., (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 272 Fed. 323.

Failure to state object of suit.—Where the object of the suit in which the decree, sought to be set up as prima facie evidence under this section, was entered, is not stated, the court cannot say what matters were considered, and hence will reach its own conclusions as to the alleged violation of the statute from the facts before it. Charles A. Ramsay Co. v. Associated Billposters, etc., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 140.

Vol. IX, p. 737, sec. 6. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 272.]

Purpose and scope of section.—"The section assumes the normal objects of a labor organization to be legitimate, and declares that nothing in the Anti-trust Laws shall be construed to forbid the existence and operation of such organizations, or to forbid their members from lawfully carrying out their legitimate objects; and that such an organization shall not be held in itself—merely because of its existence and operation—to be an illegal combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade. But there is nothing in the section to exempt such an organization or its members from accountability where it or they depart from its normal and legitimate objects, and engage in an actual combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade. And by no fair or permissible construction can it be taken as authorizing any activity otherwise unlawful, or enabling a normally lawful organization to become a cloak for an illegal combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade, as defined by the Anti-trust Laws." Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Deering, (1921) 254 U. S. 443, 41 S. Ct. 172, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1918) 252 Fed. 722, 164 C. C. A. 562.

Extent of right to strike.—The right to refuse to serve may lawfully be asserted singly or in concert with others. A strike is a concerted refusal to serve in an industry, either to assert a supposed right or to obtain an economic advantage. For either purpose, if conducted without violence or intimidation, it is lawful, though if done, not in self-interest, but for the sole purpose of injuring the employer, it may be a malicious tort. If directed against interstate commerce, it may be an unlawful conspiracy except as provided in Clayton Act Oct. 15, 1914, c. 323, 38 Stat. 730. Birmingham Trust, etc., Co. v. Atlanta, etc., R. Co., (N. D. Ga. 1921) 271 Fed. 743.

Combination in restraint of interstate commerce.—The provisions of this section contemplate only such organizations as lawfully carry out their legitimate objects, consequently labor unions enforcing an agreement not to handle any nonunion merchandise transported or operated on in any way by any firm, individual or corporation that refused to recognize the unions, and under which the members of various unions refused to handle an interstate shipment because it was brought to a dock by an express company employing both union and non-union men, were held to constitute an unlawful combination in restraint of interstate commerce, and therefore subject to restraint by injunction. Buyer v. Guilan, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 65.

Injunction against strikers.—An order granting a permanent injunction against interference by strikers and others with the conduct and operation of the complainant's business and forbidding picketing, has been held not to violate this section. Quinlivan v. Dail-Overland Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 56.

Vol. IX, p. 741, sec. 11. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 275.]

The words "where applicable to common carriers," in this section mean that the facts involve common carriers, or the business of common carriers, then the jurisdiction is solely in the Interstate Commerce Commission. Fruit Growers' Express v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 205.

Vol. IX, p. 745, sec. 16. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 278.]

Injunctive relief from secondary boycott.—See supra, p. 633.

Relief granted by section as effective from time of passage of Act.—In so far as the Clayton Act provided for relief by injunction to private suitors, imposed conditions upon granting such relief under particular circumstances, and otherwise modified the Sherman Anti-trust Act (see Vol. 9, p. 644), it was effective from the time of its passage and applicable to pending suits for injunction not brought to a hearing until after the passage of the Clayton Act. Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Deering, (1921) 254 U. S.

443, 41 S. Ct. 172, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1918) 252 Fed. 722, 164 C. C. A. 562.

Extent of relief.—This section supplements the Sherman Act by giving a private party a right to maintain a suit for injunction. Gable v. Vonnegut Machinery Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 66.

Jurisdiction confined to federal courts.—The grant of jurisdiction by this section is to the courts of the United States and is not given to the state or even territorial courts. General Invest. Co. v. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 235. The court said: "The grant of jurisdiction is to the 'courts of the United States.' This language has been expressly held not to reach even territorial courts, although they were created by the laws of the United States. McAllister v. U. S., 141 U. S. 174, 179, 11 Sup. Ct. 949, 35 L. ed. 693. Much less can it reach those courts which are wholly of another jurisdiction. It is true there are cases where this term has been thought to reach some of the courts of the District of Columbia (see Page v. Burnstine, 102 U. S. 664, 26 L. ed. 268; United States v. Mills, 11 App. D. C. 500, 504); but that was because the language and purpose of the act in question were especially appropriate to be so extended. In the present case the statute was dealing solely with a subject-matter of exclusively federal jurisdiction, interstate commerce, and while Congress might have intrusted some of its exercise to the state courts, there is no reason to presume such an intention; the natural presumption is rather to the contrary. Not only had the ordinary meaning of the phrase 'courts of the United States' become fixed by familiar judicial construction long before the Clayton Act was passed, but it had been customarily used by Congress with the same definite meaning; for example, section 256 of the Judicial Code refers to the 'courts of the United States' and the 'courts of the several states' as different classes, exclusive of each other. Further, this section pertains only to the remedy, and there would be a strong presumption that a federal remedial statute did not relate to the remedies of another jurisdiction. From these considerations we are satisfied that a suit brought in a state court can get no help from section 16."

Sufficiency of evidence.—Evidence from which it is impossible to infer monopolistic control of the price of copper by the purchasers of all the property of a mining company, and from which it cannot be determined to what, if any, substantial extent they restrained or monopolized the production of copper, is insufficient to justify injunctive relief to minority stockholders of the mining company against the sale, under the provisions of this section, that any person shall be entitled to sue and have injunctive relief in any court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the Anti-trust Laws, under the conditions and principles regulating the granting of such relief by courts of equity. Geddes v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., (1921) 254 U. S. 590, 41 S. Ct. 209, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1917) 245 Fed. 225, 157 C. C. A. 417.

TRADEMARKS

Vol. IX, p. 747, sec. 1. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 676.]

Purpose and effect of act.—In addition to the benefit accorded the owner of a trademark it is the purpose of the trademark law to confer a benefit on the ultimate consumer. Wallace v. Repetti, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 307.

The function of a trademark is to identify the origin and ownership of the goods to which it is attached. Imperial Cotto Sales Co. v. N. K. Fairbanks Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 270 Fed. 686.

Character of property in.—"It is true that a trademark is not the subject of property, except in connection with an existing business. It is a right appurtenant to a business in which it is used, and grows out of its use, but not its adoption. It is not a right in gross, for its purpose is to designate the goods made by a particular person, and to protect the good will of that person's business against the sale of the same variety of goods made by others." Vermont Maple Syrup Co. v. F. N. Johnson Maple Syrup Co., (D. C. Vt. 1921) 272 Fed. 478.

A trademark is not property which can be owned in gross. It can not be sold or mortgaged apart from the business with which it is connected. In re Leslie-Judge Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 886.

The right to a trademark, in the absence of registration in the patent office, arises at common law from priority of appropriation. Edgar-Morgan Co. v. Alfocorn Milling Co., (E. D. Mo. 1921) 270 Fed. 344.

"While there is a property right in a trademark (Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 82, 92, 93, 25 L. ed. 550), the right is grounded not in the mark itself, but in the right to be protected in the reputation and good will of the business designated and known by the use of the trademark. This property right in the trademark ceases with the discontinuance of its use." Imperial Cotto Sales Co. v. N. K. Fairbanks Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 270 Fed. 686.

A person has property or a property right in a trademark used by him. It is said, however, that "trademark is not a right in gross or at large. As an abstract right, wholly disassociated from the business or merchandise with which it has become established, it is not property, and may not be assigned. United Drug Co. v. Rectanus Co., 248 U. S. 90, 39 Sup. Ct. 48, 63 L. Ed. 141.

For no one may sell his goods as the goods of another. Such an act would be a fraud upon the public. But where the trademark of a retailer is assigned by him to the manufacturer of the commodity to which the trademark was affixed, there is no false representation to the public, and such assignment is valid. Witthaus v. Braum et al., 44 Md. 303, 22 Am. Rep. 44. The last proposition arises, apparently, from the fact that a trademark does not as a matter of necessity and law import that the articles upon which it is used are manufactured by the user. It is sufficient that they are manufactured for him, that he controls their production, or that in the course of trade they pass through his hands. Nelson v. Winchell & Co., 203 Mass. 75, 89 N. E. 180, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1150; McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 245, 253, 24 L. Ed. 828. If a retailer may assign his trademark to the manufacturer of the article sold by the retailer, it would seem that the converse is necessarily true, and that the manufacturer may assign his trademark to another, who sells the goods of the manufacturer." Coco-Cola Bottling Co. v. Coca-Cola Co., (D. C. Del. 1920) 269 Fed. 796.

"It must be remembered that 'the right of property in trade-marks has come to be recognized as of immense and incalculable value,' and that the 'proprietor of a trademark by virtue of the manufacture or offering for sale of his goods is entitled to the protection which the highest powers of the court can afford.'" Bourjois v. Katzel (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 274 Fed. 856.

The right to use a trademark does not depend on any particular period of usage but having been adopted in good faith the right thereto inures and will prevail against any subsequent user. Wallace v. Repetti, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 307.

Territorial extent of trademark rights.—"A trademark cannot travel to markets where there is no article to wear the badge and no trader to supply the article. Hanover Star Milling Co. v. Metcalf, supra, 240 U. S. 416, 36 Sup. Ct. 361, 60 L. Ed. 713, but this rule does not mean that the person who first uses the trademark of another as his licensee in new territory thereby becomes the absolute owner of it in that territory, for a person may introduce his trademark and create a demand for his variety of goods in new territory by licensees. His mark thus travels to markets where there is an article to wear the badge and a trader to supply the article." Vermont Maple Syrup Co. v. Johnson Maple Syrup Co., (D. C. Vt. 1921) 272 Fed. 478.

Effect of judgment as right of registration.—A judgment as to a right of registration is not res judicata where comparing the marks it appears that the mark in the second opposition is so different from the mark of the first opposition that judgment against applicant in the first could not, under any circumstances, work estoppel in the second. Sheffield-King Milling Co. v. Theopold-Reid Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 716.

Vol. IX, p. 751, sec. 2. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 675.]

Nature of use contemplated.—"Clearly the use contemplated by the statute is a use by the applicant himself, or by some one for him, and not an independent or incidental use by a third party; the reason being that before an applicant is entitled to registration he must show that his business extends beyond the boundaries of his own state or into the territory of an Indian tribe." Kuhn v. Letts, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 748.

Interstate sales.—The fact that persons outside the state had purchased goods through friends within the state by whom they had been shipped to the purchasers does not show an interstate use. Kuhn v. Letts, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 748.

I. IN GENERAL (p. 755)

Section as declaratory of accepted law.—The language used in this section in depriving what may be registered as a trademark only declares "the accepted law of trademarks." Hercules Powder Co. v. Newton, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 169.

Effect of proviso.—Where a trademark is duly registered under the ten-year proviso of this section it is immaterial that it may once have been descriptive or that to a degree it may still be so. Coca-Cola Co. v. Old Dominion Beverage Corp., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 600.

Test of registrability.—Where the goods have the same descriptive properties the test is whether or not the marks are so similar as to be likely to cause confusion in the public mind or to deceive purchasers. Coca-Cola Co. v. Chero-Cola Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 755.

The facts, in the case of words, that they do not sound quite alike and that the number of letters in each are not the same are only arguable differences which will not defeat opposition to registration. Coca-Cola Co. v. Chero-Cola Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 755. The court said: "Of course, if the two marks were placed together, or if a person's attention was in some other way directed to them, there would be no difficulty in apprehending the difference between them. This, however, is not the way to make the test. Ordinarily the prospective purchaser does not carry more than a faint impression of the mark he is looking for. If the article offered to him bears a mark having any resemblance to the one he is thinking of, he is likely to accept it. He acts quickly. He is governed by a general glance. The law does not require more of him."

Right to registration.—There must be actual trademark use to entitle the owner to registration. Hay v. Malone, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 363.

Effect of registration.—Registration of a common law trademark neither confers any greater rights in the use of that name or mark on the registrant nor diminishes the rights of others entitled to the use thereof. Andrew Jergens Co. v. Woodbury, (D. C. Del. 1921) 273 Fed. 952.

The failure of the owner of a trademark to register it before a competitor registers an infringing trademark, in no way affects the former's rights nor does the prior registration of the competitor's trademark give him the right to continue the infringement. Ansehl v. Williams, (C. C. A. 8th Civ. 1920) 267 Fed. 9.

Identity of use.—There is not an identity of use in the case of a mark which in one case is applied to a portable building and in the other to building materials. Denver Gas, etc., Light Co. v. Alexander Lumber Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 859. The court said: "A portable or knockdown building does not possess the same descriptive properties as the material of which it is composed. A structure is one thing and the materials out of which it was erected, when considered apart from the building, are quite different things."

Use in interstate commerce.—The mere shipment of goods bearing the mark from the factory to a distributing branch in another state would not constitute use of the mark in interstate commerce within the Trade-Mark Act. Ault, etc., Co. v. Jaenecke Ault Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 269 Fed. 672.

The origin of a proposed trademark is immaterial. If it is likely to cause confusion it is unregistrable. Proctor, etc., Co. v. Enev Shortening Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1920)

267 Fed. 344. The courts said: "The applicant says that its mark is made up 'or the initials of the corporation with the termination "Co." Eney Shortening Co., "Esco,"—and seems to think that there is something in that which should entitle it to have the mark registered, but we perceive no force in the suggestion. The trademark statute takes no account of the origin of a mark. The question is: Would its use be likely to result in confusion? If so, it is unregistrable. As was said by the Examiner of Interferences, the 'consuming public know little and care less about the origin of any mark, and very seldom, if ever, take it into consideration.' The statute does not contemplate that the public should do so."

Extending use of mark to other articles. The rule relating to the use of marks in the natural development of business extends only to the use of the same mark on goods of the same descriptive properties. But the right of extension applies only to the specific mark, and not to a similar mark. Berghoff Brewing Assoc. v. Popel-Giller Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 328, holding that the extension of the mark "Burg Brau" on beer to "Burg" on nonalcoholic beverages, would not come within the rule, since the marks are radically different.

Trademarks for beverages.—"The Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution and the laws for its enforcement, relating to the subject of prohibition, have compelled transition from the production and sale of alcoholic beverages to non-alcoholic beverages, which calls for liberal protection of trademark rights affected by this enforced change. Sexton v. Schoenhofen Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 327.

In case of doubt as to the right of the parties where the registration of a trademark is offered the doubt should be resolved against the applicant and the opposition sustained. Coca-Cola Co. v. Chero-Cola Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 755.

II. PARTICULAR WORDS, NAMES, MARKS OR SYMBOLS

1. Arbitrary or Fanciful Names (p. 758)

Word which has acquired fixed meaning in language.—Where a word registered as a trademark has acquired a fixed meaning in the language and is recognized in the dictionaries, its owner may obtain relief against the use of that word by another although the goods or product to which it is applied are not of the same descriptive properties. This principle was applied in the case of the word "Cottolene." Imperial Cotto Sales Co. v. N. K. Fairbanks Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 270 Fed. 686. The court said:

"It appears that the predecessor in business of the opposer, the N. K. Fairbanks Company, coined the word 'Cottolene' in 1887 as a trade-mark to designate a cooking fat made from cotton seed oil and oleo-stearine. The mark has been registered in most of the countries of the civilized world, and the goods of the opposer company bearing the mark have a wide international reputation. The word 'Cottolene,' coined and used exclusively by the opposer and its predecessor in business for over 30 years, has come to have a fixed meaning in the language. It appears in the modern editions of the dictionaries. In the latest edition of the Standard Dictionary, it is defined as 'a derivative of cotton seed used as a substitute for lard.' It will therefore be observed that the word has come into the language solely by reason of its application by opposer to a certain class of goods, and the character of the goods defines its meaning.

"This is not, therefore, the ordinary case which may be turned merely upon the question whether the goods of the opposing parties are of the same descriptive properties and the use of the mark would be likely to lead to confusion in trade. . . . It may well be that no purchaser would mistake a stock food for a lard substitute, merely because they bear the same trade-mark. But this is not the exclusive test. While the likelihood of confusion in trade arising from the use of the same or similar marks is sufficient to establish damage it is not the only ground upon which injury may be predicated. Manifestly it would be too narrow a ground upon which to rest the present case. The goods are derived from the same product. The stock food is produced by the extraction of the oil from the cotton seed. A poor or adulterated grade of cotton seed meal, bearing the mark 'Cottolene,' would, we think, reflect upon the reputation of opposer's product, which is known the world over by that name. It is clear that, if these goods, derived from the same product, bear the same name, the public would be justified in concluding that they originated from the same trader. In other words, 'Cottolene,' having been coined and used for more than a generation exclusively as the name of a cotton seed product, when adopted as the name of an inferior cotton seed product, would lead to a comparison damaging to the reputation derived from its original use."

Illustrations.—In Aunt Jemima Mills Co. v. Blair Milling Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 270 Fed. 1021, where an opposition to registration had been filed by appellant the appellant's device consisted of the words "Aunt Jemima's," having underneath the bust picture of a full-faced smiling negress, with a handkerchief wrapped about her head and shoulders. This mark has been used by appellant company and its predecessor in business at St. Joseph, Mo., on pancake flour since 1889, and on buckwheat flour since 1904. Appellee's mark consisted of the word "Sambo," having underneath the representation of a full-faced, clean-shaven, smiling negro, having a white cap on his head and wearing a long apron, bearing in one hand a plate of smoking cakes, and in the other hand a cake turner. This mark had been used by appellee company at Atchison, Kan., on pancake flour since 1913, and on pancake buckwheat flour since August 7, 1916.

The opposition was based upon the similarity of the marks and the likelihood of confusion in trade, when the marks were applied to goods of the same descriptive properties. The court reversed an order of the patent office dismissing the notice of opposition. It was said:

"The goods on which the marks are used are the same, and we think the marks are deceptively similar. It is urged that the goods would be distinguished as 'Sambo' and 'Aunt Jemima's' brands, but we doubt this conclusion. The Aunt Jemima flour has become so widely known that a glance at the picture would satisfy the average purchaser. In other words, while the goods are known by the name, the picture is the distinguishing feature by which the goods are visually identified.

"In determining the question of possible confusion and resulting damage, it is proper to consider the manner in which appellee's mark may be used. Cartons were produced at bar as exhibits, on which the lower part of the figure of the negro cook was so covered with printed matter that to the casual observer only the shoulders and head were plainly visible. Should registration be granted, the printed matter could be extended until only a bust picture remained, and nothing would prevent the registrant from using whatever coloring it desired in setting forth the mark, so long as the style of dress and the features of the negro were retained. . . . The adoption of the mark before us by appellee company, situated only 23 miles from where appellant company has for years been manufacturing and widely distributing its goods bearing the Aunt Jemima mark, will admit of but one inference—that of gaining advantage from the wide reputation established by appellant in the goods bearing its mark.

"While the case is a close one, the court will adhere to its rule and resolve the doubt in favor of the opposer."

2. Personal and Corporate Names (p. 759)

Individual name.—Although a person has the right to use his own name in connection with a business which he has established and is conducting, he may not use it in such a manner as to mislead the public and cause it to believe that the business is one which was established by a person well-known in the trade and is merely being continued after such person's death. W. R. Speare Co. v. Speare, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 265 Fed. 876.

2. Personal and Corporate Names (p. 759)

Corporate name—Generally.—The use by a defendant of a word in its name which is calculated to lead the public to believe its goods are the goods of the plaintiff may be enjoined. Thus, where the plaintiff and its predecessors had used the word "Overland" which name was registered in the United States Patent Office as a trade-mark for automobiles, it was held that an injunction would be granted restraining and enjoining the defendant from using that word as the whole or as a part of its corporate name, from listing its capital stock upon the New York curb market, or any other association or exchange where listed stocks and securities are dealt in, under any name containing the word "Overland," and from designating its tires, or other automobile accessory made or sold by it, by the word "Overland," or by any combination of words containing that name. Willys-Overland Co. v. Akron-Overland Tire Co., (D. C. Del. 1920) 268 Fed. 151.

Where a name is a substantial part of the corporate name of the opposing company, which was organized long prior to the applicant's entry into the field, registration will be denied. Beechnut Cereal Co. v. Beechnut Packing Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 367, denying the application of the Beechnut Cereal Company for the registration of the term "Beechnut" as a trademark for cereal breakfast food.

3. Descriptive Words (p. 762)

"Merely descriptive."—This term as here used means only descriptive or nothing more than descriptive. Hercules Powder Co. v. Newton, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 169. The court said: "It may be that the force of the adverb is satisfied by the addition to the descriptive word of a picture or device, or by qualifying the description through the addition of another word."

Generic name.—To same effect as first paragraph of original annotation, see In re Reid, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 368; Lilly & Co. v. Warner & Co., (E. D. Pa. 1920) 268 Fed. 156; Hercules Powder Co. v. Newton, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 169.

Illustrations.—"Coco-Quinine" is held to be a descriptive name and not subject to exclusive appropriation, and where no unfair selling methods are shown an injunction will not be granted restraining a defendant from calling a preparation put up by him "Quin-Coco." Lilly v. Warner, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 268 Fed. 156.

A shield bearing the word "Efficiency" is not registerable as a trademark for hot water bottles, ice bags and other hospital supplies. In re Reid, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 368.

The word "infallible" was held not to be registerable as trademark for smokeless powder in Hercules Powder Co. v. Newton, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 169.

The word "photoplay" has been held to be a descriptive word and not a proper subject matter of a registered trademark for a publication. Photoplay Pub. Co. v. La. Verne Pub. Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 269 Fed. 730. The court said: "The word was coined in a contest for a 'new one-word name for a "moving picture show." The object of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company in starting the contest was 'to select a name which would be descriptive of the entertainment given in motion picture theaters.' The company selected three 'men of acknowledged authority in moving picture affairs' as judges, to whose decision were submitted more than 2,500 words. They selected the word 'Photoplay' as being 'more closely descriptive * * * than any other of the long list submitted.' In announcing their decision, the judges stated that they were influenced in their selection 'by the necessity of adopting a term which would be easily remembered, descriptive in character, simple, and appropriate.' The judges recognized in the word 'Photoplay' a term 'more closely descriptive of the entertainment given in motion picture theaters * * * than in any other of the long list submitted.' The fact of its selection called attention to the word, and to-day it is used entirely by some persons in the film and moving picture business, instead of the words 'moving pictures,' 'moving picture shows,' 'movies,' etc. The word denotes the reproduction of a play by means of photography. It is purely descriptive of that art. The plaintiff appropriated it as part of the title of its publication, which is devoted to the art to which the word relates. Being a trade word, descriptive of the art, it was publici juris, may not be exclusively appropriated, and is not the proper subject of a registered trademark."

Descriptive device.—A drawing showing a hand holding an arch support under a foot, may not be registered as a trademark for an arch support since it is merely a descriptive device. In re Scholl Mfg. Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 348.

4. Color (p. 764)

Rule stated.—One cannot have a trademark monopoly in the color of paper alone. Smith-Kline, etc., Co. v. American Druggists Syndicate, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 84.

5. Geographical Names (p. 764)

General rule.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Sheffield-King Milling Co. v. Theopold-Reid Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 269 Fed. 716.

When name has secondary meaning.—To same effect as original annotation, see McIlhenny Co. v. Bulliard, (W. D. La. 1920) 265 Fed. 705.

6. Expired Patent (p. 766)

Expiration of patent as entitling competitor to use trademark.—Where the use of the name claimed as a trademark antedated the existence of the patent and it further appears that the name, and not the patent, gave its value to the article, the expiration of the patent does not entitle a competitor of the former patentee to make use of the trademark. McIlhenny Co. v. Bulliard, (W. D. La. 1920) 265 Fed. 705.

7. Similar Names (p. 766)

Illustrations—Automobiles and accessories.—So in French Battery, etc., Co. v. Prest-O-Lite Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 265 Fed. 1013, an application to register the words "Ray-O-Lite," as a trademark for storage batteries and electric lamps, was denied as to the batteries because of the prior use by another company of the words "Prest-O-Lite" as a trademark for batteries, but was permitted as to electric lamps.

But in Prest-O-Lite Co. v. Play-O-Lite Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 350, it was held that the words "Play-O-Lite" were not so similar to the words "Prest-O-Lite" as to furnish ground for the denial of the registration of the former as a trademark for electric lamps because of the use of the latter in that connection.

Beverages.—In the following cases involving names applied to beverages, the name first given was held to be infringed by the name which follows: "Bergo"—"Burg." Berghoff Brewing Assoc. v. Popel-Giller Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 328; "Coca-Cola."—"Chero-Cola" Coca-Cola Co. v. Chero-Cola Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 755.

"Christo" and "Chrismo" as applied to nonintoxicating beverages held so similar that the registration of the latter term was denied because of prior use of the former. Christo Mfg. Co. v. Christian Moerlein Brewing Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 265 Fed. 1010.

Food products and confectionery.—In the following case, involving the name applied to a food product or confection, the name first given was held to be infringed by the name which follows: "Highland"—"Highland Brand." In re Schluderberg, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 269 Fed. 269. (Canned meats.)

"Crisco" and "Esco" applied to a lard substitute, held so similar that registration of the latter term was denied because of prior use of the former. Proctor, etc., Co. v. Eney Shortening Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 344.

Paper.—In the following case the name first given was held to be infringed by the name which follows: "Mail"—"Mail Order." In re Taylor-Logan Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 883.

Tobacco, cigars and cigarettes.—Use of word "Yankee" in connection with cigarette cases enjoined at suit of one showing an earlier appropriation of the words, as a trademark for such cases. Wightman, etc., Co. v. Nivois, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 98.

Soap.—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original annotation, "Dutch Cleanser" — "Beat the Dutch," Morrison Co. v. Cudahy Packing Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 270 Fed. 358 (similarity of dress).

Toilet articles.—In Ansehl v. Williams, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 9, the word "Lashbrow," used as a trademark for a preparation for promoting and stimulating the growth of eyebrows and lashes, was held to be infringed by the words "Lash-Brow-Ine" used as a trademark for a similar preparation.

11. Insignia and Symbols (p. 775)

A trademark having "U. S." as its most prominent feature may not be registered under this section. In re United States Rubber Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 265 Fed. 1016.

Vol. IX, p. 775, sec. 6. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 675.]

When opposition should be sustained.—Opposition to registration proceedings should be sustained where the prior user establishes that he would be injured by the registration of the mark in question. Hay v. Malone, (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 363.

Vol. IX, p. 777, sec. 10. [First ed., vol. X, p. 412.]

The legal effect as an assignment of a contract which discloses a purpose to transfer and does in fact transfer all rights in a trademark is not altered by the fact that the word "license" may be used. Andrew Jergens Co. v. Woodbury, (D. C. Del. 1921) 273 Fed. 952.

Effect of license.—A license to use a trademark in a certain territory does not confer an exclusive right to its use there in the absence of a contract to that effect. Vermont Maple Syrup Co. v. F. N. Johnson Maple Syrup Co., (D. C. Vt. 1921) 272 Fed. 478.

Sale of trademark as transferring good will.—A sale of a trademark should be accompanied by a transfer of the good will. Andrew Jergens Co. v. Woodbury, (D. C. Del. 1921) 273 Fed. 952.

The rights of the transferee from a corporation of a trademark cannot be affected by the acts or statements of one of the officers of the corporation subsequent to the transfer. Andrew Jergens Co. v. Woodbury, (D. C. Del. 1921) 273 Fed. 952.

Vol. IX, p. 779, sec. 13. [First ed., vol. X, p. 412.]

When trademark will be cancelled.—Where trademarks are so similar as to be likely to lead to confusion and the goods, while different in themselves, are used for the same purpose, the prior user is entitled to a cancellation of the later similar registered trademark. Thus, "White lily" used as a trademark for coffee was held subject to cancellation at the suit of a prior user of the trademark "Lily White" for tea and a large line of groceries. Macy v. New York Grocery Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 749.

Evidence.—An order for cancellation is justified by books of petitioner showing orders for and shipments of goods bearing the mark over a year before it was registered by the other user. Ault, etc., Co. v. Jaenecke Ault Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 269 Fed. 672.

Vol. IX, p. 780, sec. 16. [First ed., vol. X, p. 413.]

Loss of trademark rights.—A petitioner who is not using a trademark but has abandoned it at the time he files an application for the cancellation of its registration by another is not in a position to urge that he is being damaged by the registrant's use of it. Skene v. Marinello Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 270 Fed. 701. Such an abandonment is a matter of intention. Andrew Jergens Co. v. Woodbury, (D. C. Del. 1921) 273 Fed. 952.

Defenses—Laches.—The owner of a trademark cannot be chargeable with laches for failure to prosecute an infringement before he knows or has such notice as would lead an ordinarily prudent person to inquire and learn the existence of the infringement. Wallace v. Repetti, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 307.

Accounting for damages.—Where it appears that the defendant did the acts complained of not only before, but after, full warning and with knowledge of the plaintiff's rights and its intentions and did not at any time modify its business conduct but continued to infringe without acquiescence or consent of the plaintiff, the latter is entitled to an accounting. Wallace v. Repetti, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 307.

Vol. IX, p. 787, sec. 19. [First ed., vol. X, p. 414.]

Power of court to grant injunctions.—An injunction is an appropriate remedy to prevent the passing by another of his goods as those of a competitor by imitation of the trade name and general appearance of the goods of the latter. Coca-Cola Co. v. Old Dominion Beverage Corp., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 600.

The extent of the use of the infringing trademark is immaterial in a suit to enjoin an infringement. Ansehl v. Williams, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 9, wherein the court said:

"The foregoing in a general way is what the evidence shows as to the business done by appellant and appellee. That of appellee was larger than that of appellant, but this fact is not decisive. In the case of Kathreiner's Malzkaffee Fab. v. Kneipp Medicine

Co., 82 Fed. 321, 27 C. C. A. 351, the Court of Appeals of the Seventh Circuit said:

"It is not essential that its use has been long continued, or that the article should be widely known, or should have attained great reputation. The wrong done by piracy of the trade-mark is the same in such case as in that of an article of high and general reputation, and of long-continued use. The difference is but one of degree, and in the quantum of injury. A proprietor is entitled to protection from the time of commencing the user of the trade-mark." See, also, Waldes et al. v. International Manufacturers' Agency, (D. C.) 237 Fed. 52; Walter Baker & Co. v. Delapenha (C. C.) 160 Fed. 746."

Laches.—A delay of about two years by the owner of a trademark in bringing an action for injunction after learning of the use by a competitor of an infringing trademark, does not constitute laches. Ansehl v. Williams, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 9.

Extent of relief.—The courts afford protection in trademarks only in so far as they maintain and extend the reputation and good will of the owner in the business for which they are adapted and used. Imperial Cotto Sales Co. v. N. K. Fairbanks Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 270 Fed. 686.

But relief will be denied to a complainant where he has been guilty of gross misconduct in the operation of his business, as where the complainant made misrepresentations concerning patent protection which did not exist. Perfection Mfg. Co. v. B. Coleman Silver's Co., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 576.

Accounting limited to date of notice.—Both the account of profits and the damages in a suit for the infringement, of a registered trademark, brought in a federal district court without diversity of citizenship, are limited to the date when notice was given of the registered mark by section 28 of this Act [9 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 789], which makes it the duty of the registrant to give notice to the public by attaching certain specified words or abbreviations to the trademark, or to the receptacle wherein the article is inclosed, and provides that "in any suit for infringement by a party failing so to give notice of registration no damages shall be recovered except on proof that the defendant was duly notified of infringement and continued the same after such notice," notwithstanding an earlier notice calling on the defendant "to discontinue the unfair competition and infringement on our rights," and the wilful character of defendants' wrongdoing. Stark Bros. Nurseries, etc., Co. v. Stark, (1921) 255 U. S. 50, 41 U. S. Ct. 221, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. O. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 9, 168 C. C. A. 221.

Evidence.—Where unfair selling methods on the part of a defendant are alleged the evidence must, in order to establish such allegations be direct, clear and positive. Lilly & Co., v. Warner & Co., (E. D. Pa. 1920) 268 Fed. 156.

In a suit for an injunction to restrain the use by defendant in its name of a word calculated to lead the public to believe that defendant's goods are the goods of the plaintiff, it is not essential for the evidence to show that any particular person has actually been misled. Willys-Overland Co. v. Akron-Overland Tire Co., (D. C. Del. 1920) 268 Fed. 151, affirmed (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 674.

Vol. IX, p. 788, sec. 21. [First ed., vol. X, p. 415.]

Intent to abandon as controlling.—Abandonment of a trademark, in the strict sense, rests upon an intent to abandon. Ansehl v. Williams, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 9, holding that a short absence of the owner of a trademark from the city in which he conducted his business, during which time the business was conducted by his relatives, did not show an intent to abandon the trademark.

Although the appearances may be sufficient to indicate an abandonment, this may be satisfactorily explained by showing a want of intention to relinquish the right claimed. Wallace v. Repetti, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 307.

What constitutes abandonment.—In general.—To give up for a long period and to discontinue the use of a trademark and permit others to use it indiscriminately without prosecution amounts to an abandonment. Wallace v. Repetti, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 307.

Nonusage.—There is no penalty which inflicts the loss of right of property in trademarks by nonusage, unless there also be found an intent to abandon. Of course, intent may be inferred from the facts shown; but the fact must be adequate to support a finding of abandonment. Wallace v. Repetti, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 307, wherein it was held that an abandonment by a candy manufacturer of the trademark "Bluebird" or a dedication of it to public use was not shown by granting an exoneration to another candy manufacturer from willful infringement and the granting of permission to it to continue the sale of boxes of candy, provided it continued to use two bluebirds and that such candy was not advertised as the "Blue Bird brand" or the "Blue Bird box" and it appeared that the boxes used were hand painted with no lettering of any kind thereon.

The burden of proving abandonment of a trademark is upon the person alleging it. Ansehl v. Williams, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 9.

Abandonment as defense.—In order that an abandonment of a trademark may be established as a defense it is essential to show, not only acts indicating practical abandonment, but an intent to abandon. Wallace v. Repetti, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 307.

Vol. IX, p. 789, sec. 28. [First ed., vol. X, p. 415.]

Accounting limited to date of notice.— Both the account of profits and the damages in a suit for the infringement of a registered trademark, brought in a federal district court without diversity of citizenship, are limited by this section to the date when notice was given of the registered mark. Stark Bros. Nurseries, etc., Co. v. Stark, (1921) 255 U. S. 50, 41 S. Ct. 221, 66 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 9, 168 C. C. A. 221.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY

1918 Supp., p. 847, sec. 1.

Constitutionality.—The Trading with the Enemy Act, whether taken as originally enacted on October 6, 1917, or as thereafter amended by the Acts of March 28, 1918, November 4, 1918, July 11, 1919, and June 5, 1920, is strictly a war measure, and finds its sanction in the constitutional provision empowering Congress to declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water. Stoehr v. Wallace, (1921) 255 U. S. 239, 41 S. Ct. 293, 66 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 269 Fed. 827. In that case it was further held that Congress in time of war, may authorize and provide for the seizure and sequestration, through executive channels, of property believed to be enemy-owned, if adequate provision be made for a return in case of mistake.

1918 Supp., p. 847, sec. 2.

Partnership.—A partnership composed of citizens of the United States and citizens of a foreign country is dissolved by war between the two nations and consequently the partnership cannot be regarded as an "enemy" within the meaning of this section. Rossie v. Garvan, (D. C. Conn. 1921) 274 Fed. 447.

1918 Supp., p. 849, sec. 3 (c).

Scope of section.—It is held that this section covers two offenses: First, the bringing in or sending out of the United States such a letter in any other way than "in the regular course of mail"; and, second, the sending out of the United States in any way a communication intended for an enemy or ally of enemy. The description of each of these offenses is prefaced by the words "It shall be unlawful," indicating that they are distinct. The first covers any letter or tangible communication whatever, and the second only such communications as are intended for an enemy or ally of enemy. Welsh v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 819.

1918 Supp., p. 852, sec. 5 (a).

Determination of liability of property to seizure.—The President having delegated his authority to the Alien Property Custodian under this section, the latter may conclusively determine what property is liable to seizure as being that of an alien enemy. Garvan v. $20,000 Bonds, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 477. To same effect, see Garvan v. $100,000 Bonds, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 481.

1918 Supp., p. 854, sec. 7 (b).

Transfer of choses in action prior to declaration of war.—Under this provision absolute transfers of choses in action before April 6, 1917, were valid. Stöhr v. Wallace, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 269 Fed. 827.

1918 Supp., p. 856, sec. 7 (c).

Constitutionality.—This act is constitutional. As to this question it is said: "The sole basis for the plaintiff's claim of unconstitutionality comes down, therefore, to the Custodian's power of initial sequestration ex parte. But how does this differ in substance from the customary right upon libels of information in rem to arrest whatever property officials may decide to be forfeit? Such property may not be reclaimed pendente lite by filing a bond; the claimant must endure the temporary loss of possession until the innocence of the res is adjudicated. The public purpose of the statute so far overrides this incident of his rights of property. How much more is this the case in time of war where the interests are vital? The difference is one merely of procedure; the substantial rights are the same, for capture effects no more than an arrest in rem. The right to sell is the only addition, and I have shown that this is at least subject to judicial control in the event of a bill filed under section 9. The act, therefore, affords a complete remedy to all claimant friends, and is constitutional." Stöhr v. Wallace, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 269 Fed. 827.

This section made mandatory the delivery of such property as should be ordered to be turned over by the President. In re Garvan, (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 270 Fed. 1002.

Conclusiveness of determination of Alien Property Custodian that certain property is liable to seizure.—The determination of the Alien Property Custodian that certain property is liable to seizure as being that of an alien enemy must, whether right or wrong, be deemed conclusive in a possessory action brought by that officer to obtain immediate possession, the President having delegated his authority to him under § 5, and the act providing in this section that, "if the President shall so require, any money or other property owing or belonging to or held for, by, on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of an enemy or ally of an enemy not holding a license granted by the President hereunder, which the President after investigation shall determine is so owing or so belongs, or is so held, shall be conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered or paid over to the Alien Property Custodian," to which the amendatory Act of November 4, 1918, (see 1919 Supp. p. 355) added, after the requirements of transfer, the words, "or the same may be seized by the Alien Property Custodian, and all property thus acquired shall be held, administered and disposed of as elsewhere provided in this act," provision being made in § 9 for immediate claim for a return of the property and for suit, in which case the property is to be retained in the custody of the Alien Property Custodian, or in the Treasury of the United States, to abide the result. Central Union Trust Co. v. Garvan, (1921) 254 U. S. 554, 41 S. Ct. 214, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, [affirming (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 477] wherein it was said that "the natural interpretation of the provision of the Trading with the Enemy Act as amended by the Act of November 4, 1918, that the sole relief and remedy of any person having any claim to any property transferred to the Alien Property Custodian, or required so to be, or seized by him, shall be that provided by the terms of the act, is that it refers to the remedies expressly provided by § 9, viz., the filing of a claim for a return of the property and the bringing of suit, and that property required to be transferred, and property seized, stand on the same footing, not that the resort by the Custodian to the courts instead of to force opens to the person who has declined to obey the order of the statute, or who has prevented a seizure, a right by implication to delay what the statute evidently means to accomplish at once."

A determination by the Alien Property Custodian that certain property is enemy-owned must be regarded as the act of the President, within the meaning of the Trading with the Enemy Act, in view of the provision of § 5, authorizing the President to exercise any of the powers with which he is invested by that act, respecting the sequestration, custody, and disposal of enemy property through such officer or officers as he shall direct, and of the orders of the President, committing to the Alien Property Custodian the administration of this section of the Act, including the power to determine, after investigation, whether property was enemy-owned. Stoehr v. Wallace, (1921) 255 U. S. 239, 41 S. Ct. 293, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 269 Fed. 827. See also In re Garvan, (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 270 Fed. 1002.

Rule promulgated by President as to title vesting in Alien Property Custodian was held valid in Kohn v. Kohn, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 264 Fed. 253.

Effect of treaty.—Treaty provisions which relate only to the rights of merchants of either country, residing in the other when war arises, are inapplicable to a controversy as to whether the beneficial ownership of property seized and proposed to be sold under this Act, as the property of a German corporation, is in truth in an American corporation under a pre-war contract between such corporation and the German corporation. Stoehr v. Wallace, (1921) 255 U. S. 239, 41 S. Ct. 293, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 269 Fed. 827.

Effect of seizure.—A seizure of property by the Alien Enemy Custodian settles nothing except the bare sequestration and possession of the property. Stoehr v. Wallace, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 269 Fed. 827.

Stock held by citizen for benefit of alien enemy.—Shares of stock standing in the name of one who is neither an enemy nor an ally of an enemy could, consistently with due process of law, be seized and required to be transferred to the Alien Property Custodian in virtue of a determination by that official in an ex parte administrative proceeding that they belonged to an alien enemy, conformably to the provisions of the Trading with the Enemy Act, since such act distinctly reserves to any claimant who is neither an enemy nor an ally of an enemy, a right to assert and establish his claim by a suit in equity, unembarrassed by the precedent executive determination, and provides that, pending the suit, which the claimant may bring as promptly after the seizure as he chooses, the property is to be retained by the Alien Property Custodian to abide the result, and, if the claimant prevails, is forthwith to be returned to him.

No such an interest in shares of stock in a domestic corporation, which were seized by the Alien Property Custodian under the Trading with the Enemy Act, as the property of a German corporation, as entitles another domestic corporation in whose name the stock stands to demand that such shares be freed from the seizure, was given to the latter corporation by a pre-war contract between it and the German corporation, where such contract was not prompted by commercial motives, nor based on an estimate of mutual advantages, and was not intended as a genuine transaction, but was made to avoid inconvenience which otherwise might ensue from a state of war; the parties intending to leave the beneficial ownership in the German corporation, and not pass it to the domestic corporation. Stöehr v. Wallace, (1921) 255 U. S. 239, 41 S. Ct. 293, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 269 Fed. 827.

A debt is included in the terms of this section requiring the transfer or payment of money to the Alien Property Custodian. Kohn v. Kohn, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 264 Fed. 253.

Workmen's compensation award — Alien heir as party.—Where an award under the Workmen's Compensation Act is made payable to the Alien Property Custodian, the heir of the decedent being a nonresident enemy alien, the heir is not a necessary party to a proceeding by the Industrial Commission to review the award. Milwaukee Western Fuel Co. v. Industrial Commission, (1920) 172 Wis. 561, 179 N. W. 763.

1918 Supp., p. 856, sec. 7 (e).

The regulations of the War Trade Board dated July 14, amended July 20, 1919, did not cover property which before July 14, 1919, had been reported to the Alien Property Custodian, or which he had required to be delivered to him. Garvan v. $25,000 Canada Southern R. Co. 5% Bonds, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 217.

Bank protected in complying with Alien Property Custodian's demand, see American Exch. Nat. Bank v. Garvan, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 43.

1918 Supp., p. 857, sec. 8 (a).

Right of American citizen in partnership with aliens, see Mayer v. Garvan, (D. C. Mass. 1920) 270 Fed. 229.

Trustees of securities as lienholders.—Trustees of securities, deposited by foreign insurance companies for the protection of policyholders in conformity with state statutes, are not lienholders within the meaning of this section. Garvan v. $20,000 Bonds, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 477. The court said:

"Connecticut and Massachusetts require, as do almost all the states, that insurance companies of foreign nations, before doing business in the state, shall deposit funds or securities for the protection of the company's policy holders and creditors in the United States. The exact terms of the statutes need not be stated. The Munich Reinsurance Company, a German corporation did deposit a quantity of securities with trustees in conformity with the law of the state of Connecticut. The Franklin General Insurance Company and the Allianz Insurance Company, both German companies, deposited securities with trustees in conformity with the requirements of the law of Massachusetts.

"It will not be necessary to set out the terms of the trust at length; it is enough to say, that, although the income of the securities is payable to the companies and they can withdraw them, or any of them, upon substituting others equally good, and can change the trustees, still the trustees hold the securities in trust to pay the claim of any policy holder or creditor admitted to be due by the company or established by the claimant in due course of law. It is apparent that the trustees hold primarily for the benefit of the policy holders and creditors, and secondarily for the benefit of the companies; but their duties are active, and they are not merely lienholders. The companies cannot take the securities out of their possession until the rights absolute or contingent, of all policy holders and creditors in this country are secured, and in the meantime the trustees have the active duty of collecting and paying over the income, investing and reinvesting, and paying claims properly proved." To same effect, see Garvan v. $100,000 Bonds, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 481.

1918 Supp., p. 858, sec. 9.

Persons entitled to maintain suit — In general.—"Construing the Act by its terms as well as in the light of its purpose, it is evident that the only person given a right to prosecute a claim against property of an enemy in the hands of the Custodian is one 'not (himself) an enemy, or ally of enemy,' and that a district court of the claimant's residence has jurisdiction of a claim so asserted only when it positively appears that the claimant comes within this negative characterization. Any other construction of the Act would permit property which had been taken by the Government from one enemy to be immediately acquired by another and would completely defeat its purpose. As a corollary to the plain terms of Section 9 giving a person, not an enemy, the right during war to assert a claim against enemy property and conferring jurisdiction upon the district court to hear it, the Act provides under Section 12 that the assertion of 'any claim of any enemy or of an ally of enemy to any money or other property received and held by the Alien Property Custodian' shall be postponed until after the end of the war, to be prosecuted then only in such manner as Congress shall later direct." Garvin v. Kogler, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 442.

Alien friends*.—Where an alien enemy subsequently becomes an alien friend he may sue but only under this section. Kohn v. Kohn, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 264 Fed. 253.

Members of partnership*.—A partnership composed of citizens of the United States and Germany having been dissolved by the declaration of war between the two nations, the partners who are citizens of the United States are entitled to maintain an action under this section to recover their share of the firm assets. Rossie v. Garvan, (D. C. Conn. 1921) 274 Fed. 447.

Jurisdiction.—The fact that a plaintiff has claimed jurisdiction erroneously under sections 24 and 57 of the Judicial Code in an action against the Alien Property Custodian does not prevent the court from acquiring jurisdiction under this section. Stöhr v. Wallace, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 269 Fed. 827.

Notice by publication in alien's native land directed, see Lovinger v. Garvan, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 270 Fed. 298.

Pleading.—Where there is no jurisdictional averment that the plaintiff was not, at the time of the commencement of the action, an enemy or ally of enemy, the District Court was without jurisdiction to enter, and the Circuit Court of Appeals is without jurisdiction to review, the decree below. Garvin v. Kogler, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 442.

1918 Supp., p. 862, sec. 12.

Sale of property.—Although under this section the powers of the Alien Property Custodian are extended to include the power to sell, in case a claimant friend files a bill against the custodian such a bill either automatically stays the sale or at least the court may stay it in a proper case. Stöhr v. Wallace, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 269 Fed. 827.

1918 Supp., p. 865, sec. 17.

Enforcing demand of alien property custodian for property liable to seizure.—A demand by the Alien Property Custodian under the Trading with the Enemy Act for the delivery to him of property to which he is entitled, may be enforced by the federal district courts under this section. Central Union Trust Co. v. Garvan, (1921) 254 U. S. 554, 41 S. Ct. 214, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming [C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920] 265 Fed. 477, 481), wherein the court said: "There can be no doubt that Congress has power to provide for an immediate seizure in war times of property supposed to belong to the enemy, as it could provide for an attachment or distraint, if adequate provision is made for a return in case of mistake. As it can authorize a seizure in pais, it can authorize one through the help of a court. The only questions are whether it has done so, as supposed by the libellant, and if so, whether the conditions imposed by the act have been performed."

Under this section the Alien Property Custodian has the right to apply to the court for aid in making a seizure and petition it to order the United States marshal to seize the property and deliver it to him. Garvan v. $20,000 Bonds, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 477, wherein it was said: "We have no doubt of the right of the Alien Property Custodian to apply to the court for aid; if he did not know where the securities were, he would evidently be entitled to the aid of the court to compel the trustees to discover and deliver them. In this case he did know where they were, but it was much more orderly and decent to obtain possession by the aid of the court than to seize them by violence and the strong hand." To same effect, see Garvan v. $100,000 Bonds, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 481.

Nature of Alien Property Custodian's possession.—A proceeding brought by the Alien Property Custodian under this section, to obtain possession of property as being that of an alien enemy, gives nothing but the preliminary custody, such as would have been gained by seizure, although the property is to be conveyed to him, and by the amendatory Act of March 28, 1918 (1918 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. p. 862, note) he is vested with all the power of a common-law trustee in respect of all property other than money which has been or shall be, or which has been or shall be required to be, conveyed to him, and is given the power to sell and manage the same as though he were absolute owner, since this act did not repeal § 9 of the earlier act, (see 1918 Supp. p. 858) which provides for the immediate filing of a claim for a return of the property and the bringing of suit, the property, in case of suit, to be retained in the custody of the Custodian or in the Treasury of the United States, to abide the result. Central Union Trust Co. v. Garvan, (1921) 254 U. S. 554, 41 S. Ct. 214, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 477.

Procedure.—Under this section the proceeding could be by petition and order to show cause instead of by a bill in equity. In re Garvin, (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 270 Fed. 1002. See also Garvin v. $25,000 Canada Southern R. Co. 5 per cent. Bond, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 270 Fed. 217.

Right to intervene.—In Aronstam v. James, (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 273 Fed. 545, the right of a citizen of France to intervene in a suit involving property in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian was denied. See also Aronstam v. James, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 688, denying a motion for a stay.

Right of attorney to recover for services rendered in defense of an action against alien corporation recognized as to services rendered prior to Oct. 6, 1917, but denied as to services subsequent thereto, see Wilson v. Miller, (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 274 Fed. 808.

WAR DEPARTMENT AND MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT

Vol. IX, p. 911, sec. 220. [First ed., vol. VII, p. 946.]

Transportation of mounts belonging to officers.—In the absence of a statute authorizing payment for the transportation of mounts which are the private property of officers of the army, the Secretary of War has no authority, by the promulgation of a regulation, to bind the government for such transportation, and this section confers no authority upon the Secretary to incur such liability on behalf of the government. Atchinson, etc., R. Co. v. U. S. (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 339.

Vol. IX, p. 1028, sec. 27. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 947.]

Enlistment of minors — Generally.—To the same effect as third paragraph of original annotation, see Ex p. Beaver, (N. D. Ohio 1921) 271 Fed. 493.

This section by indirectly but none the less explicitly recognizing and authorizing enlistments of all minors under eighteen years of age with the consent of parents or guardians, repeals the minimum limit of eighteen years provided in section 4 of the Act of March 2, 1899 (9 Fed. Stat. Ann. [2d ed.] 1033) even if it does not restore and reenact the limit of sixteen years originally found in R. S. §§ 1116 and 1118. In the event that the eighteen year minimum is repealed and the sixteen year minimum is not restored, then the common law applicable to the enlistment of minors under eighteen years of age will be in force, under which a minor of the age of discretion might enlist regardless of any age limit. This being so the instant case is governed by that long line of authorities holding that a minor over 16 years of age, who has enlisted without the previous consent of his parents or lawful guardian, cannot, on his own application, be released in any event, and cannot be released on their application, after he has committed an offense punishable by military law and is being held to answer the same." Ex p. Beaver, (N. D. Ohio 1921) 271 Fed. 493.

Right to discharge — Pending prosecution for military offense.—The right of a non-consenting parent or guardian to the release of a minor from military service is subordinate to the right of the military authorities to hold him to answer for an offense triable by military law. Ex p. Beaver, (N. D. Ohio 1921) 271 Fed. 493.

Vol. IX, p. 1032, sec. 2. [First ed., vol. VII, p. 961.]

Application of section — Discharge of aliens.—The provision of this section relating to aliens is applicable only in times of peace, and as at the time of the decision of this case, April 12, 1921, the United States was still at war, an alien who had enlisted in the army could not obtain his discharge by reason of the provisions of this section. But even in time of peace an alien duly enlisted cannot obtain his discharge by writ of habeas corpus from military service and escape liability for offenses against military law by invoking the provisions of this section. Being sui juris, it is settled that the United States alone may plead his disability to avoid his enlistment contract and he may not. Ex p. Beaver, (N. D. Ohio 1921) 271 Fed. 493.

Vol. IX, p. 1033, sec. 4. [First ed., vol. VII, p. 960.]

This section is repealed by implication by section 27 of the National Defense Act (9 Fed. Stat. Ann. 1028). Ex p. Beaver, (N. D. Ohio 1921) 271 Fed. 493.

Liability of railroad for negligence.—A railroad company operated by the federal government under a lease made under this section is liable for negligence, and recovery against the carrier in such cases will not be affected by the return of these corporations to their owners, or rather the abandonment of supervision by the government, which has since taken place on March 1, 1920. Gilliam v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., (1920) 179 N. C. 508, 103 S. E. 10.

I. CONSTRUCTION OF SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT

3. Exemptions (p. 1141)

Effect of exemption claim by neutral alien.—A claim by a neutral alien, who had declared his intention to become a citizen, of exemption under this section has been held to amount to a withdrawal of such declaration. In re Trachsel, (S. D. Ohio 1921) 271 Fed. 779. This act was subsequently amended by the Act of July 9, 1918, which provides that a claim of exemption by a neutral alien shall operate and be held to cancel his declaration of intention to become an American citizen.

5. Offenses against Conscription Law
(p. 1142)

Desertion.—Intent.—The regulations promulgated by the President under authority vested in him by the Act of May 18, 1917, commonly known as the "Selective Service Law" (second edition, Selective Service Regulations, p. 104), section 140, subsec. 1, paragraphs (a), (b), and (c), prescribe who shall be deemed a deserter, namely, a registrant, who, after the time for his induction into military service, and with the intent to evade such service (a) fails to report for military duty under induction orders, etc.; (b) fails to entrain for mobilization camp pursuant to orders; or (c) who absents himself from his party en route to embarkation camp, etc. Before either one of these requirements respecting desertion can become effectual, and the right of a citizen to a hearing in a civil as distinguished from a military court denied, it must appear that the registrant acted "with intent to evade" such service. The intent with which the alleged act was committed, and, a fortiori, knowledge on the subject, is of the very essence of the offense. Thus, where a registrant appeared for examination, was accepted and informed that he would be notified by mail when to report for military duty, it was declared that it could not be said that the mailing of a notice, which he did not receive or know of, inducted him into the military service and that for his failure to respond he was a deserter therefrom. Farley v. Ratliff, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 682.

Conspiracy.—An acquittal on a charge of conspiracy with another to enable a third person to violate the Selective Service Law was held not to bar a prosecution for the crime of aiding and assisting another to evade the requirements of this law, as the offenses are distinct. Bens v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 152.

Rejection at mobilization camp as barring registrant from bonus.—In Bannister v. Soldiers' Bonus Board, (1921) 112 Atl. 422, 13 A. L. R. 589, it was held that a registrant who was inducted into military service by his local board under this Act but was rejected at the mobilization camp for physical unfitness, was not entitled to receive a bonus under a state statute which provided for giving such a bonus to each "enlisted man . . . who was mustered into federal service and reported for active duty" between certain dates.

Obstruction of draft as ground for disbarment.—See In re Margolis, (1921) 269 Pa. St. 206, 112 Atl. 478, 12 A. L. R. 1181.

An attorney's services in claiming exemption are not in contravention of public policy so as to deprive him of the right to recover compensation therefor, where the registrant on whose behalf the services are rendered is a non-declarant alien who is not within section 2 of this act. Spaulding v. Lambros, (1920) 58 Mont. 536, 193 Pac. 565.

Induction into military service.—In Ex p. Thieret, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 472, it was held that a person was in contemplation of law inducted into the military service when he received his preliminary instructions and his order to report for entrainment.

Review of work of draft boards.—In reviewing the work of the selective service boards they should not be held to the “verbal niceties and sometimes almost painful preciseness and accuracy of special pleading.” U. S. v. Bergdoll, (E. D. Pa. 1921) 272 Fed. 498.

Vol. IX, p. 1159, sec. 6. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 1019.]

Repeal of section by Espionage Act.—This section was not repealed by section 3 of the Espionage Act (1918 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. 122), and where an act constitutes a violation of both sections, the defendant should be prosecuted under this section. Snitkin v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 489.

Rights of party—law determining.—Until inducted into military service, the rights of a party are to be determined, not according to military law or the law of courts-martial, but according to the standards of the civil law. Ex p. Goldstein, (D. C. Mass. 1920) 268 Fed. 431.

Desertion.—A person is not inducted into the military service and therefore cannot be guilty of desertion where he did not receive the notice to report, it having been mailed to a wrong address. Ex p. Goldstein, (D. C. Mass. 1920) 268 Fed. 431.

Jurisdiction of court-martial to try draft evader.—Necessity of investigation by local board.—A registrant under the Selective Service Act who evades military service, may upon his arrest be tried by a court-martial for desertion without any preliminary investigation by his local board as to whether his desertion was willful. U. S. v. Lehman, (D. C. Md. 1920) 265 Fed. 852, wherein it was said:

“The petitioner, Young, in June, 1917, as required by the Selective Service Act of May 18 of that year, duly registered before local draft board No. 1 in Hagerstown, in this state. In due course he was ordered to report for military service. Instead of doing so, he fled and remained in hiding for more than two years. He returned to Hagerstown in the fall of 1919, and was then arrested by the sheriff, turned over to the military authorities, tried for desertion, convicted, and sentenced to five years’ imprisonment. He asks for his release because, as he says, the court-martial had no jurisdiction to try him. His contention is that by the regulation of the President, in force at the time he deserted, he should, upon his apprehension, have been taken before the local draft board, so that it might inquire whether his desertion was willful, and that he is not subject to court-martial until the draft board had first decided that question in the affirmative. Some months before his arrest, all use for the draft boards being at an end, the President discharged them from service. If the petitioner is right, any deserter who succeeded in escaping arrest until their abolition cannot now be punished. Very many persons failed to respond punctually to their orders, but only in a small minority of these cases was there any real attempt to evade service. There would have been an enormous waste of time in sending every one of these technical defaulters before a court-martial. There would scarcely have been courts enough to try them. For that reason, the President directed that such cases should receive preliminary investigation by the draft boards. Such action was not primarily for their protection. These boards had no power to condemn or acquit. Consideration there was a mere procedural step, in which the drafted man had no vested right or interest, and its abolition does him no harm. Before the petitioner or any one else can be punished for desertion, the court-martial must decide that in evading service he acted willfully.”

Determination of question of guilt.—If, the military authorities have jurisdiction to try the petitioner in habeas corpus proceedings, on the charge of desertion, the question whether, under the facts and law involved, he is guilty of the crime of desertion, is a question to be determined by such authorities under the legal rules and principles applicable, and in conformity with due process of law. In re Scott, 144 Fed. 79, 75 C. C. A. 237; Dillingham v. Booker, 163 Fed. 696, 90 C. C. A. 280, 16 Ann. Cas. 127, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 956. And where it is not alleged by petitioner, it will not be assumed by the federal court, that the proper military tribunal will deny to petitioner a full and fair hearing or will deprive him of any rights to which he is entitled. Ex p. Kerekes, (E. D. Mich. 1921) 274 Fed. 870.

Purpose of section.—“We think the plain intent of section 12 and of the regulations of June 27, 1918, is this: That from and after May 18, 1917, it shall be unlawful to sell to a soldier in uniform at any time or place, except if and as permitted by the Secretary of War for medicinal purposes; that from and after May 18, 1917, it shall be unlawful to sell to any one, soldier or civilian, or have in possession, intoxicating liquor at any place being used for military purposes, except if and as permitted for medicinal purposes; and that from and after June 27, 1918, it shall be unlawful to sell or give or deliver alcoholic liquor to any soldier, whether in or out of uniform, and whether anywhere within the United States or within other places under its control, except if and as used for permitted medicinal purposes. From this construction, no inconsistency results between different sections and regulations; it gives effect to the plain meaning of the words used, and no substantial reason is suggested why it should not be adopted." Bailey v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 559.

Necessity of prosecution of offense by indictment, see Hunter v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 235.

Sufficiency of information.—An information is sufficient where the offense is set forth in substantially the language of the statute, the place specifically alleged as a certain named hotel in a designated city, and the defendant charged with having set up and kept this hotel as a house of ill fame, and as having received and permitted to be received into it both men and women for immoral purposes; that is to say, for the purposes of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution. *Hunter v. Military prisoners.—Military prisoners confined in a United States military prison under previous court-martial sentences are subject to military law and trial by court-martial for offenses committed during such imprisonment, even if their discharge as soldiers resulted from the previous sentences. Kahn v. Anderson, (1921) 255 U. S. 1, 41 S. Ct. 224, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Marine corps.—Under this section a marine who had been detached for military service and who deserted while so serving may be tried by a naval court-martial after such detachment ceases. Ex p. Clark, (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 271 Fed. 533.

Vol. IX, p. 1256, art. 3. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 978.]

Review of courts-martial by civil courts.—Organization of court-martial.—The denial of relief by habeas corpus to a person imprisoned under sentence of a court-martial will not be disturbed on appeal on suggestions based upon the supposed duty, on the trial before the court-martial, to negative every possible condition the existence of which might have prevented that court from trying the case, including the possibility that the officer under trial might have belonged to a command which did not come within the power to call a court-martial conferred upon the convening officer, particularly where the suggestion made in this regard seems to have been an afterthought, and not to have been called to the attention of the court below. Givens v. Zerbat, (1921) 255 U. S. 11, 41 S. Ct. 227, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (N. D. Ga. 1920) 262 Fed. 702.

"In time of peace."—Peace in the complete legal sense, officially proclaimed, is what is meant by the phrase "in time of peace" in the provision of the 92d Article of War [9 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1286] that no person shall be tried by court-martial for murder or rape committed within the geographical limits of the states of the Union and the District of Columbia in time of peace. Givens v. Zerbat, (1921) 255 U. S. 11, 41 S. Ct. 227, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (N. D. Ga. 1920) 262 Fed. 702.

Designation of place of imprisonment.—Error, if any, in the designation of the place for carrying out the sentence of a court-martial, did not involve the jurisdiction of that court so as to require relief by habeas corpus, but could only lead to retaining the accused for a new designation of place of confinement. Givens v. Zerbat, (1921) 255 U. S. 11, 41 S. Ct. 227, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (N. D. Ga. 1920) 262 Fed. 702.

Vol. IX, p. 1257, art. 4. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 978.]

Retired officers.—Retired Army officers are officers in the military service of the United States within the meaning of the provision in the 4th Article of War, governing the composition of courts-martial, and an order assigning such officers to the court was within the authority conferred upon the Secretary of War by the Act of April 23, 1904, to assign retired officers of the Army, with their consent, to active duty on courts-martial. Kahn v. Anderson, (1921) 255 U. S. 1, 41 S. Ct. 224, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Officers of United States Guards.—Officers of the United States Guards must be deemed competent to be assigned to court-martial duty, since there can be no doubt that the President was fully empowered by the Selective Service Act of May 18, 1917, § 2, to exert the power which he did by special regulation organizing the military force known as the United States Guards, and that such force, under the express terms of section 1 of that act, are a part of the Army of the United States. Kahn v. Anderson, (1921) 255 U. S. 1, 41 S. Ct. 224, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Vol. IX, p. 1258, art. 5. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 978.]

Number of officers discretionary.—The exercise of discretion as to fixing the number of officers, with reference to the condition of the service, who shall compose a court-martial, within the maximum and minimum limits fixed by the 5th Article of War, is executive, and not subject to judicial review. Kahn v. Anderson, (1921) 255 U. S. 1, 41 S. Ct. 224, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Vol. IX, p. 1259, art. 8. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 978.]

Order convening court.—A camp commander, in exerting the power which he possesses by virtue of a general order of the President, sanctioned by this article, to convene general courts-martial, need not refer to such order. Givens v. Zerbst, (1921) 255 U. S. 11, 41 S. Ct. 227, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (N. D. Ga. 1920) 262 Fed. 702.

Power granted to camp commander.—The authority of the President, under this article, to empower "the commanding officer of any district or of any force or body of troops" to appoint general courts-martial, was not exceeded by a general order giving the power stated to certain designated camp commanders. Givens v. Zerbst (1921) 255 U. S. 11, 41 S. Ct. 227, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (N. D. Ga. 1920) 262 Fed. 702.

Judicial notice of President's order.—A general order of the President giving to certain designated camp commanders the power to appoint general courts-martial, being authorized by this article, is a part of the law of the land which the federal courts judicially notice without averment or proof. Givens v. Zerbst, (1921) 255 U. S. 11, 41 S. Ct. 227, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (N. D. Ga. 1920) 262 Fed. 702.

Vol. IX, p. 1267, art. 37. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 984.]

Questions of procedure.—Where the question is one of procedure and not of jurisdiction, a court-martial having obtained jurisdiction is competent to decide it. Thus, the fact that the order convening the court was signed by a staff officer of the general in command of the department, is immaterial. McRae v. Henkes, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 108. The court said: "We regard the insistence, however, as relating purely to a matter of form, and not substance. The order shows on its face that the court was convened and the detail fixed by command of the brigadier general, and the caption shows the department of which he was commanding officer. In both respects we regard the objections as not well taken. We cannot draw the desired inference that, whereas the suggested form would show that the order received both the personal and official attention of the commanding officer, the one used would not."

Vol. IX, p. 1273, art. 50. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 986.]

Alteration of sentences by civil courts.—Sentences of courts-martial are not alterable by civil courts. McRae v. Henkes, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 108.

Vol. IX, p. 1281, art. 74. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 991.]

Delivery of offenders in time of war.—The provision of this article relieving a commanding officer from the duty of delivering an offender to the civil authorities in time of war does not violate a provision of the Bill of Rights of a state guaranteeing a speedy trial to a person accused of crime. People v. Maniatis, (1921) 297 Ill. 72, 130 N. E. 323.

Vol. IX, p. 1283, art. 82. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 993.]

Application.—In U. S. v. McDonald, (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 265 Fed. 754, it was held that R. S. sec. 1343, which was superseded by this article, was general in its terms and applicable to all persons acting as spies, whether citizens of the United States or not.

Vol. IX, p. 1286, art. 92. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 994.]

"In time of peace."—Peace in the complete legal sense, officially proclaimed, is what is meant by the phrase "in time of peace" in the provision of this article that "no person shall be tried by court-martial for murder or rape committed within the geographical limits of the States of the Union and the District of Columbia in time of peace." Givens v. Zerbst, (1921) 255 U. S. 11, 41 S. Ct. 227, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (N. D. Ga. 1920) 262 Fed. 702. See to the same effect Kahn v. Anderson, (1921) 255 U. S. 1, 41 S. Ct. 224, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, where the court said: "This brings us to the final contention, that because, when the trial occurred, it was time of peace, no jurisdiction existed to try for murder, as article 92 provided that '... no person shall be tried by court-martial for murder or rape committed with the geographical limits of the states of the Union and the District of Columbia in time of peace.' That complete peace, in the legal sense, had not come to pass by the effect of the Armistice and the cessation of hostilities, is not disputable. Hamilton v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co., 251 U. S. 146, 64 L. ed. 194, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 106. It is therefore difficult to appreciate the reasoning upon which it is insisted that although the government of the United States was officially at war, nevertheless, so far as the regulation and control by it of its Army is concerned, it was at peace. Nor is it any less difficult to understand why reliance to sustain that proposition is placed on Caldwell v. Parker, 252 U. S. 376, 64 L. ed. 621, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 388, since that case involved no question of the want of jurisdiction of a court-martial over a crime committed by a soldier, but solely whether the jurisdiction which it was conceded such a court possessed was intended to be exclusive of a concurrent power in the state court to punish the same act, as the mere result of a declaration of war, and without reference to any interruption, by a condition of war, of the power of the civil courts to perform their duty; and, moreover, in that case the question here raised was expressly reserved from decision.

"Coming now to consider that question in the light (1) of the rulings in Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. 2, 18 L. ed. 281; Coleman v. Tennessee, 97 U. S. 509, 24 L. ed. 1118; Ex parte Mason, 105 U. S. 696, 26 L. ed. 1213; and Caldwell v. Parker, supra; (2) of the differences between the articles of 1874 and those of 1916, showing a purpose to rearrange the jurisdiction of courts-martial; (3) of the omission of the qualification, 'except in time of war,' from the clauses of the latter articles conferring jurisdiction as to designated offenses, including those capital (arts. 92 and 93), and its retention in the article dealing with the duty of the military to deliver to the state authorities (art. 74); and (4) of the placing in a separate article (art. 92) of the provision conferring jurisdiction as to murder and rape, and qualifying that jurisdiction by the words 'in time of peace,' not used in the previous articles,—we are of opinion that that qualification signifies peace in the complete sense, officially declared. The fact that the articles of 1916 in other respects make manifest the legislative purpose to give effect to the previous articles as interpreted by the decided cases to which we have referred, at once convincingly suggests that a like reason controlled in adopting the limitation, 'except in time of peace,' contained in article 92. See McElrath v. United States, 102 U. S. 426, 438, 26 L. ed. 189, 191, where it was expressly decided that the limitation, 'except in time of peace,' on the power of the President to summarily dismiss a military officer, contemplated not a mere cessation of hostilities, but peace in the complete sense, officially proclaimed. Indeed, in that case it was pointed out that this significance of the words had received the sanction of Congress, and had been made the basis for the adjustment of controversies dependent upon the time when peace was established."

Effect of prosecution under another article for same offense.—An officer who has been tried and convicted on specifications drawn under the Ninety-fifth Article of War, may not be tried under this Article for the same offenses on specifications framed in identical language. Ex p. Henkes, (D. C. Kan. 1919) 267 Fed. 276, wherein it was said: "Petitioner was charged on three specifications drawn under the Ninety-fifth Article of War, was also charged on three specifications in identical language framed under the Ninety-Sixth Article of War, and was adjudged guilty and sentenced on each, all, and every of said specifications to be dismissed from the service and to be confined at hard labor for 25 years. Under article 95, the sentence of dismissal alone could enter against him. Under article 96, both dismissal and confinement are permitted. The Ninety-Sixth Article of War is a re-enactment of the old Sixty-Second Article of War. It is never resorted to, unless the offense charged falls under no other article. It has been termed the 'drag-net Article of War,' and the specifications, under both charges in this case, being identical in language, the proofs in support of the charges being identical, it must be thought, the court, having charged, tried, convicted, and sentenced petitioner under the specific provisions of the Ninety-Fifth Article of War, it was without further power to charge, try, convict, and punish him under the general provisions of the Ninety-Sixth Article of War. This would appear from the language of the Ninety-Sixth article, which reads as follows:

"Though not mentioned in these articles, all disorders and neglects to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, all conduct of a nature to bring discredit upon the military service, and all crimes or offenses not capital, of which persons subject to military law may be guilty, shall be taken cognizance of by a general or special or summary court-martial, according to the nature and degree of the offense, and punished at the discretion of such court."

"Hence the record so made discloses petitioner to have been twice placed in jeopardy for the same identical offense."

Vol. IX, p. 1296, art. 118. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 1001.]

Power of President.—This article supercedes R. S. sec. 1230 and vests power in the President to dismiss an officer in time of war without a trial by a court-martial. Wallace v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 396.

Vol. IX, p. 1299, sec. 1. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 889.]

Effect on other remedies for personal injury.—"By the War Risk Insurance Act (38 Stat. 711), compensation is provided by the government to a soldier for death or injuries sustained by him while a soldier, if he avails himself of the terms of the act. The amount of compensation and the remedy therein prescribed is exclusive of other measures of and for liability and remedies provided for the protection of the civilian population of the general public." Moon v. Hines, (Ala. 1921) 87 So. 603, 13 A. L. R. 1020.

Vol. IX, p. 1305, sec. 13. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 896.]

Procedure.—The procedure in suits against the United States under this Act is governed by the provisions of the Tucker Act of March 3, 1887, ch. 359, §§ 5, 6, 24 Stat. L. 506 (5 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1118, 1119). Hence, where in a suit against the United States on an insurance certificate issued by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the defendant is not served in accordance with provisions of such Act, the summons will be quashed on motion of the United States attorney. Cassarello v. U. S., (M. D. Pa. 1919) 265 Fed. 326; Shepherdson v. U. S., (E. D. Pa. 1921) 271 Fed. 330.

Change of beneficiary.—This section prescribes no form in which a change of beneficiary shall be expressed, consequently it may take the form of a letter. Thus, it has been held that a soldier desiring to change the beneficiary in his certificate of war risk insurance, who had his superior officer write a letter to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, which he signed, and in which he expressed the desire that the change be made, had sufficiently complied with the requirements for a change of beneficiary. Shepherdson v. U. S., (E. D. Pa. 1921) 271 Fed. 330, wherein it was said: "The act of Congress gives the right to the insured to change the beneficiary, without further limitation of the right than that it shall be effectuated in accordance with regulations. There were at the time no regulations controlling it, so that the right was an absolute one. If the question now presented involved the protection of the United States in a payment made in accordance with the records, it would be one of more importance than it now presents as a question wholly between contesting beneficiaries. Having the opinion, which we have expressed, that the insured had the right to make the change, this carries with it the vested right of the beneficiary in the policy as soon as the change was in fact made. The beneficiary having this right, we are of the further opinion that it is not lost to her because the official records of the transaction have been mislaid or destroyed. The written paper, if in existence, or the official record of it, would be merely the evidence that the change had been made. This evidence we do not have, but we do have the legal equivalent of it."

Vol. IX, p. 1340, sec. 124. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 966.]

Jurisdiction of state court over action by employee in nitrate plant.—Congress having taken jurisdiction of Muscle Shoals, and having adopted a Workmen's Compensation Act (6 Fed. St. Ann (2d ed.) 282) which has been held to apply to employees of companies operating nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals, a state court has no jurisdiction of an action for personal injuries by such an employee. Webb v. J. G. White Engineering Corp., (1920) 204 Ala. 429, 85 So. 729.

Vol. IX, p. 1343, sec. 120. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 964.]

Application of section to contracts.—This section applies only to requisitions and not to contracts between private individuals and the government for the furnishing of supplies. American Smelting, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 466.

Government contracts as defense to non-performance of contracts with private individual.—See Roxford Knitting Co. v. Moore, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 177, affirming (N. D. N. Y. 1918) 250 Fed. 278, 288.

Form of order.—See Roxford Knitting Co. v. Moore, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 177, affirming (N. D. N. Y. 1918) 250 Fed. 278, 288.

1918 Supp., p. 895, sec. 4. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 1015.]

Scope and effect of section.—This section "was merely declaratory of the law. It neither added to, nor detracted from, the power inherent in the courts under the naturalization laws to hold a plea of alienage in bar to the performance of military service operated likewise as a bar to admission to citizenship. The bona fides of the intent and desire of an applicant for American citizenship constitutes one of the salient and material issues involved in a naturalization proceeding. The attitude, conduct, and actions of a candidate, as disclosed in his questionnaire, are matters that must be taken judicial notice of, in a naturalization proceeding; and where in such questionnaire the petitioner is shown to have anywhere claimed exemption from military service on the ground of alienage, he is not eligible or qualified to be, nor should be, admitted to American citizenship. The courts seem to be in more or less uniformity as to this." In re Tomarchio, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 269 Fed. 400.

1919 Supp., p. 389, sec. 15.

Rights of beneficiary in insurance installments.—Under this section a beneficiary has no vested right in installments of insurance that do not accrue until after his death and hence cannot dispose of them by will. Instead such installments must under this section be distributed among the next of kin of the insured who are within the permitted class of beneficiaries. Cassarello v. U. S., (N. D. Pa. 1919) 271 Fed. 486.

1919 Supp., p. 390, sec. 19.

Installments accruing prior to beneficiary's death.—Where installments of insurance have accrued before the death of the beneficiary they become vested in him and hence may be disposed of by will. Cassarello v. U. S., (M. D. Pa. 1919) 271 Fed. 486.

1920 Supp., p. 338, art. 39.

Effect of expiration of enlistment before commencement of proceedings.—The fact the term of enlistment expires before proceedings against an enlisted man for desertion are begun does not affect the jurisdiction of the naval authorities over him. Ex p. Clark, (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 271 Fed. 533, wherein it was said: "It is apparent that as relator had deserted and could not be found, during the period of his desertion there was such a 'manifest impediment' in the way of bringing him to justice as would justify excluding the period of his desertion from any computation of the time within which a prosecution must be begun. I have carefully considered the decision of the Judge Advocate General in the Matter of George M. Runyon, dated December 29, 1920, and if the effect thereof is that a man may desert, remain in hiding until the time of his enlistment expires, and then escape all responsibility, I cannot agree with such a conclusion. The effect thereof upon the morale of army and navy alike would be disastrous. While there is no obligation to serve after the period of enlistment, it does not follow that conduct during that period may go unpunished for the reason assigned. If that were the law, it might be well urged that a court-martial has no power to imprison after the expiration of the enlistment."

WATERS

Vol. IX, p. 1349, sec. 2339. [First ed., vol. VII, p. 1090.]

- I. Construction in general.
- II. Appropriation of waters.
- III. Local laws.
- IV. Easements.
- V. Riparian rights.

I. CONSTRUCTION IN GENERAL (p. 1349)

Reason for act.—The act is said to have been the outgrowth of a recognition by Congress of "the necessity of permitting persons in these arid regions to acquire an interest in water sources on public lands distinct from the lands themselves." Simons v. Inyo Cerro Gordo Min. Co., (Cal. App. 1920) 192 Pac. 144.

II. APPROPRIATION OF WATERS (p. 1351)

When right of appropriation accrues.—As against the right of the government to withdraw lands, no rights vest until completion of the work. The rule that the right to an easement for a reservoir ditch or canal relates back to the notice of appropriation if the work is prosecuted with diligence, does not apply as against the government. Verde

Water, etc., Co. v. Salt River Valley Water Users' Assoc., (Ariz. 1921) 197 Pac. 227.

Discovery insufficient.—Mere discovery of the springs could not give a right to divert or use any of the water. Nor could mere development of the water, unaccompanied by any actual diversion for beneficial use, give any right. It is only by some species of "appropriation"—i. e., reducing the water to actual possession, made as provided by the act of 1866 (Rev. Stat. § 2339)—that one can acquire title to a right in or to waters situated or flowing wholly on public lands. Simons v. Inyo Cerro Gordo Min. Co., (Cal. App. 1920) 192 Pac. 144, the court adding: "It will be noticed that the language of the act of 1866 is:

"Whenever by priority of possession, rights to the use of water * * * have vested," etc.

"The right is the right to the 'use,' and it can be acquired only by 'priority of possession'; i. e., by actual diversion with a bona fide intent to use the water for a beneficial purpose."

III. LOCAL LAWS (p. 1356)

Rights subject to state laws.—Defendant's rights under his patent are subject to water rights which, under the California law of possessory rights, had vested prior to defendant's entry, for the federal statutes provide for the protection of those rights to waters upon the public domain, acquired by diversion, which are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and decisions of the courts of the localities where such rights are claimed. Haight v. Costanich, (Cal. 192) 194 Pac. 26.

IV. EASEMENTS (p. 1358)

Pipe lines.—One who enters on public land and constructs a pipe line thereon, under a claim of ownership of a water right, is entitled to the protection afforded by the act of 1866 to the constructors of ditches and canals; that is, a right of way for such pipe line is given by the government. Simons v. Inyo Cerro Gordo Min. Co., (Cal. App. 1920) 192 Pac. 144.

V. RIPARIAN RIGHTS (p. 1359)

Patent relates back.—“The granting of a patent to a settler on public lands is held to relate back to the filing of the entry of the land in the United States land office and to confer the rights of a riparian owner upon the grantee of the patent from the date of his entry.” Haight v. Costanich, (Cal. 1920) 194 Pac. 26.

Vol. IX, p. 1362, sec. 1. [First ed., vol. VII, p. 1097.]

Rights of United States.—Where the proposed disposition of the water is incidental to the construction and maintenance of a reclamation project, a proposed canal is within the scope of the authority conferred by law, and for it the government may occupy rights of way under the act of August 30, 1890, or expropriate them by suitable condemnation proceedings. Griffiths v. Cole, (D. C. Idaho 1919) 264 Fed. 369.

Vol. IX, p. 1363, sec. 1. [First ed., vol. VII, p. 1098.]

Right in respect to Interstate Canal in Wyoming and Nebraska.—In a case involving the rights of the United States in respect to the appropriation for irrigation purposes of waters flowing in the Interstate Canal through Wyoming and Nebraska it was said on appeal from a decree in favor of the United States: “Counsel further argue that appellee has not a valid legal appropriation for land in Nebraska under the Interstate Canal, because the canal has its headgate in Wyoming and carries water from that state to irrigate lands in Nebraska. The theory of counsel is that, as neither Wyoming nor Nebraska has jurisdiction of the entire works of the Pathfinder project, both states exceeded their jurisdiction when they issued permits to the appellee for the reclamation project. Lamson v. Vailes, 27 Colo. 201, 61 Pac. 231, and Turley v. Furman, 16 N. M. 253, 114 Pac. 278, are cited in support of this contention. It is doubtful as to whether these cases support the contention; but, conceding that they do, they have no application as to the Interstate Canal between Wyoming and Nebraska, especially in view of the fact that this question has been passed upon directly by both the Supreme Court of Wyoming and the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit in a Nebraska case. Wille v. Decker, 11 Wyo. 496, 73 Pac. 210, 100 Am. St. Rep. 939; Perkins County, Neb. v. Graff, 114 Fed. 441, 52 C. C. A. 243. The rights of appellee in connection with the reclamation project must be considered in view of the Reclamation Act (32 Stat. 388), the Warren Act (36 Stat. 925), and the legislation of Wyoming and Nebraska; and, when thus considered, we see no objection to the right of the United States to appropriate and use for irrigation purposes, in either Wyoming or Nebraska, the waters diverted by it from the North Platte river in Wyoming and flowing in the Interstate Canal through Wyoming and Nebraska.” Rams-horn Ditch Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 80, affirming U. S. v. Rams-horn Ditch Co., (D. C. Neb. 1919) 254 Fed. 842.

Vol. IX, p. 1366, sec. 3. [First ed., vol. VII, p. 1099.]

Effect of withdrawal.—Land withdrawn under this section cannot be selected as lieu land by the state of California under the Act of May 2, 1914, 38 St., p. 372, granting the right to select “vacant” and “unreserved” land in lieu of certain school lands. Donley v. Van Horn, (Cal. App. 1920) 193 Pac. 514.

Vol. IX, p. 1367, sec. 4. [First ed., vol. VII, p. 1099.]

Authority of secretary.—It is said that by the Reclamation Act Congress has chosen to confer authority upon the Secretary of the Interior only to undertake projects the primary or predominant purpose of which is to reclaim public land. Griffiths v. Cole, (D. C. Idaho 1919) 264 Fed. 369.

Charges.—In general.—As to what are proper charges it has been said: “It is difficult to draw the line of demarcation between chargeable and nonchargeable expenses. It could hardly have been intended that the place where the service is rendered, or the obligation incurred, is a controlling consideration. If the accounts of the project are kept in Washington, or if supplies are purchased by an agent in New York, or if specifications are gotten up in Denver, the contribution to the project may be quite as direct and beneficial as it would be, were such services rendered in the immediate vicinity. Neither could it have been intended to decide that to be chargeable the service must be rendered by one who is employed exclusively upon a single project. Upon the other hand, general expense of a strictly administrative character, such as the salaries of the administrative officers and of those who assist them in performing their administrative duties, and all expenses strictly incidental to such performance, would seem to be excluded." Payette-Boise Water Users' Ass'n v. Bond, (D. C. Idaho 1920) 269 Fed. 159.

Contested claims.—As to charging claims which are contested by the government it has been said: "Presumably it is the opinion of the reclamation officials that the claim is invalid, or they would have recognized it and caused it to be paid. If it is invalid, the settlers ought not to be charged with it. If it is valid, the contractors ought to be paid. If its status is uncertain, the settlers ought not to be charged with the full amount thereof. It is a matter of common knowledge that such claims are usually susceptible to compromise and adjustment, and if the settlers are to be charged with a specific amount, the best settlement possible should have been made. Why not give them an opportunity to adjust it, if they are to be held responsible for it? The government should be fully protected, but not to the unnecessary hurt of the settler. . . . If the reclamation officials and the plaintiff cannot agree as to the proper amount to be charged on account of the contingent liability, or if a settlement agreeable to all parties cannot be made with the claimants, the full claim should be permitted to stand as a charge only upon condition and with the understanding that, in case the government is successful in defeating it, appropriate credit be given the settlers." Payette-Boise Water Users' Ass'n v. Bond, (D. C. Idaho 1920) 269 Fed. 159.

Computation of acreage in estimating area to be charged, see Payette-Boise Water Users' Ass'n v. Bond, (D. C. Idaho 1920) 269 Fed. 159.

Review of action of Secretary of Interior by the courts, see Payette-Boise Water Users' Ass'n v. Bond, (D. C. Idaho 1920) 269 Fed. 159.

Vol. IX, p. 1369, sec. 7. [First ed., vol. VII, p. 1100.]

Destruction of business, etc., as element of compensation.—The United States does not impliedly promise to compensate persons engaged in stock raising for the destruction of their business, or the loss sustained through the enforced sale of their cattle, the result of the inundation of their lands by the construction of a dam which arrests flood waters. Bothwell v. U. S., (1920) 254 U. S. 231, 41 S. Ct. 74, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 54 Ct. Cl. 203.

Interest.—An award in condemnation proceedings which were instituted by the United States to appropriate for reclamation purposes lands already actually taken properly included interest at 6 per cent from the time of the actual taking to the time of the deposit of the awards in court in payment of the same, especially where such allowance of interest is in harmony with the policy of the state wherein the lands are situated. U. S. v. Rogers, (1921) 255 U. S. 163, 41 S. Ct. 281, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 397, 168 C. C. A. 437), wherein the court said: "In fixing the compensation the district court, and the circuit court of appeals in affirming the judgment, followed the New Mexico statute fixing the rate of interest at 6 per cent. This was in conformity with a former ruling of the circuit court of appeals applying the statute of Minnesota to lands appropriated in that state. United States v. Sargent, 89 C. C. A. 81, 162 Fed. 81.

"The government urges that the Conformity Act of August 1, 1888, does not require the United States government to be bound by the rule of the state statute in the allowance of interest. This may be true, but we agree with the courts below that the allowance of just compensation by giving interest from the time of taking until payment is a convenient and fair method of ascertaining the sum to which the owner of the land is entitled. The fact that the rule is in harmony with the policy of the state where the lands are situated does not militate against, but makes for the justice and propriety of, its adoption. United States v. Sargent, supra." See to the same effect, U. S. v. Highsmith, (1921) 255 Fed. 170, 41 S. Ct. 282, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Application of section.—This section applies to homestead entries. Edwards v. Bodkin, (S. D. Cal. 1919) 267 Fed. 1004. The court said: "Counsel for the defendant states that section 5 of the act of June 27, 1906, does not apply to homestead entries, that the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals, wherein the court decided that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to make improvements upon the land, was erroneous. It is true that that section does not refer to homestead entries, but section 3 of the act of June 17, 1902, does refer to homestead entries made after withdrawal of the land, and expressly allows a homestead entry after withdrawal. It is provided by section 3:

"That all lands entered and entries made under the homestead laws within areas so withdrawn during such withdrawal shall be subject to all the provisions, limitations, charges, terms, and conditions of this act," etc.

"Section 3 of the act of June 17, 1902, and section 5 of the act of June 27, 1906, construed together, work out the proposition stated by the court."

tenance charges construed in New York Canal Co. v. Bond, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 228.

WEST INDIAN ISLANDS

1918 Supp., p. 927, sec. 2.

Applicability of constitutional guaranties.—"The only laws of the United States applicable to the Virgin Islands are the Act of Congress of March 3, 1917, and the fundamental law of the Constitution guaranteeing certain rights to all within its protection. These rights have, by repeated decisions of the Supreme Court, been divided into two classes—artificial or remedial rights, which are peculiar to our own system of jurisprudence; and natural or personal rights, enforced in the Constitution by prohibition against interference with them. Rights of both kinds are embraced within the Fifth and Sixth Amendments to the Constitution. Remedial rights there guaranteed are, for instance, the right of presentment by grand jury and of trial by jury. It has been decided that rights of this character are not among the fundamental rights which Congress in legislating for a territory not incorporated into the United States must secure to its inhabitants. Talton v. Mayes, 163 U. S. 376, 16 Sup. Ct. 986, 41 L. Ed. 196; Hawaii v. Mankichi, 190 U. S. 197, 23 Sup. Ct. 787, 47 L. Ed. 1016. In harmony with these decisions it has been further held that until Congress shall extend rights of this character to the inhabitants of newly acquired territory, the judicial system prevailing in such territory—not the system contemplated by the Constitution—is applicable and controlling. But in the Insular Cases—De Lima v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 1, 21 Sup. Ct. 743, 45 L. Ed. 1041; Dooley v. United States, 182 U. S. 222, 21 Sup. Ct. 762, 45 L. Ed. 1074; Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 244, 21 Sup. Ct. 770, 45 L. Ed. 1088; as well as in Hawaii v. Mankichi, 190 U. S. 197, 23 Sup. Ct. 787, 47 L. Ed. 1016, and Dorr v. United States, 195 U. S. 138, 24 Sup. Ct. 808, 49 L. Ed. 128, 1 Ann. Cas. 697—where the Supreme Court reviewed nearly the whole range of sovereignty of the United States over its possessions, defining what laws, statutory and constitutional, are not applicable to unincorporated territories until Congress shall extend them, it is made very certain that there are constitutional rights of a natural or personal nature of which Congress can not, in legislating for such outlying territories, deprive their inhabitants. In these cases the Supreme Court clearly expressed the opinion, not on the point of the decisions, to be sure, but as a logical corollary, that even if the people of such territories—not being possessed of the political rights of citizens—are regarded as aliens, they are entitled in the spirit of the Constitution to be protected in life, liberty and property and not to be deprived thereof without due process of law.

"It was, we think, these natural or personal rights, vouchsafed by the Constitution to everyone within its operation, that Congress had in mind when by the Act of March 3, 1917, it provided for retention in the Virgin Islands of local laws and local procedure 'in so far as compatible with the changed sovereignty.' The Congress evidently intended that a man in the Virgin Islands might be, and, indeed, should be tried for his life under local laws of Danish origin, yet only when those laws are not incompatible with principles brought to the Islands by the change of sovereignty, the cardinal one being that of due process of law. . . . But, while it was declared by The Organic Act that proceedings in the local courts of the Virgin Islands shall be as provided by local Danish laws, Congress wrought a change in those laws by also providing that they remain in force only so far as they are compatible with the changed sovereignty. What the change in sovereignty brought to the Islands was, we think, the right, guaranteed by the new sovereign, of 'an accused to be confronted with the witnesses against him' and the right not to be 'deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law.' The essential element of the latter is the right to be heard.

"These are principles which Congress, by the Organic Act, engrafted upon the Danish laws of the Virgin Islands. Without these principles the local laws would not be compatible with the changed sovereignty." Soto v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 628.

Mandamus for reinstatement of district judge.—In U. S. v. Malmin, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 785, it was held that the Circuit Court of Appeals has power to issue mandamus directing a district judge whose appointment has been unlawfully revoked by the Governor of the Islands to resume the duties of his office.

Scope of review.—An appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals under this section brings the case up for review on both the facts and the law after the manner of appeals to the courts of demands. Soto v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 628.

Appellate jurisdiction and procedure.—In Clen v. Jorgensen, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 120, on an appeal from the District Court of the Virgin Islands to the Circuit Court of Appeals, the jurisdiction of the latter court to review the judgment on appeal was challenged on the ground that the action below was an action at law and that the jurisdiction of the appellate court to review such an action was by writ of error — and then only as to errors of law — under the distinction between actions in equity and at law and the corresponding distinction between appeals and writs of error. Answering this contention, the court said: "In conferring jurisdiction Congress did not define the process to be employed or the procedure to be followed, otherwise than by stating that 'in all cases arising in the said West Indian Islands and now reviewable by the courts of Denmark, writs of error and appeals shall be to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.'"

"In using this expression Congress was chiefly concerned in designating the court to which the process of review should be addressed. It rather assumed that the appellate procedure would be by writs of error and appeals; it did not, however, expressly prescribe that procedure as it did in the act creating Circuit Courts of Appeals. Act of 1891, c. 517, § 6. . . . If, in granting the right of review to litigants in these islands and in conferring appellate jurisdiction upon this court, Congress used words which, having a technical meaning in jurisdictions of English origin, had no meaning at all in Danish jurisprudence, we cannot hold that Congress intended thereby to impose upon their jurisprudence a legal distinction between proceedings in equity and at law to it unknown, and to change their proceeding of review from that which existed to one grounded on that distinction. In other words, we cannot hold that Congress prescribed an appellate procedure based on a distinction which did not exist. Therefore, until Congress shall provide otherwise, we shall regard the appellate jurisdiction conferred by the recited act to be such as to enable this court to review on appeal all matters of fact and of law involved in the judgments brought here for review."

WHITE SLAVE TRAFFIC

Vol. IX, p. 1408, sec. 1. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 419.]

"Interstate commerce."—The definition of "interstate commerce" in this section necessarily excludes, by implication, transportation from one point in a state to another point in the same state; the words "from" and "to" as used in the act manifestly referring to two different states or territories as the respective points of origin and final destination of the transportation, and not to a state through which the woman is carried as a mere incident of the through transportation. U. S. v. Wilson, (E. D. Tenn. 1920) 266 Fed. 712.

Vol. IX, p. 1409, sec. 2. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 419.]

III. Elements of offense.

1. Debauchery.
3. Method of transportation.

IV. Indictment.

1. In general.
- V. Evidence.
 1. Admissibility.
 2. Sufficiency.

III. ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE

1. Debauchery (p. 1410)

Purpose of transportation.—"The interstate transportation denounced by the act must have for its object, or be a means of effecting, or at least of facilitating, the sexual intercourse of the parties. But the mere fact that a journey from one state to another is followed by such intercourse, when the journey was not for that purpose, but wholly for other reasons, to which intercourse was not related, cannot be regarded as a violation of the statute." Fisher v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 667.

3. Method of Transportation (p. 1410)

Transportation by common carrier.—It is not essential in order to constitute the offense that the transportation be by common carrier. Gowling v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 215.

IV. INDICTMENT

1. In General (p. 1411)

Sufficiency—In general.—An indictment which charges that the defendant transported and aided and assisted in transporting the woman in interstate commerce in and by means of a certain automobile running over the public highways of the United States, the automobile then and there being in such transportation, and operated and controlled by the defendant, is sufficient. Gowling v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 215.

An indictment charging that on a certain day the accused transported, caused to be transported and assisted and aided in transporting in interstate commerce for the purpose of prostitution, a certain named woman merely paraphrases the statute and is sufficient. Freed v. U. S., (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 266 Fed. 1012.

Intent.—An indictment which alleges that the transportation was "for the purposes of having unlawful sexual intercourse," sufficiently alleges the necessary criminal intent. Carey v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 515. The court said: "The argument is that these counts are based upon sections 2 and 3 of the act (36 Stat. 825), which require that the transportation shall be 'with the intent and purpose on the part of such person' that the woman shall engage in immoral practice, and that these counts of the indictment merely alleged that the transportation was 'for the purpose of having unlawful sexual intercourse.' While these sections use the words 'intent and purpose,' we are unable to draw any distinction between their use therein. If the transportation was for the purpose of unlawful intercourse, it must have been with the intent to have such intercourse. The indictment is sufficient."

Transportation in interstate commerce.—Where an indictment merely charges transportation of the woman from one point to another in Tennessee, through Alabama, and does not charge that she was transported from Alabama as the point of origin to Tennessee, it necessarily follows that it does not state a case of transportation in interstate commerce, as defined in the White Slave Traffic Act. U. S. v. Wilson, (E. D. Tenn. 1920) 266 Fed. 712.

Joinder of offenses.—Offenses against this act growing out of the same transaction may be so connected as to permit of their joinder in one indictment in separate counts under R. S. sec. 1024 (2 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) p. 676). Freed v. U. S., (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 266 Fed. 1012.

V. EVIDENCE

1. Admissibility (p. 1412)

Testimony of accomplices.—"While the Supreme Court recognizes that there is no absolute rule of law preventing convictions upon the testimony of an accomplice, the jury should be instructed and cautioned as to the character of such testimony and the danger of convicting without supporting evidence." Freed v. U. S., (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 266 Fed. 1012.

Paternity of child born by woman transported.—It has been held that it is competent for the prosecution to prove that the defendant is the father of a child by the woman whom he is accused of having transported in violation of this Act. Gowling v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 269 Fed. 215.

Determination of prejudice from admitted evidence.—Whether prejudice results from the erroneous admission of evidence at a trial is a question of practical effect, when the trial as a whole and all the circumstances of the proofs are regarded. Thus, where the defendant in a prosecution under this Act, urges that the admission of evidence that he had borrowed a sum of money from the woman in the case and had not repaid it, was prejudicial, but it appears that the evidence of guilt, aside from that challenged was overwhelming and undisputed, a judgment of conviction will be affirmed. Williams v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 625.

For evidence held admissible to show a violation of this Act, see Carey v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 515.

2. Sufficiency (p. 1412)

For evidence held to be sufficient to show a violation of this section, see Elrod v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 55; Carey v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 265 Fed. 515; Francis v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 513.

For evidence held to be insufficient to show a violation of this Act, see Fisher v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 667; England v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 102. In the latter case it was held, there being no evidence of persuasion or inducement on the part of the defendant, that it was error to instruct the jury that "the mere act of defendant in traveling with the girl from West Virginia to Akron, and there having immoral relations with her, although she went entirely of her own accord and without the slightest persuasion on his part, or even against his advice, constituted a violation of the statute, and rendered him liable to its penalties."

Vol. IX, p. 1416, sec. 4. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 420.]

Objections on appeal.—An objection on appeal by one convicted of a violation of this section that the evidence did not justify a conviction cannot be availed of where there was no request by the defendant on the trial for any instructions to the jury and no exception made to the charge given. Charles v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 203.

WITNESSES

Vol. IX, p. 1421, sec. 858. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 708.]

III. CRIMINAL CASES (p. 1422)

To the same effect as the original annotations, see Jin Fuey Moy v. U. S., (1920) 254 U. S. 189, 41 S. Ct. 98, 65 U. S. (L. Ed.) — (affirming (W. D. Pa. 1918) 253 Fed. 213) wherein it was further held that the rule that excludes the wife of an accused from testifying in his behalf in the federal courts applies although her evidence is offered simply to contradict the testimony of particular witnesses for the government, who testified to certain matters as having happened in her presence.

Vol. IX, p. 1428, sec. 848. [First ed., vol. VII, p. 1124.]

III. Necessity that witnesses be sworn.

IV. Mileage.

III. NECESSITY THAT WITNESS BE SWORN (p. 1430)

Taxing as costs the fees of witnesses who do not testify.—There is no abuse of discretion in taxing as costs the mileage and fees of witnesses who did not testify where they were subpoenaed in good faith their testimony being deemed material to the issues involved. Kirby v. U. S., (C. O. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 391.

IV. MILEAGE (p. 1430)

Extent of allowance.—In actions at law an allowance for travel from the actual place of residence of the witness may be allowed, though in excess of a hundred miles. Stokely v. Mather, (D. C. Mass. 1921) 270 Fed. 592.

In Kirby v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 391, the court said: "Error is assigned to the ruling of the court below in allowing as costs the mileage of witnesses who attended the trial from without the state, and from points more than 100 miles from where the court was held. The question of practice raised by the assignment is one upon which the courts have differed. In the First circuit it is held that a witness is entitled to the whole mileage without limit to the 100 miles, whether or not he resides within the jurisdiction. United States v. Sanborn (C. C.) 28 Fed. 302; The City of Augusta, 80 Fed. 297, 25 C. C. A. 430; The Governor Ames, 187 Fed. 40, 109 C. C. A. 94; Eastern S. S. Corp. v. Great Lakes Dredge & D. Co., 256 Fed. 497, 168 C. C. A. 3. The rule is to the contrary in the Second circuit. Buffalo Ins. Co. v. Providence &

S. S. Co. (C. C.) 29 Fed. 237; The Syracuse (C. C.) 36 Fed. 830. Also in the Third circuit. The Progresso (D. C.) 48 Fed. 239. And in the Fourth circuit. Sloss Iron & Steel Co. v. South Carolina & G. R. Co. (C. C.) 75 Fed. 106. Also in the Sixth circuit. The Vernon (D. C.) 36 Fed. 113; Burrow v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co. (C. C.) 54 Fed. 278. Also in the Seventh circuit. Eastman v. Sherry (C. C.) 37 Fed. 844. Also in the Eighth circuit. Pinson v. Railroad Co. (C. C.) 54 Fed. 464; Griggsby Const. Co. v. Louisiana & N. W. R. Co. (C. C.) 123 Fed. 751; United States v. Green (D. C.) 196 Fed. 255. In the Ninth circuit, in Hunter v. Russell (C. C.) 59 Fed. 964, Judge Knowles followed the rule of the First circuit, but in Hanchett v. Humphrey (C. C.) 93 Fed. 895, Judge Hawley ruled otherwise, and held that mileage is taxable for a witness from any point within the district and for a distance of 100 miles, if the witness came from a point at a greater distance, and without the district. In United States v. Southern Pac. Co. (C. C.) 172 Fed. 909, Judge Bean followed the ruling in Hanchett v. Humphrey. In United States v. Southern Pac. Co. (D. C.) 230 Fed. 270, Judge Trippet held likewise. In neither of the last two cases was mention made of the decision of this court in Jesse D. Carr Land & Live Stock Co. v. United States, 118 Fed. 821, 55 C. C. A. 433, in which Judge De Haven, speaking for the court said:

"The appellant's motion to strike from the bill of costs the amount claimed by the appellee for mileage and fees of certain witnesses, who came from without the state and more than 100 miles from the place of trial, was properly denied"—citing United States v. Sanborn (C. C.) 28 Fed. 299.

"Upon that decision the plaintiff in the present suit relies. We are of the opinion that the remarks of the court in that case should not be held decisive of the question here involved. The ruling was made, not on a motion to retax the costs, but on a motion to strike out the costs taxed as mileage and for expenses of witnesses. It does not appear that the question whether or not the witnesses were entitled to mileage for more than 100 miles was presented or discussed. Judge Hawley participated in the decision, notwithstanding his prior ruling in Hanchett v. Humphrey. We think it should not stand in the way of adopting the rule which is sustained by the weight of authority, as well as by the weight of reason, that mileage is taxable in the federal court only for the distance that could be reached by a subpoena, and we so hold."

CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES

SUPPLEMENTAL NOTES

ON THE

CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES

Vol. X, p. 295, Preamble.

IX. EXPRESS AND IMPLIED POWERS

1. In General (p. 308)

"It is elementary that our federal government is one of enumerated, specially defined powers, and powers essential to the execution of those specifically granted, and that our state governments are organized on the exact converse of that theory. The state has all the powers of an absolute, unrestrained sovereign, except so far as the state surrendered certain sovereign powers with which to constitute and create the federal government." American Coal Min. Co. v. Special Coal, etc., Commission, (D. C. Ind. 1920) 268 Fed. 563.

Vol. X, p. 352, art. 1, sec. 4.

II. EXERCISE OF POWER BY CONGRESS

1. In General (p. 354)

The only source of power which Congress prior to the adoption of the 17th Amendment [see 11 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1112] possessed over elections for Senators and Representatives was this section which empowers Congress to regulate the manner of holding such elections. Newberry v. U. S., (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 469, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Primary elections or conventions.—Under this constitutional grant of power to regulate the "manner of holding elections" of Senators and Representatives, Congress can not fix, as it attempted in the Act of June 25, 1910, § 8, as amended by the Act of August 19, 1911 (see 3 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 120) the maximum sum which a candidate may spend, or advise or cause to be contributed and spent by others, to procure his nomination at a primary election or convention. Newberry v. U. S., (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 469, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Vol. X, p. 358, art. 1, sec. 5.

II. EXCLUSIVENESS OF JURISDICTION (p. 358)

Validity of state statute permitting absentee voting.—In In re Opinion of Justices, (N. H. 1921) 113 Atl. 293, the court expressed doubt, in view of the provisions of this section, as to the validity of a state statute permitting absentee voting for members of Congress.

Vol. X, p. 389, art. 1, sec. 8.

I. "To lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises."

1. General power to lay taxes.

2. District of Columbia and Territories.

IV. "Shall be uniform throughout the United States."

5. Geographical uniformity.

I. "TO LAY AND COLLECT TAXES, DUTIES, IMPOSTS AND EXCISES"

1. General Power to Lay Taxes (p. 390)

"The power of Congress to tax, as given in the Constitution, has only one exception and two qualifications. Congress cannot tax exports, and it must impose direct taxes by the rule of apportionment, and indirect taxes by the rule of uniformity." Kelly v. Lewellyn, (W. D. Pa. 1921) 274 Fed. 108.

Not a limitation of power.—"Where the right of taxation exists, if its exercise is within the lawful power of Congress, it is absolutely unlimited in its nature, carrying with it the power to embarrass and even destroy. Courts cannot inquire into the wisdom or justice of such exercise of constitutional power. Courts can put no limitations upon such exercise of power. The right to tax, being a constitutional grant, is limited by that instrument alone, and it is within the authority of Congress to select the objects upon which an excise tax shall be laid." Kelly v. Lewellyn, (W. D. Pa. 1921) 274 Fed. 108, wherein it was further said: "The power conferred by the Constitution to levy taxes uniform throughout the United States must necessarily be exercised at the discretion of Congress."

2. District of Columbia and Territories (p. 391)

Philippine Islands.—As to the power of Congress to extend the provisions of the revenue law to the Philippine Islands it is said: "The power of Congress, in the imposition of taxes and providing for the collection thereof in the possessions of the United States, is not restricted by constitutional provision (section 8, article 1), which may limit its general power of taxation as to uniformity and apportionment when legislating for the mainland or United States proper, for it acts in the premises under the authority of clause 2, section 3, article 4, of the Constitution, which clothes Congress with power to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States." Lawrence v. Wardell, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 405.

IV. "SHALL BE UNIFORM THROUGHOUT THE UNITED STATES."

5. Geographical Uniformity (p. 405)

The only rule of uniformity prescribed by the Federal Constitution with respect to duties, imposts, and excises laid by Congress is the territorial uniformity which this section requires. La Belle Iron Works v. U. S., (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 523, 65 U. S. (L. ed.).

 - (a) In general.

II. WHAT CONSTITUTES INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

1. Definition and Nature

- e. Means and Appliances Necessarily Employed (p. 434)

Condemnation of property outside state by municipality for waterworks.—The condemnation by a municipality of a water works part of the property of which is outside the state does not constitute an interference with interstate commerce. Superior Water, etc., Co. v. Superior, (Wis. 1921) 183 N. W. 254.

III. EXCLUSIVENESS OF POWER

2. When States May Exercise Power

- b. Police Power of the States
 - (2) In the Absence of Legislation by Congress (p. 452)

"Under this provision of the Constitution, Congress has power 'to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes.' It will thus be seen that the states have surrendered their power to regulate commerce to the federal government, but until the latter takes possession of the entire field, the states, as to that unoccupied, may exercise limited authority in the aid of commerce. However, the states' power in this respect will be upheld only so long as the exercise thereof does not affect the conduct of a company engaged in interstate commerce in the performance of its duties in other states." Western Union Tel. Co. v. Sims, (Ind. 1920) 131 N. E. 520.

(5) Indirect or Incidental Interference
With Commerce (p. 455)

Requiring detour of interstate trains for purpose of serving certain city.—A railway company cannot, consistently with the commerce clause, be required to detour its two through interstate day passenger trains via a city of some 4,000 inhabitants, instead of running such trains over a cutoff forming a part of the main line, where such city is otherwise served by fourteen local daily passenger trains, seven each way, and where to make the detour will require the railway company to maintain 16 more miles of track at the high standard essential for the through trains, and to move the latter 10 miles farther, with consequent delay and inconvenience all along the line. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Public Service Commission, (1921) 254 U. S. 535, 41 S. Ct. 192, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, (reversing) (1919) 277 Mo. 264, 210 S. W. 92) wherein the court said:

"The applicable general doctrine has been often considered, and in Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 237 U. S. 220, 226, 59 L. ed. 926, 930, P. U. R. 1915C, 309, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 560, this court said:

"In reviewing the decision we may start with certain principles as established: (1) It is competent for a state to require adequate local facilities, even to the stoppage of interstate trains or the rearrangement of their schedules. (2) Such facilities existing,—that is, the local conditions being adequately met,—the obligation of the railroad is performed, and the stoppage of interstate trains becomes an improper and illegal interference with interstate commerce. (3) And this, whether the interference be directly by the legislature or by its command, through the orders of an administrative body. (4) The fact of local facilities this court may determine, such fact being necessarily involved in the determination of the Federal question whether an order concerning an interstate train does or does not directly regulate interstate commerce by imposing an arbitrary requirement. Glaeson v. Minnesota, 166 U. S. 427, 41 L. ed. 1064, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 627. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 173 U. S. 285, 43 L. ed. 702, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. North Carolina Corp. Commission, 206 U. S. 1, 51 L. ed. 933, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585, 11 Ann. Cas. 398; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 262, 54 L. ed. 472, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 330; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Illinois, 177 U. S. 514, 44 L. ed. 868, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 722; Mississippi R. Commission v. Illinois C. R. Co., 203 U. S. 335, 51 L. ed. 209, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 90; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Wharton, 207 U. S. 328, 52 L. ed. 230, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 121."

"Considering the facts disclosed, we think it plain that the fourteen local passenger trains meet the reasonable requirements of Caruthersville, and that the Commission's order unduly burdens interstate commerce. Compliance with it would require the railway to maintain 16 more miles of track at the high standard essential for the through trains, and to move the latter 10 miles further, with consequent delay and inconveniences all along the line. The burden certainly would not be less serious than those which were condemned in some, if not all, of the causes above referred to."

IX. POWER OF STATES

1. Commerce Wholly within a State

a. In General (p. 518)

Scope of power.—"The limits of the state's police power are difficult of determination, as is also the extent of the federal power conferred under the commerce clause, which, no doubt, accounts for the fact that the courts have not attempted to exactly define their limits. It is, therefore, not surprising that it is difficult to fix the points at which these jurisdictions touch, or the extent to which they may overlap, and that the courts are far from uniform in their holdings on these questions." Amos Bird Co. v. Thompson, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 274 Fed. 702.

b. Regulations of Intrastate Commerce Indirectly Affecting Interstate Commerce (p. 519)

A state statute is not invalid if it only incidentally affects foreign commerce, if such effect was not the object of the Legislature, but resulted from a legitimate attempt on its part to protect the people of the state in their health, or from fraud or deceit, intentional or otherwise. Amos Bird Co. v. Thompson, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 274 Fed. 702, so declaring in the case of a statute relating to foreign eggs.

2. State and Municipal Legislation Affecting Commerce

c. Discrimination against Foreign Products
(1) In General (p. 522)

School text books.—A statute imposing conditions including prices at which it will purchase text books to be used in its public school is not as to nonresident publishers an illegal attempt to regulate interstate commerce as a nonresident has no vested right without the consent of the state to sell and ship its books to school officials of a state in interstate commerce. Macmillan Co. v. Johnson, (E. D. Mich. 1920) 269 Fed. 28.

License tax imposed on local agents selling foreign automobiles.—The imposition of a state license tax upon local agents to whom automobiles are consigned for sale by their nonresident manufacturers, which discriminates in favor of the product of resident manufacturers, is an unconstitutional attempt by the state to regulate interstate commerce, it being in effect a tax upon the importation of the automobiles into the state. Bethlehem Motors Corp. v. Flynt, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 571, 65 U. S. (L. ed.)

d. Inspection Laws

(1) In General (p. 525)

Interference with United States laws.—

The inspection and grading of grain in interstate commerce requires a uniform system throughout the United States, and no state has the authority to interfere with such system established by the United States. Farmers' Grain Co. v. Langer, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 635.

(3) Inspection Fees (p. 530)

In excess of expenses of inspection.—An inspection fee which greatly exceeds the cost of inspection cannot be imposed on interstate commerce as a law authorizing such an exaction amounts to a revenue law. Texas Co. v. Brown, (N. D. Ga. 1920) 286 Fed. 577. The court said: "The inspection is obviously an exercise, primarily, of the state's police power. Petroleum products may constitutionally be inspected while still in interstate commerce, even at the state line, and an accompanying fee, which does not obviously and largely exceed the cost of inspection, is a part of the inspection and equally allowable under the police power. Pure Oil Co. v. Minnesota, 249 U. S. 158, 39 Sup. Ct. 35, 63 L. Ed. 180. A so-called inspection fee, however, which obviously and largely exceeds the cost of inspection, is not so justified and cannot be imposed by a state upon interstate commerce. Standard Oil Co. v. Graves, 249 U. S. 389, 39 Sup. Ct. 320, 63 L. Ed. 662; Foot v. Maryland, 232 U. S. 494, 34 Sup. Ct. 377, 58 L. Ed. 698. Such a fee, though imposed professedly as an inspection fee, and under the police power, is really a tax, and must be justified as an exercise of the taxing power, if at all. . . . Disregarding names, therefore, and going to the substance, the exaction sub judice, though called a fee, and imposed in connection with an inspection, is found, not only to greatly exceed the cost of inspection, but to have been intended to raise revenue. The charge for inspecting a tank car of petitioner's oil is $40, but under the law the inspector can keep but $10 for his services and, when his retentions reach $100 per month, the whole of it is paid into the state treasury. Actual trial of the law has showed, for many years, an income to the state many times the cost of executing the inspection law. The fees were not reduced by the Legislature, but the law was amended and extended, and the revenue increased, and has been specifically appropriated from year to year to the support of certain public institutions. Both in purpose and in effect, the law is a revenue law."

A state law providing for the inspection of gasoline and imposing a tax out of all proportion to the cost of inspection is void as to gasoline in the course of interstate commerce. Shell Co. v. State, (1921) 113 Wash. 632, 194 Pac. 835, following Askers v. Continental Oil Co., 252 U. S. 444, 40 S. Ct. 355, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) 654, on this point, but holding the act to be revocable and valid as to gasoline in the state and not in interstate commerce.

f. Railroad and Express Companies

(19) Payment of, or Refusal to Pay, Claim Within a Certain Time (p. 571)

Such a statute is superseded by the Carmack amendment. Hines v. Cabaniss, (1920) 204 Ala. 527, 86 So. 524.

w. Intoxicating Liquors

(5) Prohibiting Bringing Liquors into the State (p. 626)

Reed amendment nullifies state laws.—By the Reed Amendment (1918 Supp. 394) Congress reassumed the jurisdiction over the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquor relinquished by the Webb Kenyon Act (4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 585) and accordingly a state statute prohibiting the shipment of liquor into the state from another state is invalid as an infringement on the commerce power of Congress. People v. Keeley, (Mich. 1921) 181 N. W. 990.

w1. Foreign Corporations

(1) Right of States to Exclude Foreign Corporations or Impose Conditions (p. 652)

Imposing conditions on transaction of interstate business.—A statute prohibiting foreign corporations from transacting business within a state except on certain conditions which is applicable to interstate as well as intrastate business is void as an infringement on the exclusive power of Congress. Dahl Implement, etc., Co. v. Campbell, (N. D. 1920) 178 N. W. 197, construing statute to apply to intrastate business only.

x1. State Taxation

(2) Separation of Interstate from Intrastate Commerce (p. 657)

Tax on net profits earned within state.—State taxation of a foreign manufacturing and trading corporation, measured by the net profits earned within the state, does not offend against the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution, whether deemed a property tax or a franchise tax, even though these profits may have been derived in part, or indeed mainly, from interstate commerce, where payment of the tax is not made a condition precedent to the right of the corporation to carry on business, including interstate business, but its enforcement is left to the ordinary means of collecting taxes. Underwood Typewriter Co. v. Chamberlain, (1920) 254 U. S. 113, 41 S. Ct. 45, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 94 Conn. 47, 108 Atl. 154.

Gasolene.—A single excise tax imposed upon the sale and use of gasolene according to the number of gallons sold and used, while invalid so far as the gasolene is sold in the tank cars or other original packages in which the gasolene was brought into the state, is enforceable to the extent that it imposes the tax upon gasolene sold at retail in quantities to suit customers, not in the original package. Bowman v. Continental Oil Co., (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 606, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, which further held that a state may impose an excise tax upon the use of gasolene by a dealer at his distributing stations in the operation of his automobile, tank wagons, and trucks employed in the business of distributing his wares for sale, although the gasolene is the product of other states. It was still further held however that the invalidity as respected interstate commerce of an annual license tax imposed upon gasolene distributing stations or places of business, with a prohibition against further conduct of the business without making the required payment, rendered the tax unenforceable also as to the domestic commerce of a dealer who conducted his interstate and domestic business indiscriminately at the same stations and by the same agencies.

The above case was before the United States Supreme Court under the name of Askren v. Continental Oil Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 444, 40 S. Ct. 355, 64 L. S. (L. ed.) 654, in 1920 (see 1920 Supp. 827) in review of an order of the district court granting a temporary injunction.

(3) Discrimination against Foreign Products (p. 658)

Taxation of credits and bills receivable resulting from the sale by a resident of goods brought from without the state is not a violation of this section. Krauss Bros. Lumber Co. v. Board of Assessors, (1921) 148 La. 1057, 88 So. 397.

(4) Transportation, Telegraph and Telephone Companies

(b) Tax on Instrumentalities of Commerce as Property

aa. In General (p. 667)

While a state may not, in the guise of taxation, constitutionally compel a corporation to pay for the privilege of engaging in interstate commerce, yet this immunity does not prevent the state from imposing an ordinary property tax upon property having a situs within its territory, and employed in interstate commerce, including the franchise of the corporation, if not derived from the United States, although that franchise is the business of interstate commerce. St. Louis, etc., Electric R. Co. v. Missouri, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 488, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (1919) 279 Mo. 616, 216 S. W. 763) wherein it is specifically held that a state tax upon the intangible property within the state of a domestic corporation operating a street railway over an interstate bridge could not be said to have been levied exclusively upon its franchise to do an interstate business, and hence to be a direct tax and burden on the right to engage in interstate commerce, where such corporation had acquired by private contract an exclusive right to operate over such bridge, and had also derived from private contract other rights which made its line of track a part of two street railway systems, and gave it a profitable operating arrangement with them.

(e) Privilege Taxes

dd. Telegraph and Telephone Companies

(aa) In General (p. 685)

A municipal license tax of $60 a year upon the privilege of doing an intrastate telegraph business in a city having more than five thousand and less than twenty-five thousand inhabitants cannot be said to be in effect a burden upon the telegraph company's interstate business merely because its intrastate business in that city, which the company asserts it is compelled by statute to continue to carry on at the rates therein prescribed, may be insufficient to pay the tax, where any deficit may be obviated by application for an increase of intrastate rates, and where, in addition, the telegraph company, when it entered the city, the ordinance levying the tax being then in existence, did not declare against its legality or complain of its detrimental operation, but subjected itself to further regulation, licensing, and taxing, and paid the tax (by mistake and inadvertence, it asserts) for several years. Postal Tel-Cable Co. v. Fremont, (1921) 255 U. S. 124, 41 S. Ct. 279, 65 U. S. (L. ed. —, affirming (1919) 103 Neb. 476, 172 N. W. 525), wherein the court said:

"The only contention that the Postal Company makes here is that the tax 'is in effect an imposition upon its interstate business.' It has this effect, is the assertion, because its 'intrastate business at Fremont is insufficient to pay the tax,' which, if compelled, must be paid from the company's interstate business," because it is required to do an intrastate business by § 7408 of the state statutes, and its charges are prescribed by the section. For the contention and its supporting assertions the company relies on Postal Teleg.-Cable Co. v. Richmond, 249 U. S. 252, 63 L. ed. 590, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 265.

"We cannot assign to that case the determining force that counsel attribute to it. The case clearly declares that a license tax may be lawfully imposed on a telegraph company for the right to do business within the borders of the municipalities of a state. The power, of course, has its limitations, and must be exercised with due relation to the company's interstate business. That relation is always to be considered, but it is not disposed of by the simple assertion of a loss. The cause of it or the condition of it is to be considered. In this case the tax is $60 a year. It certainly cannot be said that it is repellent from its amount, and there is no pretense that its imposition 'is a disguised attempt to tax interstate commerce.' The Postal Company, when it entered the city, the ordinance levying the tax then being in existence, did not declare against its legality, or complain of its detrimental operation. Indeed, for the privilege of entering the city it subjected itself to further regulation, licensing, and taxing. And it paid the tax from that time until 1914. The allegation in its answer that it paid the tax 'through the mistake and inadvertence of' its 'clerical force' we are not disposed to accept, without more, as an explanation.

"The supreme court expressed the view that mere proof of loss for two years, which may have been exceptional, determined nothing in the absence of a showing what business was available to the company, or what facilities it had or used, and also held that, the city being an agent of the state, any deficit arising from the tax imposed on the interstate business of the company can be prevented from becoming a burden upon the company's interstate business by an application to the state railway commission under the provisions of § 7409, for an increase of its intrastate rates. And the suggestion is pertinent. The company, as we have seen, cites § 7408 as a compulsion upon it to engage in intrastate business and at designated rates. From the rigor of the requirement § 7409 provides a mode of relief, and until it is denied, the company cannot complain, under the circumstances presented by this record. In other words, if § 7408 is imperative upon the company to continue intrastate business, § 7409 affords a means of obtaining relief from burdensome obedience. The sections are counterparts. If submission to § 7408 results in insufficient revenue and a burden upon interstate commerce, it is made the duty of the railway commission, by § 7409, upon complaint of the Postal Company, to raise the intrastate rate 'fixed' in § 7408. No attempt to secure relief under § 7409 appears to have been made."

(8) Taxation of Corporation Franchises

(a) Domestic Corporations (p. 694)

A state franchise tax upon a domestic railway company does not contravene the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution merely because the value of the franchise taxed is derived partly from the fact that the corporation does interstate business. St. Louis-San Francisco R. Co. v. Middlekamp, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 489, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein it was held that the franchise tax imposed upon domestic corporations by Mo. Laws 1917, pages 237-242, must, in case of a corporation employing only a part of its capital within the state, be deemed to be intended to be measured by the proportion of capital stock and surplus within the state, although the statute says that "such corporation shall pay an annual franchise tax equal to $\frac{3}{4}$ of 1 per cent of its capital stock employed in this state," since these words follow words laying the normal tax measured by stock and surplus, and the sentence quoted continues: "And for the purposes of this act, such corporation shall be deemed to have employed in this state that proportion of its entire outstanding capital stock and surplus that its property and assets in this state bear to all its property and assets, wherever located."

(b) Foreign Corporations (p. 696)

Tax on full value of assets.—Though the assets of a foreign railroad company in a state are used in interstate as well as intrastate commerce, the laying of a franchise tax on the full value of those assets is not a violation of the Commerce Clause of the Constitution. State v. Williams, (1920) 284 Mo. 456, 224 S. W. 822.

(13) Taxation of Goods from Other States or Abroad as Property

(b) Taxation of Goods in Original Packages as Property (p. 700)

An inspection fee which is so in excess of the cost of inspection as to amount to a tax is held to be unenforceable as against goods intended to be sold in the original packages and so sold. But importations which are indefinitely stored within the state, or are resold there after breaking the original packages, are subject, not only to inspection, but to the tax imposed, so soon as the interstate transportation of them is ended. Texas Co. v. Brown, (N. D. Ga. 1920) 266 Fed. 577, wherein the court said in the case of such a fee imposed on oil: "The fact that such oils must inevitably meet the tax before they can be used otherwise than for sale in the original packages is not material. This is true of all general taxation. If there is no discrimination because of their being imported, they pass under the taxing power of the state, as under its protection, so soon as they pass out of interstate commerce by a sale or breaking of the original packages by the importer, or by indefinite storage."

(21) Tax on Drummers, Canvassers and Sample Peddlers

(a) In General (p. 709)

To the same effect as the third paragraph of the original annotation, see Chicago Portrait Co. v. Bellingham, (W. D. Wash. 1920) 270 Fed. 584.

Vol. X, p. 765, art. 1, sec. 8.

I. GENERAL POWER OF CONGRESS OVER COINAGE (p. 765)

Power to punish possession of dies.—Making the conscious and willful possession without lawful authority, of a die in the likeness or similitude of one used or designated for making genuine coin of the United States, a criminal offense, as was done by Penal Laws, § 169 [7 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 729], was a valid exercise by Congress of the power conferred by this clause, investing Congress with power to coin money and regulate the value thereof, such power being in no wise limited by the following clause relating to the punishment for counterfeiting. Baender v. Barnett, (1921) 255 U. S. 224, 41 S. Ct. 271, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said: "The other contention is that the clause in the Constitution empowering Congress 'to provide for the punishment of counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States,' art. I, § 8, cl. 6, is a limitation as well as a grant of power; that the act which the statute denounces is not counterfeiting, and therefore that Congress cannot provide for its punishment. The contention must be rejected. It rests on a misconception not only of that clause, but also of the clause investing Congress with power 'to coin money' and 'regulate the value thereof,' art. I, § 8, cl. 5. Both have been considered by this court, and the purport of the decisions is (1) that Congress not only may coin money in the literal sense, but also may adopt appropriate measures, including the imposition of criminal penalties, to maintain the coin in its purity, and to safeguard the public against spurious, simulated, and debased coin; and (2) that the power of Congress in that regard is in no wise limited by the clause relating to the punishment of counterfeiting. United States v. Marigold, 9 How. 560, 567, 568, 13 L. ed. 257, 260, 261; Legal Tender Cases, 12 Wall. 457, 535, 536, 544, 545, 20 L. ed. 287, 307, 310. It hardly needs statement that, in the exertion of this power, the conscious and willing possession, without lawful authority, of a die in the likeness or similitude of one used or designated for making genuine coin of the United States, may be made a criminal offense. If this be not a necessary, it is at least an appropriate, step in effectively suppressing and preventing the making and use of illegitimate coin."

Vol. X, p. 783, art. 1, sec. 8.

IV. EXCLUSIVENESS OF POWER IN CONGRESS (p. 786)

Patent rights as infringing state anti-trust laws.—Private monopolies are contrary to the genius of a commercial people, and contracts in restraint of trade are not looked upon with favor. The Constitution of the United States, however, expressly provides for the creation of monopolies in the matter of patent rights, trade-marks and copyright. Congress has legislated under this provision, and no state can nullify its acts. Coca-Cola Co. v. State, (Tex. 1920) 225 S. W. 791, holding that conditions attached to a license to make and sell a patented article did not infringe a state anti-trust law.

Vol. X, p. 807, art. 1, sec. 8.

II. Exclusive power of Congress to declare war or conclude peace.

III. Effect of declaration of war.

1. In general.

XII. Power to establish military tribunals to try civilians.

II. EXCLUSIVE POWER OF CONGRESS TO DECLARE WAR OR CONCLUDE PEACE (p. 808)

As to termination of the "World War" it was said: "The Congress and the President are the constitutional judges of states of war and peace and their decisions should be abided in patience by people and courts." U. S. v. Oglesby Grocery Co., (N. D. Ga. 1920) 264 Fed. 691.

III. EFFECT OF DECLARATION OF WAR

1. In General (p. 808)

The mere existence of a state of war cannot suspend or change the operation upon the power of Congress of the guaranties and limitations of the 5th and 6th Amendments, as to delegating legislative power to courts and juries, penalizing indefinite acts, and depriving citizens of the right to be informed of the nature and cause of accusations against them. U. S. v. L. Cohen Grocery Co., (1921) 255 U. S. 81, 41 S. Ct. 298, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, 14 A. L. R. 1045, affirming (E. D. Mo. 1920) 264 Fed. 218. See to the same effect, Tedrow v. A. T. Lewis, etc., (1921) 255 U. S. 98, 41 S. Ct. 303, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —; Kinnane v. Detroit Creamery Co., (1921) 255 U. S. 102, 41 S. Ct. 304, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —; Weed v. Lockwood, (1921) 255 U. S. 104, 41 S. Ct. 305, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —; G. S. Willard Co. v. Palmer, (1921) 255 U. S. 106, 41 S. Ct. 305, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —; Oglesby Grocery Co. v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 108, 41 S. Ct. 306, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —. See also Kennington v. Palmer, (1921) 255 U. S. 100, 41 S. Ct. 303, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —; Weeds v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 109, 41 S. Ct. 306, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

The soldiers and sailors' civil relief act (1918 Supp. p. 810) is a legitimate exercise of the power conferred by this section. Pierrard v. Hoch, (1920) 97 Ore. 71, 184 Pac. 494, 191 Pac. 328.

X. STATE JURISDICTION

1. Judicial and Legislative (p. 849)

Jurisdiction of state court over action by employee in federal nitrate plant.—Congress having taken jurisdiction of Muscle Shoals, and having adopted a Workmen's Compensation Act [6 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed) 282] which has been held to apply to employees of companies operating nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals, a state court has no jurisdiction of an action for personal injuries by such an employee. Webb v. J. G. White Engineering Corp., (1920) 204 Ala. 429, 85 So. 729.

Vol. X, p. 852, art. 1, sec. 8.

VI. "To Establish Post Offices and Post Roads" (p. 861)

Requiring government chauffeur to obtain state license.—A state may not require a postoffice employee to cease driving a government motor truck in the transportation of mail over a post road until he shall obtain a license by submitting to examination before a state official and paying a fee. Johnson v. Maryland, (1920) 254 U. S. 51, 41 S. Ct. 16, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said: "The cases upon the regulation of interstate commerce cannot be relied upon as furnishing an answer. They deal with the conduct of private persons in matters in which the states as well as the general government have an interest, and which would be wholly under the control of the states but for the supervening destination and the ultimate purpose of the acts. Here the question is whether the state can interrupt the acts of the general government itself. With regard to taxation, no matter how reasonable, or how universal and undiscriminating, the state's inability to interfere has been regarded as established since M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L. ed. 579. The decision in that case was not put upon any consideration of degree, but upon the entire absence of power on the part of the states to touch, in that way, at least, the instrumentalities of the United States (4 Wheat. 429, 430), and that is the law to-day. Farmers & M. Sav. Bank v. Minnesota, 232 U. S. 516, 525, 526, 58 L. ed. 706, 711, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 354. A little later the scope of the proposition as then understood was indicated in Osborn v. Bank of the United States, 9 Wheat. 738, 967, 6 L. ed. 204, 234: "Can a contractor for supplying a military post with provisions be restrained from making purchases within any state, or from transporting the provisions to the place at which the troops were stationed? Or could he be fined or taxed for doing so? We have not yet heard these questions answered in the affirmative." In more recent days the principle was applied when the governor of a soldiers' home was convicted for disregard of a state law concerning the use of oleomargarin, while furnishing it to the inmates of the home as part of their rations. It was said that the federal officer was not "subject to the jurisdiction of the state in regard to those very matters of administration which are thus approved by the federal authority." Ohio v. Thomas, 173 U. S. 276, 283, 43 L. ed. 699, 701, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 453. It seems to us that the foregoing decisions establish the law governing this case.

"Of course, an employee of the United States does not secure a general immunity from state law while acting in the course of his employment. That was decided long ago by Mr. Justice Washington in United States v. Hart, Pet. C. C. 390, Fed. Cas. No. 15,316; 5 Ops. Atty. Gen. 554. It very well may be that, when the United States has not spoken, the subjection to local law would extend to general rules that might affect incidentally the mode of carrying out the employment,—as, for instance, a statute or ordinance regulating the mode of turning at the corners of streets. Com. v. Classon, 229 Mass. 329, L.R.A.1918C, 939, 118 N. E. 653. This might stand on much the same footing as liability under the common law of a state to a person injured by the driver's negligence. But even the most unquestionable and most universally applicable of state laws, such as those concerning murder, will not be allowed to control the conduct of a marshal of the United States, acting under and in pursuance of the laws of the United States. Re Neagle, 135 U. S. 1, 34 L. ed. 55, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 658.

"It seems to us that the immunity of the instruments of the United States from state control in the performance of their duties extends to a requirement that they desist from performance until they satisfy a state officer, upon examination, that they are competent for a necessary part of them, and pay a fee for permission to go on. Such a requirement does not merely touch the government servants remotely by a general rule of conduct; it lays hold of them in their specific attempt to obey orders, and requires qualifications in addition to those that the government has pronounced sufficient. It is the duty of the department to employ persons competent for their work, and that duty it must be presumed has been performed. Keim v. United States, 177 U. S. 290, 293, 44 L. ed. 774, 775, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 574."

Vol. X, p. 892, art. 1, sec. 9.

Transportation of intoxicating liquor into state.—The want of merit in the contention that the provision of the Reed Amendment of March 3, 1917, § 5 (1918 Supp. p. 394), prohibiting the transportation in interstate commerce of intoxicating liquor into any state whose laws forbid the manufacture or sale therein of such liquor for beverage purposes was repugnant to this section, prohibiting any regulation of commerce which gives a preference to the ports of one state over those of another, was held to be so plainly established by the decisions of the Federal Supreme Court and the authorities which had followed those decisions as to require the affirmance on motion of a conviction for a violation of such statute, brought up directly from a federal district court for review, on the theory that the law was unconstitutional for that reason. Williams v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 336, 41 S. Ct. 364, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

II. POLICE POWERS

1. In General (p. 950)

Arbitrary exercise of power.—Property rights cannot be divested by an arbitrary exercise of the police power. Hirsh v. Block, (C. A. D. C. 1920) 267 Fed. 614, 11A, L. R. 1238, 631.

V. CONTRACTS PROTECTED

14. Charters of Private Corporations as Contracts

a. In General (p. 996)

Religious society.—The incorporation and the granting of a charter by a state to a charitable and religious society constitute a contract between the society and the state. Hence, the legislature may not subsequently enact a statute suspending such charter and all corporate powers of the corporation without impairing the obligation of such contract in violation of this section. In re Opinion of Justices, (Mass. 1921) 131 N. E. 29. See also In re Opinion of Justices, (Mass. 1921) 131 N. E. 31.

h. Power to Amend Charters

(2) Reserved Power to Amend or Repeal Charters

(a) In General (p. 1005)

International bridge.—Contract obligations of a bridge company, specially incorporated by N. Y. Laws 1857, chap. 753, to build a railroad bridge over the Niagara river, and later consolidated with a similar Canadian corporation, pursuant to New York and Canada statutes, subject to all the duties of each of the consolidated companies, cannot be said to have been impaired unconstitutionally by N. Y. Laws 1915, chap. 666, amending the original charter, in the exercise of the state's reserved power to amend, by requiring the construction of a roadway for vehicles and a pathway for pedestrians on that part of the bridge within the jurisdiction of the state, where the Canadian charter, unlike the New York one, made the arrangements for foot passengers and carriages a duty. International Bridge Co. v. New York, (1920) 254 U. S. 126, 41 S. Ct. 56, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (1918) 223 N. Y. 137, 119 N. E. 351), wherein it was further held that Congress, by authorizing, as it did in an Act of June 30, 1870, the building of a bridge over the Niagara river, under legislative authority from the state of New York, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, and by recognizing as a lawful structure, as it did in the Act of June 23, 1874, the bridge as constructed for railroad purposes only, did not assume such control of the bridge as to prevent the state, in the exercise of its reserved right to amend the bridge company's charter, from requiring the addition of a roadway for vehicles and a pathway for pedestrians on that part of the bridge within the jurisdiction of the state. Also it was held that the conveyance to the United States for a public purpose not connected with the administration of the government of a part of the land under a bridge constructed over the Niagara river, under legislative authority from the state of New York, did not affect the authority of the state to require, in the exercise of its reserved right to amend the bridge company's charter, the addition of a roadway for vehicles and a pathway for pedestrians on that part of the bridge within the jurisdiction of the state.

i. Exemption From or Limitation of Taxation (p. 1017)

A decision of the highest court of New York that the exemption from taxation above a specified sum, granted to the Troy Union Railroad Company by N. Y. Laws 1853, chap. 462, could be repealed without impairing contract obligations, cannot be said to be wrong, in view of the general attitude of the courts toward claims of exemption, adverted to by the state court, and of the fact that a subsequent agreement shows that the parties concerned did not suppose that they had an irrevocable grant, and especially the fact that the state Constitution in force in 1853 provided in art. 8, § 1, that all general laws and special acts passed pursuant to that section might be altered or repealed. New York v. Mealy, (1920) 254 U. S. 47, 41 S. Ct. 17, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) 47, affirming (1918) 224 N. Y. 187, 120 N. E. 155.

17. Of Railroad Companies

d. Regulation of Railroad Rates

(2) When Subject to Legislative or Municipal Control (p. 1047)

Power of state to change rates.—Where neither the constitution of a state nor any of its statutes has given to a city of the state the authority to make an inviolable contract with any railroad with reference to the rates of fare which it shall charge passengers, such a contract by a city with a railroad company is not binding on the state. Hence, an order of the public utilities commission, as agent of the state, permitting the company to increase its fares does not violate this section. Hoyne v. Chicago, etc., 111 U. S. 559, 4 S. Ct. 480, 29 L. ed. 507, 18 U. S. 587.

j. Paving Part of Street Occupied by Track (p. 1052)

Requiring railroad to maintain highway at crossing does not violate this section. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Taylor, (1920) 79 Okla. 142, 192 Pac. 349 (rule applied to railroad holding right of way by federal grant).

18. Of Waterworks Companies

a. Grant of Franchise (p. 1054)

To same effect as original annotation, see Greensburg Water Co. v. Lewis, (Ind. 1920) 128 N. E. 103, wherein it was held that where the company surrendered its franchise under a statute giving an indeterminate permit to increase its rates, a subsequent amendment of such statute whereby it was sought to impose certain burdensome conditions on the company was void as contravening this section.

f. Condemnation of Plant (new)

Municipal condemnation under the Public Utilities Law of a water plant operating under a state franchise, does not impair the obligation of a contract. Superior Water, etc., Co. v. Superior, (Wis. 1921) 183 N. W. 254.

19. Of Lighting Companies

c. Regulation of Lighting Rates (p. 1062)

An act granting a public utility commission power to make rates which public utility corporations may charge is not unconstitutional. And the fact that the effect of an order permitting a public utility corporation to increase its rate would be to nullify a contract theretofore entered into by the parties does not make the order obnoxious to the constitutional provision prohibiting states to enact laws impairing the obligation of contracts. Public Utilities Commission v. Wichita R., etc., Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 37.

Regulating rates fixed by a contract is not a violation of this clause, though the public utilities law under which the regulation was made was passed subsequent to the contract. U. S. Smelting, etc., Co. v. Utah Power, etc., Co., (Utah 1921) 197 Pac. 902.

21. Of Insurance Companies (p. 1064)

Incontestable and suicide clauses in policies of life insurance which exclude suicide as a defense when committed, sane or insane, after a period respectively of one and two years from the issuance of the policies, will not be deemed as against public policy unless the state concerned adopts a different view. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, (1920) 254 U. S. 96, 41 S. Ct. 47, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Prescribing who shall be agents of insurer. — A state statute providing that any person who acts for an insurance company in the making of a contract of insurance or the adjustment of a loss shall be the agent of the insurer does not violate this section. Globe, etc., F. Ins. Co. v. Walker, (1920) 150 Ga. 163, 103 S. E. 407.

VIII. WHAT CONSTITUTES IMPAIRMENT

1. In General (p. 1113)

Provision in Workmen's Compensation Law prohibiting employers making direct payment to injured employees from indemnity.

lying themselves by insurance.—A ruling of a state industrial commission, justified or demanded by a change in the state law, by which the commission, revoking its previous discretionary action, declares that no employers shall be permitted to pay or furnish directly to injured employees or to the dependents of killed employees the compensation and benefits provided for in the State Workmen's Compensation Law if such employers, by contract or otherwise, shall provide for the insurance of the payment by them of such compensation and benefits, or shall indemnify themselves against loss sustained by the direct payment thereof, does not unconstitutionally impair the obligations of insurance contracts entered into upon the faith of the previous ruling of the commission. Thornton v. Duffy, (1920) 254 U. S. 361, 41 S. Ct. 137, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 99 Ohio St. 120, 124 N. E. 54.

Changing franchise rates.—An act conferring power on a state corporation commission to change the franchise rates for water, power, and electricity existing between municipalities and public utilities, is not repugnant to the provisions of the state and federal Constitutions, prohibiting the passage of any law impairing the obligation of contracts. Camden v. Arkansas Light, etc., Co., (1920) 145 Ark. 205, 224 S. W. 444.

5. Exemption Laws (p. 1118)

Exemption from liability for debts of avails of life insurance.—A state statute exempting from liability for debts of the assured the avails of insurance upon his life, when payable to his estate, violates the contract clause of the Federal Constitution in so far as it undertakes to exempt the proceeds of policies taken out prior to the passage of that act from antecedent debts. Minden Bank v. Clement, (1921) 256 U. S. 126, 41 S. Ct. 408, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1920) 146 La. 385, 83 So. 664.

6. Stay Laws (p. 1120)

Legislation suspending right of landlord to recover possession of leased premises.—See annotation under Vol. XI, p. 616, amend. 14, sec. 1, see infra, p. 850.

13. Power to Change Remedy

a. In General (p. 1129)

A state statute providing for arbitration of controversies arising between the parties to a contract, when such a stipulation is made therein, and prescribing the procedure for the arbitration proceedings, strengthens rather than impairs the obligations of the contract and does not violate this section. Berkovitz v. Arbib, (1921) 230 N. Y. 261, 130 N. E. 288.

14. Impairment Vel Non in Sundry Instances (p. 1137)

Invalidating contract against liability for negligence.—A statute invalidating provisions in leases exempting a railroad company from liability for fire damage to buildings erected on the right of way does not impair the obligation of a contract though it is applicable to leases existing at the time of its enactment, the statute being a police regulation. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Chicago Great Western R. Co., (1a. 1920) 180 N. W. 649.

Forbidding discharge of employee for certain cause.—A statute which forbids the discharge of an employee because such employee has testified before the industrial welfare commission regarding the terms and conditions of his employment does not infringe this section. Poye v. State, (Tex. 1921) 230 S. W. 161, wherein the court said:

"It must be borne in mind that every contract entered into between our citizens includes, as a necessary part thereof, the written law of the land; and that such contracts are viewed and construed as embodying not only the expressed will of the parties, but also the provisions of such laws. It must be concluded, therefore, that when appellant employed Beattie Lee he knew that she might be called to testify before the said welfare commission, and that in such event the law had written into their contract that he had no right to discharge her for giving such testimony. This, then, being a part of the contract of employment, no ground appears for holding that a law punishing appellant for his violation of this part of said contract by discharging her impairs or changes the obligation of such contract."

Increasing the liability of stockholders for corporate debts does not impair the obligation of a contract. Blytheville Bank v. State, (1921) 148 Ark. 504, 230 S. W. 550.

IX. JURISDICTION OF FEDERAL COURTS

1. Existence of Contract and Question of Impairment (p. 1140)

Lean towards construction by state court in case of doubt.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see New York v. Mealy, (1920) 254 U. S. 47, 41 S. Ct. 17, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 224 N. Y. 187, 120 N. E. 155.

Vol. X, p. 1146, art. 1, sec. 10.

II. When goods lose character as imports or domestic character.

III. Power of state to tax.

1. In general.

II. WHEN GOODS LOSE CHARACTER AS IMPORTS OR DOMESTIC CHARACTER (p. 1148)

Sale within the state destroys the status of goods as imports and a tax may be laid on the bills receivable and credits resulting from the sale. Krauss Bros. Lumber Co. v. Board of Assessors, (1921) 148 La. 1057, 88 S. 397.

III. POWER OF STATE TO TAX

1. In General (p. 1149)

Taxation of credits and bills receivable resulting from the sale by a resident of goods brought from without the state is not a violation of this section. Krauss Bros. Lumber Co. v. Board of Assessors, (1921) 148 La. 1057, 88 So. 397.

Vol. X, p. 1158, art. 1, sec. 10.

IV. "AGREEMENT" OR "COMPACT"

2. As to a Boundary Line (p. 1167)

Relocating and marking old boundary line.—The consent of Congress under this section is not necessary where no new boundary line between states is established but the old one merely relocated and marked. Blaine v. Murphy, (D. C. Mass 1920) 265 Fed. 324.

Vol. XI, p. 1, art. 2, sec. 1.

Power of President to prevent landing of cable.—The President has no power to prevent the landing by a domestic corporation of a cable from a foreign country. U. S. v. Western Union Tel. Co., (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 272 Fed. 311.

Vol. XI, p. 5, art. 2, sec. 1.

Validity of state statute permitting absentee voting.—As the manner of making the appointment of presidential electors is left by this article and R. S. sec. 131 [8 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 258] to the legislature of each state, there can be no constitutional objection to absentee voting in their election. In re Opinion of Justices, (N. H. 1921) 113 Atl. 293.

Vol. XI, p. 72, art. 3, sec. 1.

II. JUDICIAL POWER TO BE VESTED IN COURTS ESTABLISHED BY CONGRESS (p. 74)

"The Supreme Court is without jurisdiction to review the judgments or findings of an inferior federal court in a case in which the Supreme Court would have no power to enforce its judgments, because the third article of the Constitution, section 1 provides that 'the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish,' and the review by the Supreme Court of findings or judgments in cases in which it could not enforce its judgments is not the exercise of this judicial power granted to it by the Constitution. The Supreme Court, however, is the only court whose jurisdiction is thus fixed, and limited by the Constitution. The other courts of the United States . . . are ordained and established and their jurisdiction is fixed by the acts of Congress, and, as was said in the leading case (117 U. S. 699) by Chief Justice Taney, Congress may undoubtedly establish tribunals with special powers subject to the supervision of the head of an executive department." Harrison v. Moneravie, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 776.

Vol. XI, p. 95, art. 3, sec. 2.

II. EXERCISE OF JURISDICTION AS DEPENDENT ON STATUTES

2. *Inferior Courts*a. In General (p. 99)

As to the inferior federal courts this 'provision of the Constitution is not self-executing or automatically operative. It was left to Congress to distribute the judicial power among them and to prescribe the extent and the means of its exercise.' In re Higdon, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 269 Fed. 150.

Vol. XI, p. 168, art. 3, sec. 2.

VI. Waiver of jury trial.

VII. "Where the said crimes shall have been committed."

2. Boundary of state a question of fact.

VI. WAIVER OF JURY TRIAL (p. 172)

Consent to trial by eleven jurors where a juror falls sick during the trial is not invalidated by this provision. State v. Browman, (Ia. 1921) 182 N. W. 823.

VII. "WHERE THE SAID CRIMES SHALL HAVE BEEN COMMITTED"

2. Boundary of State a Question of Fact (p. 173)

Bringing stolen goods into state.—A state statute making it a criminal offense for persons to bring into the state property feloniously stolen without its limits, does not violate this section by providing for the punishment of a crime committed in a foreign state. State v. Israel, (N. J. 1921) 114 Atl. 314.

Vol. XI, p. 175, art. 3, sec. 3.

I. POWER OF CONGRESS LIMITED (p. 176)

Effect on power of states.—The constitutional definition of treason does not deprive the states of the power to enact statutes intended to prevent the teaching of crime, sedition, violence or intimidation as a means of destroying the present social order. State v. Hennessy, (Wash. 1921) 195 Pac. 211 (sustaining statute against criminal syndicalism.)

9. Effect of Foreign Judgment

e. Conclusive on the Merits (p. 195)

Foreign probate of will cannot be attacked for irregularities. Grignon v. Shope, (Ore. 1921) 197 Pac. 317.

k. No Priority, Privilege or Lien (p. 199)

What status accorded to foreign judgment.

—This provision does "not make the judgments of the states domestic judgment to all intents and purposes, but only gives a general validity, faith and credit to them as evidence.

"No execution can be issued upon such judgments without a new suit in the tribunals of other states, and they enjoy, not the right of priority or privilege or lien which they have in the state where they are pronounced, but that only which the lex fori gives to them by its own laws, in their character of foreign judgments." State v. Dunn (1921) 148 La. 460, 87 So. 236, following Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 107, 10 S. Ct. 269, 33 U. S. (L. ed.) 538.

7. [10] Defenses that May Be Set up in Suit on Foreign Judgment.

a. Want of Jurisdiction.

(1) In General (p. 200.)

To same effect as original annotation see Gordon v. Hillman, (Cal. App. 1920) 191 Pac. 62.

(3) Facts Necessary to Give Jurisdiction (p. 202)

Right of inquiry as to jurisdiction of court rendering judgment.—"The fundamental and obvious limitation upon the power of the courts of one state to render a judgment binding upon those of another state is the one that the former shall have jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter upon which they have pronounced an adjudication, and, as a necessary corollary to this, that the courts of the state in which the first judgment is pressed as a controlling adjudication shall have the right to investigate and ascertain whether the court rendering the judgment did have such jurisdiction." Hanna v. Stedman, (1921) 230 N. Y. 326, 130 N. E. 566.

(4) Record Not Conclusive (p. 202)

"It is thoroughly settled that the constitutional provision that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the judicial proceedings of other states does not preclude inquiry into the jurisdiction of the court in which the judgment is rendered over the subject-matter, or the parties affected by it, or into the facts necessary to give such jurisdiction." Mulcahy v. Richman, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 265 Fed. 733.

(5) Must Be Evidence of Want of Jurisdiction (p. 203)

A foreign judgment appointing a guardian for an insane person will be given full faith and credit, in the absence of a showing of want of jurisdiction. In re Baxter, (Ia. 1921) 182 N. W. 217.

(6) Service of Process

(a) Personal Service or Voluntary Appearance (p. 203)

No service or appearance.—This section has no application to a judgment of an action rendered against one of several joint obligors, who was a nonresident of the state and had no notice or knowledge of the pendency of the action, and did not appear therein. National Surety Co. v. Love, (Neb. 1920) 178 N. W. 917.

A divorce decree rendered on constructive service is open to attack in another state. Davis v. Davis, (Colo. 1921) 197 Pac. 241.

(c) Service of Process While Temporarily in the State (p. 204)

Agent of foreign corporation.—Service on the agent of a foreign corporation while temporarily in the state gives no jurisdiction and full faith and credit need not be given to a judgment against the corporation rendered on that service. Haas-Phillips Produce Co. v. Lee, (Ala. 1920) 87 So. 200.

9. [12] Judgments in Particular Cases Conclusively Vel Non

e. Relating to Marriage and Divorce

(1) In General (p. 212)

Conclusiveness of foreign divorce decree.—A divorce decree obtained by a husband in Nevada while an action by his wife for a separation is pending in New York, establishes the status of the parties as to the future and, in so far as the issues involved in the two cases are the same, is a bar to the assertion by the wife in the latter action that her living apart from her husband in New York state prior to the Nevada decree was through no fault of hers, and was not due to any acts or conduct on her part that justified a separation at the suit of her husband in New York. Pearson v. Pearson, (1920) 230 N. Y. 141, 129 N. E. 349.

(3) Divorce Obtained upon Substituted Service (p. 213)

To same effect as original annotation, see Parmelee v. Hutchins, (Mass. 1921) 131 N. E. 443, wherein it was held that where a wife obtained a decree of separation in Massachusetts, a court of Illinois, in which state the husband subsequently acquired a domicile, could not properly have granted him a divorce in view of this section had the Massachusetts decree been pleaded in bar.

(5) Custody of the Children (p. 214)

Decree conclusive.—"If a judgment or decree touching the custody of children is rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction in one state, such court being possessed of jurisdiction of both the subject-matter and the parties, such judgment or decree is res adjudicata as to all matters occurring up to the date of the rendition thereof, and is entitled to full faith and credit in any other state of the Union, unless it be subject to impeachment for fraud in the procuring thereof." In re Leete, (1920) 205 Mo. App. 225, 223 S. W. 962.

f. Confession of judgment (p. 215)

Full faith is accorded to a judgment by confession entered on warrant of attorney in another state in accordance with the statutes thereof. Ashby v. Manley, (Ia. 1921) 181 N. W. 869.

I. NOT APPLICABLE TO ACTS OF INDIVIDUALS (p. 222)

Authority of United States to punish infractions by individuals.—The United States is without power to forbid and punish infractions by individuals of the right of citizens to reside peacefully in the several states, and to have free ingress into and egress from such states. Authority to deal with such wrongs is exclusively within the power reserved by the Federal Constitution to the states. U. S. v. Wheeler, (1920) 254 U. S. 291, 41 S. Ct. 133, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming [D. C. Ariz. 1918] 254 Fed. 611) wherein the court said:

"Undoubtedly the right of citizens of the states to reside peacefully in, and to have free ingress into and egress from, the several states, had, prior to the Confederation, a twofold aspect: (1) As possessed in their own states, and (2) as enjoyed in virtue of the comity of other states. But although the Constitution fused these distinct rights into one by providing that one state should not deny to the citizens of other states rights given to its own citizens, no basis is afforded for contending that a wrongful prevention by an individual of the enjoyment by a citizen of one state in another of rights possessed in that state by its own citizens was a violation of a right afforded by the Constitution. This is the necessary result of article 4, § 2, which reserves to the several states authority over the subject, limited by the restriction against state discriminatory action, hence excluding Federal authority except where invoked to enforce the limitation, which is not here the case; a conclusion expressly sustained by the ruling in United States v. Harris, 106 U. S. 629, 635, 27 L. ed. 290, 292, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 601, to the effect that the 2d section of article 4, like the 14th Amendment, is directed alone against state action. And this was but a summary of what had been previously pointed out in the Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394, where, in dealing with the privileges and immunities embraced by article 4, § 2, of the Constitution, it was observed (p. 77):

"It would be the vainest show of learning to attempt to prove by citations of authority that, up to the adoption of the recent amendments, no claim or pretense was set up that those rights depended on the Federal government for their existence or protection, beyond the very few express limitations which the Federal Constitution imposed upon the states,—such, for instance, as the prohibition against ex post facto laws, bills of attainder, and laws impairing the obligation of contracts. But with the exception of these and a few other restrictions, the entire domain of the privileges and immunities of citizens of the states, as above defined, lay within the constitutional and legislative power of the states, and without that of the Federal government.'

"Nor is the situation changed by assuming that, as a state has the power, by depriving its own citizens of the right to reside peacefully therein and to free ingress thereto and egress therefrom, it may, without violating the prohibitions of article 4 against discrimination, apply a like rule to citizens of other states, and hence engender, outside of article 4, a Federal right. This must be so, since the proposition assumes that a state could, without violating the fundamental limitations of the Constitution other than those of article 4, § 2, enact legislation incompatible with its existence as a free government, and destructive of the fundamental rights of its citizens; and furthermore, because the premise upon which the proposition rests is state action, and the existence of Federal power to determine the repugnancy of such action to the Constitution,—matters which, not being here involved, are not disputed.

"This leads us furthermore to point out that the case of Crandall v. Nevada, 6 Wall. 35, 18 L. ed. 745, so much relied upon in the argument, is inapplicable, not only because it involved the validity of state action, but because the state statute considered in that case was held to directly burden the performance by the United States of its governmental functions, and also to limit rights of the citizens growing out of such functions; and hence it also follows that the observation made in Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78, 97, 53 L. ed. 97, 105, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 14, to the effect that it had been held in the Crandall Case that the privilege of passing from state to state is an attribute of national citizenship, may here be put out of view as inapposite.

"With the object of confining our decision to the case before us, we say that nothing we have stated must be considered as implying a want of power in the United States to restrain acts which, although involving ingress or egress into or from a state, have for their direct and necessary effect an interference with the performance of duties which it is incumbent upon the United States to discharge, as illustrated in the Crandall Case, supra."

II. NATURE OF PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES

6. Of Citizens of State Whose Laws Are Complained Of

a. In General (p. 224)

In all the states, from the beginning down to the adoption of the Articles of Confederation, the citizens thereof possessed the fundamental right, inherent in citizens of all free governments, peacefully to dwell within the limits of their respective states, to move at will from place to place therein, and to have free ingress thereto and egress therefrom, with a consequent authority in the states to forbid and punish violations of this fundamental right. The authority which the several states possessed prior to the adoption of the Articles of Confederation to deal with infractions of the right of free residence, ingress and egress, was reserved to the states by Article 4 of such Confederation, with a limitation inhibiting the power from being used to discriminate. The limitation as to discrimination, imposed upon the several states by Article 4 of the Articles of Confederation when dealing with infractions of the right of free residence, ingress and egress, was preserved and enforced by this article and section of the United States Constitution thus necessarily assuming the continued possession by the states of the reserved power to deal with this subject. U. S. v. Wheeler, (1920) 254 U. S. 281, 41 S. Ct. 133, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (D. C. Ariz. 1918) 254 Fed. 811.

The right to practice law in the state courts is not such a privilege or immunity as is contemplated by this section. Keeley v. Evans, (D. C. Ore. 1921) 271 Fed. 520.

Act affecting right of nonresident wife to dower.—The legislature having the power to give or withhold dower, it follows that it has the power to declare the manner in which the dower right may be barred, or the grounds upon which it may be forfeited, and, if so, it has the right to provide that it may be barred by the wife's nonresidence in the state, and such an act is not violative of this section. Ferry v. Spokane, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 117, so holding in the case of a statute providing that "A woman being an alien shall not on that account be barred of her dower; and any woman residing out of the state shall be entitled to dower of the lands of her deceased husband lying in this state of which her husband died seized." To the same effect see Ferry v. Corbett, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 120.

III. WHO ARE CITIZENS

1. Corporations as Citizens (p. 226)

To the same effect as original annotation, see Arizona Commercial Min. Co. v. Iron Cap Copper Co., (1920) 236 Mass. 185, 128 N. E. 4.

IV. LEGISLATION AFFECTING PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES.

7. Regulating Use of Common Property of the State

c. Prohibiting Nonresidents Grazing Cattle (p. 242)

Requiring a license to graze live stock from every person "who does not have his principal live stock headquarters" in the state or own in fee simple land in the state is in violation of this section. Hostettler v. Harris, (Nev. 1921) 197 Pac. 697.

8. Right to Sue

a. In General (p. 243)

Enjoining suit in another state.—An injunction against a resident restraining him from suing in another state for the purpose of evading the exemption law of the state where he and the debtor both reside does not infringe this provision. Kansas City Rys. Co. v. McCordle, (Mo. 1921) 232 S. W. 464.

Vol. XI, p. 256, art. 4, sec. 2.

VIII. Absolute right to demand and correlative duty to surrender.

XIV. Writs of habeas corpus.

VIII. ABSOLUTE RIGHT TO DEMAND AND CORRELATIVE DUTY TO SURRENDER (p. 263)

To same effect as original annotation, see Graves's Case, (1920) 236 Mass. 493, 129 N. E. 867.

Fugitive under conviction in asylum state.

—Where a demand is properly made by the Governor of one state upon the Governor of another, for the surrender of a fugitive, the duty so to do is not absolute and unqualified, but depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. If the law of the state in which asylum has been sought has been violated by the fugitive, and he has been convicted there, and is undergoing sentence, the demands of the law thus violated may be first satisfied before obedience to the constitutional provision to surrender him arises. State v. Saunders, (Mo. 1921) 232 S. W. 973, holding however that the asylum state may waive its prior right and surrender the fugitive. See this case for a discussion as to the effect of the waiver as a pardon of the offense in the asylum state.

XIV. WRITS OF HABEAS CORPUS (p. 267)

Fairness of trial in demanding state.—The courts will not on habeas corpus review the issuance of a warrant for the rendition of a fugitive on the contention that by reason of local and racial prejudice in the demanding state the fugitive will not receive a fair trial. Ex p. Ray, (Mich. 1921) 183 N. W. 774.

I. Sovereign power over acquired territory.
II. Control of public lands.

1. Power of Congress.

- a. Power of Congress exclusive.
- c. Power to prevent unlawful occupation.

I. SOVEREIGN POWER OVER ACQUIRED TERRITORY (p. 285)

Philippine Islands.—As to the power of Congress to extend the provisions of the revenue law to the Philippine Islands it is said: "The power of Congress, in the imposition of taxes and providing for the collection thereof in the possessions of the United States, is not restricted by constitutional provision (section 8, article 1), which may limit its general power of taxation as to uniformity and apportionment when legislating for the mainland or United States proper, for it acts in the premises under the authority of clause 2, section 3, article 4, of the Constitution, which clothes Congress with power to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States." Lawrence v. Wardell, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 405.

II. CONTROL OF PUBLIC LANDS

1. Power of Congress

a. Power of Congress Exclusive (p. 286)

Abandonment by government.—It is broadly stated that the government cannot abandon its property without an act of Congress to that effect. However while this is the law in so far as it applies to land the title to which has been acquired or originally vested in the government, it does not apply to property in which the government by virtue of its dominant right appropriates a mere easement for purposes more or less temporary in their nature. U. S. v. Pennsylvania, etc., Dock Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 272 Fed. 839. In this case it was contended that evidence that the United States failed and neglected to keep a pier in repair was not evidence that would sustain a finding that the government had, in any legal sense, abandoned its property.

The court, however, declared that "in this particular case the appropriation of this submerged strip of land upon which to construct a government pier was not a taking of private property for public use for permanent purposes, but rather the mere lawful exercise of a governmental power for the common good."

e. Power to Prevent Unlawful Occupation (p. 290)

Power to prohibit obstruction of passage.—Congress may exercise the power necessary for the protection of public lands including as an incident the prosecution and punishment of persons who obstruct passage or transit over such lands. McKelvey v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 410.

Vol. XI, p. 309, art. 5.

Range of power of Congress in proposing amendments.—"An examination of Article 5 discloses that it is intended to invest Congress with a wide range of power in proposing amendments. Passing a provision long since expired, it subjects this power to only two restrictions: one that the proposal shall have the approval of two thirds of both Houses, and the other excluding any amendment which will deprive any state, without its consent, of its equal suffrage in the Senate. A further mode of proposal—as yet never invoked—is provided, which is, that on the application of two thirds of the states Congress shall call a convention for the purpose. When proposed in either mode amendments, to be effective, must be ratified by the legislatures, or by conventions, in three fourths of the states, ‘as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress.’ Thus the people of the United States, by whom the Constitution was ordained and established, have made it a condition to amending that instrument that the amendment be submitted to representative assemblies in the several states and be ratified in three fourths of them. The plain meaning of this is (a) that all amendments must have the sanction of the people of the United States, the original fountain of power, acting through representative assemblies, and (b) that ratification by these assemblies in three fourths of the states shall be taken as a decisive expression of the people’s will and be binding on all.” Dillon v. Gloss, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 510, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (N. D. Cal. 1920) 262 Fed. 563.

Ratification of amendments by legislature as permitting referendum to people.—“A recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States (Rhode Island v. Palmer, 253 U. S. 350, 40 S. Ct. 486, 588, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) 946, [see 1920 Supp. p. 847] has foreclosed all discussion of this question in holding that the referendum provisions of state Constitutions and statutes cannot be applied consistently with the Constitution of the United States in the ratification or rejection of amendments to that Constitution, and that the Eighteenth Amendment, prohibiting the manufacture, etc., of intoxicating liquors for beverages, is within the power to amend reserved by article 5 of the United States Constitution; in other words, that the ‘Legislatures of three-fourths of the . . . states,’ as the words are employed in that article (5), has reference to legislative bodies as they were known at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, and not by any other body or the people generally. The action of the respondents, therefore, in attempting to refer the legislative ratification of the Eighteenth Amendment to the people, was without authority, and the trial court was in error in so ruling.” Carson v. Sullivan, (1920) 284 Mo. 353, 223 S. W. 571.

Referendum provisions of state constitutions and statutes cannot be applied in the ratification or rejection of amendments to the Federal Constitution without violating the requirement of this article. State v. Morris, (1920) 79 Okla. 89, 191 Pac. 364.

Fixing definite period for ratification by states of proposed amendment.—Congress, in proposing an amendment to the Federal Constitution, may, keeping within reasonable limits, fix a definite period for ratification by the states, and could, therefore, validly, declare, in the resolution proposing the 18th Amendment, that it should be inoperative unless ratified within seven years. Dillon v. Gloss, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 510, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (N. D. Cal. 1920) 262 Fed. 563, wherein the court said:

“Of the power of Congress, keeping within reasonable limits, to fix a definite period for the ratification we entertain no doubt. As a rule the Constitution speaks in general terms, leaving Congress to deal with subsidiary matters of detail as the public interests and changing conditions may require; and Article 5 is no exception to the rule. Whether a definite period for ratification shall be fixed, so that all may know what it is and speculation on what is a reasonable time may be avoided, is, in our opinion, a matter of detail which Congress may determine as an incident of its power to designate the mode of ratification. It is not questioned that seven years, the period fixed in this instance, was reasonable, if power existed to fix a definite time; nor could it well be questioned considering the periods within which prior amendments were ratified.”

Date of consummation of ratification of amendment.—The date of the consummation of the ratification of an amendment to the Federal Constitution, which is, by its own terms, to go into effect one year after being ratified, and not the date of the proclamation of the Secretary of State, is controlling upon the question when such amendment becomes operative. Dillon v. Gloss, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 510, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (N. D. Cal. 1920) 262 Fed. 563.

Judicial notice of consummation of ratification of amendment.—The federal Supreme Court will take judicial notice of the consummation of the ratification of an amendment to the Federal Constitution. Dillon v. Gloss, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 510, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (N. D. Cal. 1920) 262 Fed. 563.

I. SUPREMACY OF FEDERAL CONSTITUTION

1. In General (p. 312)

Modified by Eighteenth Amendment.—"The rule of statutory construction that a general provision must give way to, or be considered as controlled by the adoption of, a special one, would lead to the conclusion that the amendment, being special in its nature, would be controlling over article 6 in instances to which the provisions of the amendment are applicable." State v. District Ct., (1920) 58 Mont. 684, 194 Pac. 308.

II. SUPREMACY OF ACTS OF CONGRESS AND TREATIES

2. Supremacy of Acts of Congress over State Laws

a. In General (p. 314)

The Soldiers and Sailors' Civil Relief Act (1918 Supp. p. 810) is by virtue of this provision paramount to a state moratorium act containing inconsistent provisions. Pierrard v. Hoch, (1920) 97 Ore. 71, 184 Pac. 494, 191 Pac. 328.

The Soldiers and Sailors' Civil Relief Act became, by virtue of this article, the law of the various states. Hence, a state statute of limitation requiring the commencement of actions on contracts within six years must be regarded as amended by such act by excluding from the period of limitation the time spent in military service. Hence, a court of such state may not acquire jurisdiction over a defendant in military service under a statute authorizing service by publication where the defendant is a resident, and the limitation period would have expired within sixty days next preceding the application for publication if the time had not been extended by the attempt to commence the action. Erickson v. Macy, (1921) 231 N. Y. 86, 131 N. E. 744.

b. Repugnancy Must Be Direct and Positive (p. 316)

Treaty right to hold realty; State prohibition of alien ownership.—A treaty giving the right to hold realty in states "in which foreigners shall be entitled to hold or inherit real estate" does not invalidate a state constitutional provision against the holding of real estate by aliens. State v. Staeheli, (1920) 112 Wash. 344, 192 Pac. 991.

4. Treaties Binding on the States

Prohibiting Japanese leasing agricultural lands.—The right of Japanese to own or lease agricultural lands is declared to be withheld by the following provision of a treaty with Japan:

"The citizens or subjects of each of the high contracting parties shall have liberty to enter, travel and reside in the territories of the other, to carry on trade, wholesale and retail, to own or lease and occupy houses, manufactories, warehouses and shops, to employ agents of their choice, to lease land for residential and commercial purposes, and generally to do anything incident to or necessary for trade upon the same terms as native citizens or subjects, submitting themselves to the laws and regulations there established." Terrace v. Thompson, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 274 Fed. 841, wherein it was said:

"Aliens may only come to the United States upon such conditions and terms as our government sees fit to impose. By the treaty, the right to lease real estate in the United States for agricultural purposes is withheld. Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 483, 25 L. Ed. 628. It might have been, by Congressional enactment, prohibited (U. S. v. De Repentigny, 72 U. S. [5 Wall.] 211, 18 L. Ed. 627); but, by the treaty, it was neither granted nor prohibited. It was merely withheld, which left the state free to prohibit it. The United States might have excluded all of the subjects of Japan; but rather chose to admit them, withholding the right to lease agricultural lands, thereby recognizing the right of the state to prohibit it, or regulate it. That purpose is not to be defeated by allowing the citizen landowner the broad construction of his rights under the Fourteenth Amendment for which contention is made. The citizen landowner may sell to whom he pleases; but he may not sell to one who is rightfully forbidden the right to buy."

IV. STATE TAXATION

2. Of Federal Agencies

a. In General (p. 328)

States cannot tax or otherwise impose burdens on the exclusive powers of the federal government or its instrumentalities to carry such powers into execution. United States v. McIntosh County, (E. D. Okla. 1921) 271 Fed. 747.

Vol. XI, p. 345, amend. 1.

Exclusion of seditious newspapers from mail.—The constitutional freedom of the press may protect criticism and agitation for modification or repeal of laws, but it does not extend to the protection of him who counsels and encourages the violation of the law as it exists. U. S. v. Burleson, (1921) 255 U. S. 407, 41 S. Ct. 352, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 49 App. Cas. (D. C.) 26, 258 Fed. 282, holding to be valid the provisions of the Espionage Act (Fed. St. Ann. 1918 Supp. p. 132) for the exclusion of certain publications.

State statute prohibiting language discouraging enlistments, etc.—Freedom of speech or press is not denied by a state statute making it unlawful to advocate or teach that men should not enlist in the military or naval forces of the United States or of the state, or that citizens of the state should not aid or assist the United States in prosecuting or carrying on war with the public enemies of the United States. Gilbert v. State, (1920) 254 U. S. 325, 41 S. Ct. 125, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 141 Minn. 263, 169 N. W. 790.

To same effect as original annotation, see State v. District Ct., (1921) 59 Mont. 600, 198 Pac. 362; Smith v. Tate, (1921) 143 Tenn. 268, 227 S. W. 1026; State v. Hennessy, (Wash. 1921) 195 Pac. 211; Kentucky Finance Corp. v. Paramount Auto Exch. Corp., (1920) 171 Wis. 586, 178 N. W. 9; State v. Peterson, (Wyo. 1920) 194 Pac. 342, 13 A. L. R. 1284.

Limitation on official acts only.—The security afforded by this amendment against unreasonable search and seizure applies solely to governmental action. It is not invaded by the unlawful acts of individuals in which the government has no part. Burdeau v. McDowell, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 574, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, 13 A. L. R. 1159, wherein the court said:

"The 4th Amendment gives protection against unlawful searches and seizures, and, as shown in the previous cases, its protection applies to governmental action. Its origin and history clearly show that it was intended as a restraint upon the activities of sovereign authority, and was not intended to be a limitation upon other than governmental agencies; as against such authority it was the purpose of the 4th Amendment to secure the citizen in the right of unmolesated occupation of his dwelling and the possession of his property, subject to the right of seizure by process duly issued.

"In the present case the record clearly shows that no official of the Federal government had anything to do with the wrongful seizure of the petitioner's property, or any knowledge thereof until several months after the property had been taken from him and was in the possession of the Cities Service Company. It is manifest that there was no invasion of the security afforded by the 4th Amendment against unreasonable search and seizure, as whatever wrong was done was the act of individuals in taking the property of another. A portion of the property so taken and held was turned over to the prosecuting officers of the Federal government. We assume that petitioner has an unquestionable right of redress against those who illegally and wrongfully took his private property under the circumstances herein disclosed, but with such remedies we are not now concerned."

III. APPLICABLE TO CRIMINAL CASES ONLY (p. 353)

Prosecution by information as affected by unlawful search.—See annotation under title "Intoxicating Liquors," 1919 Supplement, p. 215, sec. 29, supra, p. 556.

VI. "UNREASONABLE SEARCHES AND SEIZURES"

1. Reasonableness of Search a Judicial Question (p. 354)

Search for purpose of obtaining evidence.—Search warrants may not be used as a means of gaining access to a man's house or office and papers, solely for the purpose of making search to secure evidence to be used against him in a criminal or penal proceeding, but they may be resorted to only when a primary right to such search and seizure may be found in the interest which the public or the complainant may have in the property to be seized, or in the right to the possession of it, or when a valid exercise of the police power renders possession of the property by the accused unlawful, and provides that it may be taken. Gould v. U. S., (1921) 255

U. S. 298, 41 S. Ct. 261, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court further held that private papers of no pecuniary value, in which the sole interest of the federal government is their value as evidence against the owner in a contemplated criminal prosecution, may not, consistently with the constitutional guaranty against unreasonable searches and seizures, be taken from the owner's house or office under a search warrant.

Secret taking.—The secret taking, without force, from the house or office of one suspected of crime, and in his absence, of a paper belonging to him, having evidential value only, by a representative of any branch or subdivision of the federal government, violates the constitutional guaranty against unreasonable searches and seizures, whether entrance to such house or office be obtained by stealth or through social acquaintance, or in the guise of a business call, and whether the owner be present or not at the time of entry. Gould v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 298, 41 S. Ct. 261, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said: "The prohibition of the 4th Amendment is against all unreasonable searches and seizures; and if for a government officer to obtain entrance to a man's house or office by force or by an illegal threat or show of force, amounting to coercion, and then to search for and seize his private papers, would be an unreasonable, and therefore a prohibited, search and seizure, as it certainly would be, it is impossible to successfully contend that a like search and seizure would be a reasonable one if only admission were obtained by stealth instead of by force or coercion. The security and privacy of the home or office and of the papers of the owner would be as much invaded, and the search and seizure would be as much against his will in the one case as in the other; and it must therefore be regarded as equally in violation of his constitutional rights.

"Without discussing them, we cannot doubt that such decisions as there are in conflict with this conclusion are unsound, and that, whether entrance to the home or office of a person suspected of crime be obtained by a representative of any branch or subdivision of the government of the United States by stealth, or through social acquaintance, or in the guise of a business call, and whether the owner be present or not when he enters, any search and seizure subsequently and secretly made in his absence falls within the scope of the prohibition of the 4th Amendment."

Unlawful search as justified by results.—An unlawful search cannot be justified by what is found. It was against such prying, on the chance of discovery, that the constitutional amendment was intended to protect the people. U. S. v. Slusser, (S. D. Ohio 1921) 270 Fed. 818; U. S. v. Bush, (W. D. N. Y. 1920) 269 Fed. 455.

Right to search person as incident of arrest.—Officers who have properly arrested a person have a right to search his person as an incident of the arrest. U. S. v. Kraus, (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 270 Fed. 578.

Where a person has been arrested for intoxication, whisky obtained on a search of his person is not obtained by "unreasonable search." U. S. v. Murphy, (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 264 Fed. 842, wherein the court said: "The right of an arresting officer to search a defendant under ordinary circumstances, when the defendant is under arrest, charged with a violation of law, cannot be questioned. Wharton, Crim. Proc. (10th Ed.) 97, 98; Corpus Juris, 'Arrest,' par. 74; Weeks v. U. S., 232 U. S. 383, 392, 34 Sup. Ct. 341, 58 L. Ed. 652, L. R. A. 1915B, 834 Ann. Cas. 1915C, 1177. This applies with peculiar force to the case of a man arrested for intoxication, who might have in his possession dangerous weapons with which he might do incalculable harm, either to himself or to others. The court is of the opinion that evidence of the character here involved, obtained in this manner, which is a part of the proof of the commission of a crime, and the possession of which is necessarily involved in the prohibited act itself, has not been obtained by 'unreasonable' search."

Where a person was arrested charged with a violation of the Trading with the Enemy Act, it was held that it was proper to seize a letter found on his person although there was no search warrant and that such seizure was not violative of his constitutional rights. Welsh v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 267 Fed. 819.

Garage as within protection of section.—The right of the people to be secure in their houses and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures is not limited to dwelling houses but extends to a garage used personally for hire. U. S. v. Slusser, (S. D. Ohio 1921) 270 Fed. 818.

2. Necessity for Warrant (p. 354)

Discretion of officer as substitute for warrant.—The discretion of the officer, however good and well-intentioned; is not "a substitute in law for a search warrant issued by a proper magistrate. It is to the latter that the law has committed the discretion to say when a warrant shall issue; and it can only issue on probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized. Constant reiteration of these fundamental principles is warranted by the fact that they seem to be so frequently overlooked." U. S. v. Slusser, (S. D. 1921) 270 Fed. 818.

Taken by permission.—It is said that the protection afforded by this amendment rests on the use of force and does not cover a case where a person was cheated into giving up books. U. S. v. Maresca, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 266 Fed. 713.

But a search permitted by a person after declaration by the prohibition officer, with a display of his badge, that they were there to search the premises, was not by such consent as will amount to a waiver of constitutional rights, but, on the contrary, is to be attributed to a peaceful submission to officers of the law. U. S. v. Slusser, (S. D. Ohio 1921) 270 Fed. 818.

5. Compulsory Production of Books and Papers (p. 355)

Seizure of partnership books and papers. — Where books and papers belonging to a partnership were seized on a subpoena duces tecum served on one of the partners only, it was held that the production of such books and papers as evidence before the grand jury in a criminal prosecution against the partners was illegal as being in contravention of their rights as fixed by the Fourth and Fifth Amendments. It was further held that the petitioners, having been illegally deprived of their books and papers, were entitled to have them returned to their possession, and not only that, but to have every memorandum taken therefrom, every photographic or other copy made thereof, returned to them, so that none of the documents should be available to the United States in the prosecution of the defendants under the indictment, to the extent of furnishing evidence of their guilt. U. S. v. Brasley, (W. D. Pa. 1920) 268 Fed. 59.

Seizure by state officer. — The object and purpose of the Fourth Amendment is limited to federal agencies, and was designed to prevent autocratic and despotic action under color of national authority. The object and purpose thus declared does not require the extension of the rule to the acts of state officials or private persons. U. S. v. O'Dowd, (N. D. Ohio 1921) 273 Fed. 600, holding that evidence is not inadmissible in a federal court because seized by state officers without a search warrant.

While the court may not compel parties charged with the violation of a penal law of the United States to produce books and documents before the grand jury to be used in regard to alleged violations of the statutes of the United States by them, it has been held that the rule does not apply where the evidence was obtained by a search and seizure by a state officer before the indictment in the federal court had been returned and there is nothing to show that the sheriff acted under the authority of a federal official. Youngblood v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 795.

Extension of rule. — The principle relating to the seizure of private books and papers applies generally to search and seizure of one's house, property, and effects, and is not limited to the seizure of a man's private papers to be used as evidence against him. U. S. v. Bush, (W. D. N. Y. 1920) 269 Fed. 455.

6. Compelling an Officer of a Corporation to Produce Corporate Books and Papers (p. 357)

A subpoena to produce "all and sundry the invoices received by Watson, Parker &

Reese Company, a corporation, covering shipments of shoes of all grades and kinds to said corporation since July 1, 1919, including all books of account and invoices covering stocks of shoes now on hand," is not so general and sweeping as to be tantamount to an unreasonable search and seizure of the company's records. U. S. v. Watson, (N. D. Fla. 1920) 266 Fed. 736.

11. Use of Papers or Property Illegally Obtained as Evidence (p. 359)

Rule stated. — Papers or property illegally obtained from a person are inadmissible as evidence against him if proper objection is raised to their admission. U. S. v. Bush, (W. D. N. Y. 1920) 269 Fed. 455; U. S. v. Slusser, (S. D. Ohio 1921) 270 Fed. 818; In re Kosopud, (N. D. Ohio 1920) 272 Fed. 330; U. S. v. O'Dowd, (N. D. Ohio 1921) 273 Fed. 600; State v. Hennessy, (Wash. 1921) 195 Pac. 211.

To permit the government to use evidence gained upon an illegal search would be to compel defendant to give evidence against himself within the meaning of the Fifth Amendment. U. S. v. Kelih, (S. D. Ill. 1921) 272 Fed. 484, wherein the court said: "It is further contended, because the Volstead Act provides that there shall be no property rights in illicit liquors, or apparatus for their manufacture, that therefore the property in question does not come within the Fourth and Fifth Amendments. The reason for a return of property in all cases of this character is not based upon property rights so much as the personal security afforded by the Fifth Amendment, which relieves a man from being compelled to be a witness against himself in a criminal case. To permit the government in this case to retain possession of the property described in the motion, and use it in the trial of the case before the jury, would be in legal effect to require this defendant to be a witness against himself in a criminal case, which is clearly prohibited by the Constitution."

But in the case of an automobile in which whisky was being transported the court in U. S. v. Fenton, (D. C. Mont. 1920) 268 Fed. 221, said: "The auto and whisky, by virtue of the National Prohibition Act (1919 Supp. 197), were forfeited, and thereby transferred to the United States, the moment defendants embarked upon the unlawful transportation. The United States was then vested with the right of property and possession. Even as any other owner of property in like circumstances at common law, the United States without process could recover possession by force. And however, if at all, irregularly the officers proceeded, the defendants have no right to return of the property, nor to object to its use in evidence, whatever other, if any, right or remedy they may have."

Where the affidavit and search warrant are insufficient, acquiescence in the search by the wife of the accused cannot be regarded as binding on him, so that evidence obtained on such search may be used against him, in the absence of proof that he authorized her to consent. U. S. v. Rykowiak, (S. D. Ohio 1920) 267 Fed. 866.

Use of papers unlawfully seized by individual.—Constitutional guaranties against unreasonable searches and seizures and self-incrimination will not be violated if the Federal prosecuting authorities to whom incriminating papers stolen by private persons have been delivered, retain them with a view to their use in a subsequent investigation by a grand jury where such papers will be part of the evidence against the accused, and may be used against him upon trial should an indictment be returned, the government having had no part in the wrongful taking. Burdeau v. McDowell, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 574, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, 13 A. L. R. 1159, wherein the court said:

"The exact question to be decided here is: May the government retain incriminating papers, coming to it in the manner described, with a view to their use in a subsequent investigation by a grand jury, where such papers will be part of the evidence against the accused, and may be used against him upon trial should an indictment be returned?

"We know of no constitutional principle which requires the government to surrender the papers under such circumstances. Had it learned that such incriminatory papers, tending to show a violation of Federal law, were in the hands of a person other than the accused, it having had no part in wrongfully obtaining them, we know of no reason why a subpoena might not issue for the production of the papers as evidence. Such production would require no unreasonable search or seizure, nor would it amount to compelling the accused to testify against himself.

"The papers having come into the possession of the government without a violation of petitioner's rights by governmental authority, we see no reason why the fact that individuals, unconnected with the government, may have wrongfully taken them, should prevent them from being held for use in prosecuting an offense where the documents are of an incriminatory character."

Use of property legally obtained as evidence of another crime.—Property seized under a valid search warrant may be used in the prosecution of a suspected person for a crime other than that which may have been described in the affidavit for the warrant as having been committed by him. Gould v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 298, 41 S. Ct. 261, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said: "It has never been required that a criminal prosecution should be pending against a person in order to justify search for and seizure of his property under a proper warrant, if a case of crime having been committed and of probable cause is made out, sufficient to satisfy the law and the officer having authority to issue it, and we see no reason why property seized under a valid search warrant, when thus lawfully obtained by the government, may not be used in the prosecution of a suspected person for a crime other than that which may have been described in the affidavit as having been committed by him. The question assumes that the property seized was obtained on a search warrant sufficient in form to satisfy the law; and if the papers to which the question refers had been of a character to be thus obtained, lawfully, it would have been competent to use them to prove any crime against the accused as to which they constituted relevant evidence."

Property seized on warrant based on insufficient affidavits.—Where search warrants were not based on sufficient affidavits the property seized may be used as evidence. Haywood v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 795; St. John v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 808.

Plenary power of federal courts.—The federal courts are not clothed with plenary power to investigate on motion all unconstitutional searches and seizures without regard to whether or not they bear any relation to proceedings pending in such courts. Accordingly it has been held that it was proper to refuse an application for an order to government officials to return books and papers alleged to have been unlawfully taken, so as to prevent their use as evidence in deportation proceedings, when none of the officers named were concerned in or affected by any suit, action or proceeding in the federal court. Weinstein v. Atty.-Gen., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 271 Fed. 673.

Timeliness of objection to use of illegally obtained property.—If, in the progress of a criminal trial, it becomes probable that there has been an unconstitutional seizure of the papers of the accused, of evidential value only, it is the duty of the trial court to entertain an objection to the admission of such papers in evidence, or a motion for their exclusion, and to consider and decide the question as then presented, even where a motion to return the papers may have been denied before trial. Gould v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 298, 41 S. Ct. 261, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein it was held that an objection to the introduction in evidence in a criminal case of a paper surreptitiously taken from the office of the accused by a representative of the federal government is in time, though not made before trial, where such objection was made promptly upon the first notice the accused had that the government was in possession of the paper. The court said: "It is plain that the trial court acted upon the rule, widely adopted, that courts in criminal trials will not pause to determine how the possession of evidence tendered has been obtained. While this is a rule of great practical importance, yet, after all, it is only a rule of procedure, and therefore it is not to be applied as a hard-and-fast formula to every case, regardless of its special circumstances. We think, rather, that it is a rule to be used to secure the ends of justice under the circumstances presented by each case; and where, in the progress of a trial, it becomes probable that there has been an unconstitutional seizure of papers, it is the duty of the trial court to entertain an objection to their admission, or a motion for their exclusion, and to consider and decide the question as then presented, even where a motion to return the papers may have been denied before trial. A rule of practice must not be allowed for any technical reason to prevail over a constitutional right. In the case we are considering, the certificate shows that a motion to return the papers, seized under the search warrants, was made before the trial and was denied; and that, on the trial of the case before another judge, this ruling was treated as conclusive, although, as we have seen, in the progress of the trial it must have become apparent that the papers had been unconstitutionally seized. The constitutional objection having been renewed, under the circumstances, the court should have inquired as to the origin of the possession of the papers when they were offered in evidence against the defendants."

The rule that courts will not stop the progress of the trial of a criminal case to frame a collateral issue to inquire whether evidence offered, otherwise competent, was lawfully or unlawfully obtained, has no application where it becomes apparent during the trial that there has been an unconstitutional seizure of property of the accused, and the court should exclude such property and any testimony relating thereto, given by the government agents who made the unlawful seizure, on motion of the accused, made after both property and testimony were introduced in evidence against him. Amos v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 313, 41 S. Ct. 266, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —. In that case the facts were stated as follows: "Coleman and Rector were called as witnesses by the government and testified: that, as deputy collectors of internal revenue, they went to defendant's home, and not finding him there, but finding a woman who said she was his wife, told her that they were revenue officers, and had come to search the premises 'for violations of the revenue law;' that thereupon the woman opened the store and the witnesses entered, and in a barrel of peas found a bottle containing not quite a half-pint of illicitly distilled whisky, which they called 'blockade whisky;' and that they then went into the home of defendant, and, on searching, found two bottles under the quilt on the bed, one of which contained a full quart and the other a little over a quart of illicitly distilled whisky. The government introduced in evidence a pint bottle containing whisky, which the witness Coleman stated 'was not one of the bottles found by him, but that the whisky contained in the same was poured out of one of the two bottles that had been found in defendant's house on the bed under the quilt, as stated.' On cross-examination both witnesses testified that they did not have any warrant for the arrest of the defendant, nor any search warrant to search his house, and that the search was made during the daytime, in the absence of the defendant, who did not appear on the scene until after the search had been made." The court said: "The answer of the government to the claim that the trial court erred in the two rulings we have described is, that the petition for the return of defendant's property was properly denied because it came too late when presented after the jury was impaneled, and the trial, to that extent, commenced, and that the denial of the motion to exclude the property and the testimony of the government agents relating thereto, after the manner of the search of defendant's home had been described, was justified by the rule that, in the progress of the trial of criminal cases, courts will not stop to frame a collateral issue to inquire whether evidence offered, otherwise competent, was lawfully or unlawfully obtained."

"Plainly, the questions thus presented for decision are ruled by the conclusions this day announced in No. 250, Gouled v. United States.

"There is nothing in the record to indicate that the allegations of the petition for the return of the property, sworn to by the defendant, were in any respect questioned or denied, and the report of the examination and appropriate cross-examination of the government's witnesses, called to make out its case, shows clearly the unconstitutional character of the seizure by which the property which it introduced was obtained. The facts essential to the disposition of the motion were not and could not be denied; they were literally thrust upon the attention of the court by the government itself. The petition should have been granted; but, it having been denied, the motion should have been sustained."

Return of papers and property.—When documents or papers are unlawfully seized, they must be returned, and with them all copies taken while the officers retained their illegal possession. U. S. v. Kraus, (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 270 Fed. 578, wherein it appeared that the papers were seized under a warrant based on information obtained at the time of making an unlawful search.

Although the government may not be able to avail itself of information acquired by a search and seizure under the National Prohibition Act, because the search and seizure was unwarranted, yet some of the property seized being illicit and other parts of it having been used in the illicit trade or manufacture, and therefore being contraband, will not be returned to the owner. U. S. v. Rykowski, (S. D. Ohio 1920) 267 Fed. 866.

Where in the case of a petition for the return of papers claimed to have been illegally seized the issue of consent to the seizures is raised the trial of such issue should precede any order of the court for a return. U. S. v. Kraus, (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 270 Fed. 578.

Where the members of a voluntary organization are on trial and not the organization, unlawful seizure of the outlaw property of the organization does not infringe any rights of the individual defendants and there is no error in impounding the property and overruling a motion for its return. Haywood v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 795; St. John v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 808.

Impounding property seized on warrant afterwards vacated.—When books and papers have been seized on a search warrant which was afterwards vacated by the commissioner who issued it a motion to impound them will be denied. U. S. v. Porazzo, (E. D. N. Y. 1921) 272 Fed. 276.

VIII. "UPON PROBABLE CAUSE, SUPPORTED BY OATH OR AFFIRMATION"

1. Necessity of Showing Probable Cause (p. 360)

"A search warrant may issue only upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation. The question of probable cause must be submitted to the committing magistrate, so that he may exercise his judgment as to the sufficiency of the ground for believing the accused person guilty." U. S. v. Borkowski, (S. D. Ohio 1920) 268 Fed. 408.

"No search warrant shall be issued unless the judge has first been furnished with facts under oath—not suspicions, beliefs, or surmises, but facts—which, when the law is properly applied to them, tend to establish the necessary legal conclusions, or facts which, when the law is properly applied to them, tend to establish probable cause for belief that the legal conclusion is right. The inviolability of the accused's home is to be determined by the facts, not by rumor, suspicion, or guesswork. If the facts afford the legal basis for the search warrant, the accused must take the consequences. But equally there must be consequences for the accuser to face. If the sworn accusation is based on fiction, the accuser must take the chance of punishment for perjury. Hence the necessity of a sworn statement of facts, because one cannot be convicted of perjury having a belief, though the belief be utterly unfounded in fact and law. The finding of the legal conclusion or of probable cause from the exhibited facts is a judicial function, and it cannot be delegated by the judge to the accuser." U. S. v. Kelih, (S. D. Ill. 1921) 272 Fed. 484.

2. Affidavit Must be Made upon Knowledge of Affiant (p. 361)

To same effect as original annotation, see U. S. v. Michalski, (W. D. Pa. 1919) 265 Fed. 839.

Affidavit by officer upon information.—In construing section 3462 of the Revised Statutes [4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) p. 323] it has been said: "The requirements of section 3462 relating to the showing to be made as a basis for issuing the warrant do not meet the mandatory provisions of the Constitution. In the language of Attorney General Knox, the section 'does not state all of that which must be stated in the application' for the search warrant. 24 Op. Attys. Gen. 685, 688. In other words, the constitutional provision is paramount. The showing under oath essential upon which to predicate the issuance of the warrant should state pertinent facts from which the magistrate may determine the existence of probable cause, or there should be a hearing by him with that purpose in view. Probable cause is a legal conclusion, which is for the magistrate to deduce from the facts stated, and the mere assertion under oath that the affiant believed and does believe that a fraud upon the revenue has been or is being committed is entirely insufficient upon which to predicate the finding of probable cause." U. S. v. Pitotto, (D. C. Ore. 1920) 267 Fed. 603.

"Due process of law."—By the simplest and plainest rules of construction, the words "due process of law" must have the same meaning in the Fifth and the Fourteenth Amendments. U. S. v. Armstrong, (D. C. Ind. 1920) 265 Fed. 683.

It seems reasonably clear that the "due process of law" provision of the Fifth Amendment is broad enough in its scope and purpose to include the "equal protection of the laws," which no state may deny to any person under the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment. U. S. v. Yount, (W. D. Pa. 1920) 267 Fed. 861.

IV. RESTRAINT ON EXECUTIVE, LEGISLATIVE AND JUDICIAL DEPARTMENTS (p. 412)

Effect of state of war.—The mere existence of a state of war does not suspend or change the operation upon the power of Congress of the guaranties and limitations of U. S. Const., 5th and 6th Amendments, as to delegating legislative power to courts and juries, penalizing indefinite acts, and depriving citizens of the right to be informed of the nature and cause of accusations against them. U. S. v. L. Cohen Grocery Co., (1921) 255 U. S. 81, 41 S. Ct. 298, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, 14 A. L. R. 1045, affirming (E. D. Mo. 1920) 264 Fed. 218. See to the same effect Tedrow v. A. T. Lewis, etc., Co., (1921) 255 U. S. 98, 41 S. Ct. 303, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —; Kinnane v. Detroit Creamery Co., (1921) 255 U. S. 102, 41 S. Ct. 304, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —; Weed v. Lockwood, (1921) 255 U. S. 104, 41 S. Ct. 305, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —; G. S. Willard Co. v. Palmer, (1921) 255 U. S. 106, 41 S. Ct. 305, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —; Oglesby Grocery Co. v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 108, 41 S. Ct. 306, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —. See also Kennington v. Palmer, (1921) 255 U. S. 100, 41 S. Ct. 303, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —; Weeds v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 109, 41 S. Ct. 306, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

V. APPLICATION TO DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA (p. 412)

To same effect as original annotation; see Willson v. McDonnell, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 265 Fed. 432; Groot v. Reilly, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 266 Fed. 1008.

Rent legislation.—The emergency growing out of the World War clothed the letting of buildings in the District of Columbia with a public interest so great as to justify, despite this amendment, such temporary regulation as was made by the Act of October 22, 1919, tit. 2, § 109 (to remain in force two years unless sooner repealed), giving a tenant the privilege of holding over after the expiration of the lease, subject to regulation by the commission appointed by that act, so long as he pays the rent and performs the conditions as fixed by the lease, or as modified by the commission. Block v. Hirsh, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 458, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) — (reversing (1920) 50 App. Cas. (D. C.) 56, 267 Fed. 614, 11 A. L. R. 1238; (1920) 50 App. Cas. (D. C.) 73, 267 Fed. 631), wherein it was further held that temporary emergency legislation like the above act was not invalid merely because landlords and tenants were deprived by it of a trial by jury on the right to possession of the land.

VI. OPERATION IN ACQUIRED TERRITORY (p. 412)

Applicable to Virgin Islands.—The right not to be "deprived of life, liberty or property, without due process of law" was engrafted by the Organic Act of Congress on the Danish laws of the Virgin Islands. Soto v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 628.

IX. WHAT CONSTITUTES DUE PROCESS OF LAW

1. In General (p. 414)

The words "due process of law."—The "due process of law," by which Congress is limited in the Fifth Amendment, and the states by the Fourteenth Amendment, is equivalent to the "law of the land," and is intended to protect the citizen against arbitrary action, and secure to all persons equal and impartial justice under the law. U. S. v. Yount, (W. D. Pa. 1920) 267 Fed. 861.

Arbitrary classification in criminal statute.—Whenever the government undertakes to deprive a person of his liberty, as a punishment for crime, it must do it by virtue of a valid, constitutional statute defining the crime, and such a statute is required by the "due process" clause of this amendment. The statute upon which a person is deprived of his liberty is a part of the process of law which is used against him, and it must be "due process of law." Hence, an arbitrary classification in such a statute by Congress is repugnant to the "due process" clause of this amendment. U. S. v. Armstrong, (D. C. Ind. 1920) 265 Fed. 683.

11. Under Military Law (p. 418)

Trial of military prisoners.—To subject military prisoners, confined in a military prison under previous court-martial sentences which involved their discharge as soldiers, to trial by court-martial for offenses committed during such imprisonment, does not involve a violation of the guaranty of this amendment. Kahn v. Anderson, (1921) 255 U. S. 1, 41 S. Ct. 224, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

X. DEPRIVATION OF LIFE AND LIBERTY

10. Right of Appeal (p. 428)

A review by an appellate court of a judgment of conviction is not a requirement in affording a defendant the due process of law that is secured to him by the constitution. Haywood v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 795. The court further said: "In England writs of error in criminal cases are of comparatively recent origin. In our country, though writs of error within certain limitations have been allowed from the beginning, the grant has been of grace or expediency, not of constitutional demand. In the court of first instance the defendant is given his day in court, his trial by jury, his opportunity to confront opposing witnesses, and all other elements of due process of law. And if Congress might have withheld entirely the privilege of review, it is self-evident that Congress may at any time reduce the previously granted privilege. From recent legislation (40 Stat. pt. 1, p. 1181) we gather the congressional intent to end the practice of holding that an error requires the reversal of the judgment unless the opponent can affirmatively demonstrate from other parts of the record that the error was harmless, and now to demand that the complaining party show to the reviewing tribunal from the record as a whole that he has been denied some substantial right whereby he has been prevented from having a fair trial." See also St. John v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 808.

XI. DEPRIVATION OF PROPERTY

2. Power of Taxation

a. In General (p. 433)

War taxation.—As to the power to tax for war purposes it has been said: "In critical periods of a nation's life the power to tax may be necessary to preserve it, and perhaps there is no limit beyond which it may not subject the property within its reach to contribution. I need not go so far as that in this case; it is enough that the powers of Congress are to be interpreted, not by dialectical ingenuity, but by current practices of nations in the exercise of similar powers. It is true that these powers are limited, and that those limits must be observed, however little they circumscribe the analogous powers of other Legislatures. Yet when the question is of the interpretation of those broad counsels of moderation contained in the Fifth Amendment, we must interpret the limitations themselves with an eye to the practices which have become tolerated elsewhere among civilized nations. Were it not so, we should be limited forever to the political usages of 1789, and those amendments which were intended to protect the individual against extravagant or invidious discrimination would become a strait-jacket upon the nation's freedom." Towne v. McElligott, (S. D. N. Y. 1921) 274 Fed. 960.

Vol. XI, p. 447, amend. 5.

I. Not a limitation on the states.

IV. What constitutes a taking.

1. In general.

6. Acts not directly encroaching on private property.

21. Removal or alteration of bridge as an obstruction to navigation.

36. Consequential injury.

a. In general.

I. NOT A LIMITATION ON THE STATES (p. 449)

To same effect as original annotation, see Joslin Mfg. Co. v. Clarke, (R. I. 1921) 114 Atl. 185; Kentucky Finance Corp. v. Paramount Auto Exch. Corp., (1920) 171 Wis. 586, 178 N. W. 9.

IV. WHAT CONSTITUTES A TAKING

1. In General (p. 452)

No distinction between "requisition" and "condemnation."—In a case where it was claimed by the government that there was a distinction between "requisition" and "condemnation," the court said: "The language of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States is:

"Nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation."

"Nothing is said about 'requisition' or 'condemnation'; the word used is 'taken.' The result of either condemnation or requisition is a taking, and therefore, in the opinion of the court, this amendment applies to the taking of private property, whether it be by requisition or by condemnation; and both requisition and condemnation being exercised by virtue of the same provision of constitutional law, commonly called 'eminent domain,' which allows the interest of the individual to be subordinated to that of the public and private property to be taken compulsorily for public use, in the opinion of the court, under the Constitution of the United States, there is no difference between a 'requisition' and a 'condemnation,' so far as the obligation of the United States is concerned, to award to the owner just compensation." Filbin Corp. v. U. S., (E. D. S. C. 1920) 266 Fed. 911.

Price fixing under war legislation.—Where a coal company has contracted to furnish coal at an agreed price per ton to certain steamship companies, and the government, under its war power, has required the said coal company to furnish such coal to other parties at a lower price per ton fixed by the Fuel Administration, it is not a taking under this amendment, and the United States is not liable for the difference in price. Morrisdale Coal Co. v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 310. To same effect, see Pine Hill Coal Co. v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 433.

Where the government makes a proposal to a company to furnish a stated amount of copper before a certain date, at a specified price per pound, and the proposal is voluntarily accepted, the company cannot recover for a taking under eminent domain for a part of said copper delivered after the expiration of the contract period, although the President has fixed a higher price for copper subsequent thereto while the copper for which claim is made was being delivered. American Smelting, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 466.

6. Acts Not Directly Encroaching on Private Property (p. 453)

Requiring railroad to maintain highway at crossing for full width of highway does not take private property without compensation. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Taylor, (1920) 79 Okla. 142, 192 Pac. 349.

21. Removal or Alteration of Bridge as an Obstruction to Navigation (p. 459)

Injury to pier in improving river.—Where the United States in improving a navigable river incidentally damages a pier protecting a bridge so as to require considerable repair or rebuilding, there is no taking under the Constitution, and the United States is not liable for such damage. Keokuk, etc., Bridge Co. v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 480.

36. Consequential Injury

a. In General (p. 464)

To same effect as original annotation, see Sanguinetti v. U. S., (1920) 55 Ct. Cl. 107, holding that where government works for the improvement of waterways have caused deposits of debris on private lands, requiring labor to remove; where trees have been washed out and other damage done; and a house rendered inaccessible during flood periods, the injury amounts to a depreciation or consequential damages, and not to an appropriation of the property by the United States under this amendment; but that where the facts clearly show a damage to private property equivalent to a taking under eminent domain, but without an expressed intention on the part of the Government to appropriate such property, it is a taking within this amendment.

Vol. XI, p. 474, amend. 6.

II. Limited to trials in federal courts.

1. In general.

2. Applicable to District of Columbia and territories.

III. "In all criminal prosecutions."

3. Limited to subjects of indictment under Fifth Amendment.

IV. Right to a speedy trial.

VI. "District wherein the crime shall have been committed."

1. In general.

VII. Right to be informed of nature of accusation.

VIII. Right to be confronted with witnesses.

1. The right is without exception.

X. Assistance of counsel.

II. LIMITED TO TRIALS IN FEDERAL COURTS

1. In General (p. 475)

To same effect as original annotation, see State v. Gaetano, (Conn. 1921) 114 Atl. 82; Raine v. State, (1920) 143 Tenn. 163, 226 S. W. 189; U. S. v. Wolters, (S. D. Tex. 1920) 268 Fed. 69; Kentucky Finance Corp. v. Paramount Auto Exch. Corp., (1920) 171 Wis. 586, 178 N. W. 9.

Trial by court-martial.—Trial by court-martial for murder committed by persons subject to military law does not infringe the constitutional guaranties as to jury trial and presentment or indictment by grand jury. Kahn v. Anderson, (1921) 255 U. S. 1, 41 S. Ct. 224, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

The guaranties provided by amendment 5 and this amendment do not apply to the trial of a person before a court-martial on the charge of being a spy. U. S. v. McDonald, (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 265 Fed. 754. The court said: "While it is true that, in the case at bar, the relator was charged with a criminal offense by indictments of the federal courts, this arrest is not in pursuance of any intention seeking to bring the defendant to justice on any of the charges for which he has been indicted. He is now being charged with the offense of being a spy. The guaranties of the Constitution apply only where a crime is charged. Crime means offense against the government, as understood when the Constitution was adopted. There was no such crime known to the law as that of a spy then. In the Matter of Martin, 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 142, where a military prisoner, charged with being a spy, was released on a writ of habeas corpus by reason of the fact that after the offense he had returned to the enemy lines, the court said:

"The offense of being a spy is not known to the civil or statutory law, and is one of a purely military character, cognizable only in time of war, and before a tribunal having its life, existence, and authority created, continued, and defined by purely military power."

2. Applicable to District of Columbia and Territories (p. 476)

Virgin Islands.—The right of "an accused to be confronted with the witnesses against him" was engrafted by the Organic Act of Congress on the Danish laws of the Virgin Islands. Soto v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 628.

III. "IN ALL CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS"

3. Limited to Subjects of Indictment Under Fifth Amendment (p. 478)

This amendment is not limited in its application to citizens, but applies generally to all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States. Colyer v. Skeffington, (D. C. Mass. 1920) 265 Fed. 17.

IV. RIGHT TO A SPEEDY TRIAL (p. 479)

Insufficient time for preparation.—Allowing but one day for preparation on a rule to vacate the suspension of a sentence and refusing a continuance to obtain an absent witness do not violate this provision. State v. Stauss, (1920) 114 S. C. 445, 103 S. E. 769.

VI. "DISTRICT WHEREIN THE CRIME SHALL HAVE BEEN COMMITTED"

1. In General (p. 482)

Indictment and proof.—Under this amendment which guarantees to an accused the right of trial by a jury "of the state and district wherein the crime shall have been committed" the venue is as material as any other allegation in the indictment, and the burden to prove it rests on the government. Moran v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 768.

State statute providing for prosecution of bigamy committed without the state.—A state statute providing that a married person who goes out of the state and contracts a second marriage with the intention to return to the state, shall be liable to prosecution for bigamy upon his return to the state in the same manner as if the second marriage were solemnized within the state, does not violate the provisions of this amendment. State v. Bacon, (Del. 1920) 112 Atl. 682.

VII. RIGHT TO BE INFORMED OF NATURE OF ACCUSATION (p. 485)

Statute indefinite as to acts constituting crime.—Congress, in attempting, as it did in the Lever Act of August 10, 1917, § 4, as re-enacted in the Act of October 22, 1919, § 2, [1919 Supp. 60] to punish criminally any person who wilfully made "any unjust or unreasonable rate or charge in handling or dealing in or with any necessities," violated this and the Fifth Amendments, which require an ascertainable standard of guilt, fixed by Congress rather than by courts and juries, and secure to accused persons the right to be informed of the nature and cause of accusations against them. U. S. v. L. Cohen Grocery Co., (1921) 255 U. S. 81, 41 S. Ct. 298, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, 14 A. L. R. 1045, affirming (E. D. Mo. 1920) 264 Fed. 218. See to the same effect Tedrow v. A. T. Lewis, etc., Co., (1921) 255 U. S. 98, 41 S. Ct. 303, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —; Kinnane v. Detroit Creamery Co., (1921) 255 U. S. 102, 41 S. Ct. 304, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —; Weed v. Lockwood, (1921) 255 U. S. 104, 41 S. Ct. 305, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —; G. S. Willard Co. v. Palmer, (1921) 255 U. S. 106, 41 S. Ct. 305, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —; Ogleby Grocery Co. v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 108, 41 S. Ct. 306, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —. See also Kennington v. Palmer, (1921) 255 U. S. 100, 41 S. Ct. 303, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —; Weeds v. U. S., (1921) 255 U. S. 109, 41 S. Ct. 306, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

VIII. RIGHT TO BE CONFRONTED WITH WITNESSES

1. The Right Is Without Exception (p. 488)

Purpose of provision.—This constitutional provision was designed to incorporate in a way not subject to legislative change the common-law principles in reference to criminal evidence to the effect that primarily such evidence—"consists in facts within the personal knowledge of the witness, to be testified to in open court in the presence of the accused." State v. Gaetano, (Conn. 1921) 114 Atl. 82.

X. ASSISTANCE OF COUNSEL (p. 492)

Where the defendant attempted to put in an appearance, and presented a praecipe, signed by its counsel, for this purpose, which paper the clerk refused to file without the payment of the required fee, such refusal was not a denial of the constitutional right of a person "to have the assistance of counsel for his defense." U. S. v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (E. D. Pa. 1916) 268 Fed. 697.

Vol. XI, p. 494, amend. 7.

I. To what courts applicable.

1. Not applicable to actions in state courts.

IV. In suits at common law.

3. Matters of fact in equity proceedings.

a. In general.

4. Adequate remedy at law.

12. Condemnation proceedings.

VI. Right of trial by jury.

5. Adoption of state remedies.

a. In general.

I. TO WHAT COURTS APPLICABLE

1. Not Applicable to Actions in State Courts (p. 495)

To same effect as first paragraph of original annotation see Kentucky Finance Corp. v. Paramount Auto Exch. Corp., (1920) 171 Wis. 586, 178 N. W. 9.

IV. IN SUITS AT COMMON LAW

3. Matters of Fact in Equity Proceedings

a. In General (p. 499)

Section 492 of the Revised Statutes [7 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 326] giving the court power to assess damages in patent infringement cases is not violative of this amendment. Filer, etc., Co. v. Diamond Iron Works, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1921) 270 Fed. 489.

4. Adequate Remedy at Law (p. 500)

Compelling pleading of counterclaim in equity.—The court has no power, to compel a defendant to plead a purely legal cause of action as a counterclaim to a suit in equity, and rule 30 was never so intended. To do so would be in conflict with this amendment. American Surety Co. v. American Mills Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 67.

12. Condemnation Proceedings (p. 503)

A proceeding to ascertain just compensation to be made for property taken for public purposes is a proceeding at common law to which the right of trial by jury necessarily adheres. Filbin Corp. v. U. S., (E. D. S. C. 1920) 266 Fed. 911.

VI. RIGHT OF TRIAL BY JURY

5. Adoption of State Remedies

a. In General (p. 506)

A restricted new trial where the whole case is not resubmitted to the jury is beyond the power of a federal court to order. McKeon v. Central Stamping Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 264 Fed. 385.

Vol. XI, p. 518, amend. 8.

I. Limitation on powers of federal government only.

IV. Excessive fines, cruel and unusual punishment.

I. LIMITATION ON POWERS OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ONLY (p. 518)

To same effect as first paragraph of original annotation see Kentucky Finance Corp. v. Paramount Auto Exch. Corp., (1920) 171 Wis. 586, 178 N. W. 9.

IV. EXCESSIVE FINES, CRUEL AND UNUSUAL PUNISHMENT (p. 519)

Statute not limiting penalty.—A statute making criminal syndicalism a felony but not fixing the penalty does not violate the prohibition of cruel and unusual punishment, where another statute provides that in such cases the penalty shall be not more than ten years' imprisonment and a fine of not more than five thousand dollars. State v. Hennessy, (Wash. 1921) 195 Pac. 211.

Making bootlegging a felony while other forms of unlawful sale of liquor are punishable as misdemeanors only does not violate this section. State v. Hessel, (1920) 112 Wash. 53, 191 Pac. 637.

Vol. XI, p. 522, amend. 9.

Not a limitation on the states.—To same effect as first paragraph of original annotation see Kentucky Finance Corp. v. Paramount Auto Exch. Corp., (1920) 171 Wis. 586, 178 N. W. 9.

Vol. XI, p. 523, amend. 10.

I. General reserved powers.

III. Police power.

1. In general.

I. GENERAL RESERVED POWERS (p. 523)

"Except as limited by the Constitution of the United States and the laws made in response thereto, it is within the power of the state to determine the rights to be recognized or conferred by the state constitution, and to determine how and when and under what circumstances these rights may be asserted." Wight v. Police Jury, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 264 Fed. 705.

"This amendment must be construed to mean that, in framing the Constitution, the sovereign people of the several states ceded to the general government certain designated powers, leaving all other rights and powers, such as are necessary to maintain our dual system of government, to the states respectively and to the people." George v. Bailey, (W. D. N. C. 1921) 274 Fed. 639.

III. POLICE POWER

1. In General (p. 525)

State statute making illegal teachings tending to hamper enlistments and prosecution of war.—Congressional power is not usurped nor encroached upon by the enactment by a state of a statute making it unlawful to advocate or teach that men should not enlist in the military or naval forces of the United States or of the state, or that citizens of the state should not aid or assist the United States in prosecuting or carrying on war with the public enemies of the United States. Such statute renders a service to the people of the state, and may even be supported as a simple exercise of the police power to preserve the peace of the state. Gilbert v. Minnesota, (1920) 254 U. S. 325, 41 S. Ct. 125, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 141 Minn. 263, 169 N. W. 790.

Vol. XI, p. 530, amend. 11.

IV. Suit in admiralty.

XI. State as a nominal or real party.

XII. Suits against state officers.

10. Injunctions against state officers.

IV. SUIT IN ADMIRALTY (p. 533)

The admiralty and maritime jurisdiction is not exempt from the operation of the rule that a state may not be sued in personam without its consent by individuals, whether its own citizens or not. Matter of New York, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 588, 65 U. S. (L. ed.), wherein it was held that the immunity of a state from suit without its consent prevents a court of admiralty, in which libels have been filed against certain tugs for damages received by their tows upon the Erie canal, from proceeding against the superintendent of public works of the state of New York, who was operating the tugs when the disaster occurred, under charter parties authorized by the state laws, where, the charters having since expired, at no time has any res belonging to the state or to such officer, or in which they claim any interest, been attached or brought under the jurisdiction of the court, nor is any relief asked against such officer individually, the proceedings against him being strictly in his capacity as a public officer. The court said: "Nor is the admiralty and marine jurisdiction exempt from the operation of the rule. It is true the Amendment speaks only of suits in law or equity; but this is because, as was pointed out in Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U. S. 1, 10-17, 33 L. ed. 842, 845-848, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 504, the Amendment was the outcome of a purpose to set aside the effect of the decision of this court in Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. 419, 1 L. ed. 440, which happened to be a suit at law, brought against the state by a citizen of another state, the decision turning upon the construction of that clause of § 2 of art. 3 of the Constitution, establishing the judicial power in cases in law and equity between a state and citizens of another state; from which it naturally came to pass that the language of the Amendment was particularly phrased so as to reverse the construction adopted in that case. In Hans v. Louisiana, supra (p. 15), the court demonstrated the impropriety of construing the Amendment so as to leave it open for citizens to sue their own state in the Federal courts; and it seems to us equally clear that it cannot with propriety be construed to leave open a suit against a state in the admiralty jurisdiction by individuals, whether its own citizens or not.

"Among the authorities to which we are referred is Mr. Justice Story, who, in his Commentaries on the Constitution (1st ed. § 1683; 5th ed. § 1639), stated that it had been doubted whether the Amendment extended to cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction where the proceeding was in rem, and not in personam; and whose doubt was supported by a declaration proceeding from Mr. Justice Washington at the circuit. United States v. Bright, (1809) Brightly N. P. 19, 25, note; Fed. Cas. No. 14,647; 3 Am. L. J. 197, 225. But the doubt was based upon considerations that were set aside in the reasoning adopted by this court in Hans v. Louisiana."

To the same effect as the above case see Matter of New York, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 592, 65 U. S. (L. ed.).

XI. STATE AS A NOMINAL OR REAL PARTY (p. 535)

Rule stated.—To the same effect as the original annotation see Matter of New York, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 588, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

XII. SUITS AGAINST STATE OFFICERS

10. Injunction Against State Officers

The federal courts have no power to enjoin a suit by the state in its sovereign capacity under the Eleventh Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The state can only act through officers and agents, and where such officers and agents are authorized by a valid law to institute suits in the name of the state, and such suit is brought, the suit to enjoin such officers from proceeding with such suits is a suit against the state which is prohibited by this amendment, and a writ of injunction issued in such case is void for want of jurisdiction in the federal court to entertain the suit. Robertson v. H. Weston Lumber Co., (1921) 124 Miss. 606, 87 So. 120.

To restrain impairment of contract.—Where coal mining companies had contracts to deliver coal outside the state and an order of a state commission requiring them to deliver their coal to parties within the state was made, it was held that an order for an interlocutory injunction should be issued on the ground that the action of the commission impaired the obligation of pre-existing contracts. Vandalia Coal Co. v. Special Coal, etc., Commission, (D. C. Ind. 1920) 268 Fed. 572.

Vol. XI, p. 554, amend. 13, sec. 1.

III. SLAVERY AND INVOLUNTARY SERVITUDE

1. Involuntary Servitude

a. In General (p. 556)

Penalizing lessors for failure to furnish water, heat, light, etc., to lessees.—An involuntary servitude forbidden by this amendment is not created by the provisions of N. Y. Laws 1920, chaps. 131 and 951, which make it a misdemeanor for a lessor, or any agent or janitor, intentionally to fail to furnish such water, heat, light, elevator, telephone, or other service as may be required by the terms of the lease, and necessary to the proper and customary use of the building. Marcus Brown Holding Co. v. Feldman, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 465, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 269 Fed. 306), wherein the court said: "It is objected finally that chapter 951, above stated, in so far as it required active services to be rendered to the tenants, is void on the rather singular ground that it infringes the 13th Amendment. It is true that the traditions of our law are opposed to compelling a man to perform strictly personal services against his will, even when he has contracted to render them. But the services in question, although involving some activities, are so far from personal that they constitute the universal and necessary incidents of modern apartment houses. They are analogous to the services that, in the old law, might issue out of or be attached to land."

Requiring labor irrespective of financial ability.—This section renders invalid a statute providing that every able bodied male resident of this state between the ages of sixteen and sixty years, except bona fide students during school term, who shall fail or refuse to regularly and steadily engage for at least thirty-six hours per week in some lawful and recognized business, profession, occupation or employment, shall be held to be a vagrant and be guilty of a misdemeanor, and punished as therein provided, regardless of the financial ability of such person to maintain himself and his dependents without performing such labor, and regardless of his ability to obtain such employment except as therein provided. Ex p. Hudgins, (1920) 86 W. Va. 526, 103 S. E. 327, 9 A. L. R. 1361.

Vol. XI, p. 567, amend. 14, sec. 1.

State regulation of proof of citizenship.—In State v. Superior Ct., (1920) 113 Wash. 54, 193 Pac. 226, in sustaining a statute prescribing the manner in which a naturalized citizen must prove his citizenship, it was said: "According to the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States there are two methods by which a person may become a citizen: (a) By birth in the United States; and (b) by naturalization therein. A natural-born citizen's right to vote depends upon his place of birth, and this is the fact to be established. A naturalized citizen's right to vote depends, not upon his place of birth, but on a judgment or decree of a court of competent jurisdiction, declaring either him or his ancestor a naturalized citizen. Evidence which would be reasonable and satisfactory in determining a natural-born citizen's right to vote would not necessarily be such evidence when applied to a naturalized citizen. The Legislature has a discretion in determining the character of proof that may be required to establish the fact of citizenship in each case. There is no reason why a law passed by the Legislature which does not require the same character of proof as applied to each class should be held to be unconstitutional."

Vol. XI, p. 577, amend. 14, sec. 1.

III. PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES OF CITIZENS OF THE UNITED STATES

5. State Control Over Court Procedure
 - c. Attachments Against Nonresidents (p. 590)

Special security required as prerequisite to appearing and defending.—Privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States are not unconstitutionally impaired by a state foreign attachment statute which debars a nonresident individual defendant from appearing and defending unless he first gives special security. Owney v. Morgan, (1921) 256 U. S. 94, 41 S. Ct. 433, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1917) 7 Boyce (Del.) 297, 105 Atl. 838.

6. Recognition of Racial Distinctions (p. 592)

Prohibiting use of foreign language in schools.—A statute that in all schools, public and private, the use of any language other than English in the teaching of secular subjects is prohibited, does not abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens. State v. Bartels, (Iowa 1921) 181 N. W. 508.

7. Regulating Manufacture and Sale of Goods (p. 595)

Requiring a license from itinerant vendors of drugs does not violate this section. Anderson v. Farr, (1920) 97 Ore. 137, 191 Pac. 346.

8. Relation of Employer and Employee (p. 600)

A workman's compensation act which gives to residents of the state but not to nonresidents a right to compensation for injuries received outside the state while working under a contract of hiring made in the state is in violation of this provision of the Constitution. Quong Ham Wah Co. v. Industrial Acc. Commission, (Cal. 1920) 192 Pac. 1021, 12 A. L. R. 1190.

10. Regulating Pursuit of Occupations (p. 604)

Prohibiting dancing near residence.—An ordinance prohibiting dancing or dance music in any room or hall within 25 feet of a building used as a residence between 10 p. m. and 8 a. m. is unreasonable, not a legitimate exercise of the police power and violates the 14th Amendment. Es p. Hall, (Cal. App. 1920) 195 Pac. 975.

An arbitrary discretion to revoke the license of any place of amusement given to a city council is discriminatory and violates the 14th Amendment. Vincent v. Seattle, (Wash. 1921) 197 Pac. 618.

Insurance.—A state statute prohibiting, under penalty of a fine, any person, firm or company from engaging in the insurance business in the state without first obtaining authority to do so as provided in the laws of the state, is not unconstitutional as violating this amendment. State v. New Jersey Indemnity Co., (N. J. 1921) 113 Atl. 491.

13. Elections (p. 609)

Differences in established manner of holding primary elections in different counties does not impair the privileges and immunities of the citizens of any county. State v. Buer, (Wis. 1921) 182 N. W. 855.

25. Regulating Public Speaking on Public Grounds (p. 612)

VII. NATURE AND INCIDENTS OF DUE PROCESS OF LAW

1. In General (p. 639)

Special legislation.—"The Fourteenth Amendment does not prohibit legislation special in character. Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Savings Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 294 [18 Sup. Ct. 594, 42 L. Ed. 1037]. It does not prohibit a state from carrying out a policy that cannot be pronounced purely arbitrary, by taxation or penal law." Bankers' Trust Co. v. State, (Conn. 1921) 114 Atl. 104.

2. Synonymous with "Law of the Land." (p. 642)

"Due process of law" and "law of the land."—The "due process of law," by which Congress is limited in the Fifth Amendment, and the states by the Fourteenth Amendment, is equivalent to the "law of the land," and is intended to protect the citizen against arbitrary action, and secure to all persons equal and impartial justice under the law. U. S. v. Yount, (W. D. Pa. 1920) 267 Fed. 861.

4. Not Necessarily Judicial Process (p. 643)

Under ordinary circumstances, due process of law implies a formal judicial proceeding; but such a proceeding is not invariably required. Gas, etc., Securities Co. v. Manhattan, etc., Traction Corp., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 266 Fed. 625.

X. STATE ACTION AFFECTING LIFE, LIBERTY OR PROPERTY

1. Exercise of Police Power (p. 647)

To same effect as original annotation, see State v. Hall, (Wyo. 1921) 194 Pac. 476.

"Neither the 'contract' clause of the Constitution nor the 'due process' clause thereof 'has the effect of overriding the power of the state to establish all regulations that are reasonably necessary to secure the health, safety, good order, comfort, or general welfare of the community'; and 'all contract and property rights are held subject to its fair exercise.'" Corvallis Creamery Co. v. Van Winkle, (D. C. Ore. 1921) 274 Fed. 454.

Legislation suspending right of landlord to recover possession of leased premises.—The suspension until November 1, 1922, in cities having a population of one million or more, and in cities in a county adjoining such city, of the right to recover possession of real property occupied for dwelling purposes, except where the person holding over is objectionable, or where the landlord seeks to occupy the premises as a dwelling for himself and his family, or intends to demolish the building and construct a new one (providing the tenant or occupant is ready, willing, and able to pay a reasonable rent), as was done by N. Y. Laws 1920, chaps. 942 and 947, was a valid exercise of the police power in the emergency growing out of the World War, and is not repugnant to the contract or due process of law clauses of the Federal Constitution, even as applied to a case where, before the passage of such statute, another lease of the premises had been made, to go into effect on the day following that when the existing lease by its terms expired, and when the lessees had contracted to surrender the premises. Marcus Brown Holding Co. v. Feldman, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 465, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 269 Fed. 306. See also People v. La Fetra, (1921) 230 N. Y. 429, 130 N. E. 601; Gutttag v. Shatzkin, (1921) 230 N. Y. 647, 130 N. E. 929.

Licensing dogs.—A statute licensing dogs and providing for the destruction of dogs killing domestic animals and for compensation to the owners of such animals does not violate this section. McQueen v. Kittitas County, (Wash. 1921) 198 Pac. 394.

3. Degree of Judicial Power (p. 652)

Taking jurisdiction of action between non-resident parties, the cause of action being transitory and the defendant being found and served in the state does not violate this section. Stewart v. Litchenberg, (1920) 148 La. 195, 86 So. 734.

7. State Control Over Court Procedure a. In General (p. 654)

Writ of prohibition forbidding confirmation of sale of railroad at foreclosure with privilege of dismantling road.—The purchaser of a railroad under a decree of foreclosure is not deprived of property without due process of law by a writ of prohibition which excludes from such decree words which purport to authorize the purchaser to dismantle the road, since the purchaser, whatever the words of the decree, acquires all the rights that the mortgagor had to stop operations when unprofitable, and the prohibition, not compelling further operation at a loss, did not cut down the purchaser's rights any more than did the presence of the excluded words enlarge them. Bullock v. Florida, (1921) 254 U. S. 513, 41 S. Ct. 193, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 78 Fla. 321, 82 So. 866, 8 A. L. R. 232.

Joinder of insurer as party defendant.—A statute providing that every policy thereafter written insuring against liability for personal injuries shall contain provisions to the effect that the insurer shall be directly liable to the injured party and providing further that the insurer may be joined as a party defendant in a suit by the injured person, does not violate this amendment. Morrell v. Lalonde, (R. I. 1921) 114 Atl. 178.

r. Grand Jury

(2) Number of Grand Jurors (p. 660)

Louisiana constitution and statutes providing for a grand jury of 12 of whom 9 shall be a quorum in the parish of Orleans does not violate this section. State v. Birbiglia, (La. 1921) 88 So. 533.

u. Necessity for Arraignment and Plea (p. 663)

To same effect as original annotation, see State v. Prouty, (Vt. 1920) 111 Atl. 559.

v. Trial by Jury

(1) In General (p. 664)

Denial of jury trial in statutory proceeding.—That a statute providing for a proceeding to compel the destruction of trees infected with "cedar rust" does not provide for a trial by jury "does not render it invalid as in conflict with the guaranty of due process of law contained in the Fourteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution and in section 11 of the state Constitution.

"It has been long well settled that neither the state nor federal Constitution guarantees or preserves the right of trial by jury except in those cases where it existed when these Constitutions were adopted." Bowman v.

Virginia State Entomologist, (1920) 128 Va. 351, 105 S. E. 141, 12 A. L. R. 1121.

a7. Judgment

(7) Indeterminate Sentence and Parole (p. 673)

Statute permitting imposition of indeterminate sentence.—A state statute providing the minimum and maximum penalty for a crime and permitting the court to impose an indeterminate sentence upon a person convicted of a violation thereof, does not contravene this amendment although it may confer judicial powers upon nonjudicial officers. People v. Prochowski, (1920) 294 Ill. 482, 128 N. E. 474; People v. Banks, (1920) 294 Ill. 256, 128 N. E. 462; People v. King, (1920) 295 Ill. 428, 129 N. E. 174; People v. Schwartz, (1921) 298 Ill. 218, 131 N. E. 806.

e1. Appellate Jurisdiction and Procedure

(1) Right of Appeal (p. 676)

A review by an appellate court of a judgment of conviction is not a requirement in affording a defendant the due process of law that is secured to him by the Constitution. Haywood v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 795. The court further said: "In England writs of error in criminal cases are of comparatively recent origin. In our country, though writs of error within certain limitations have been allowed from the beginning, the grant has been of grace or expediency, not of constitutional demand. In the court of first instance the defendant is given his day in court, his trial by jury, his opportunity to confront opposing witnesses, and all other elements of due process of law. And if Congress might have withheld entirely the privilege of review, it is self-evident that Congress may at any time reduce the previously granted privilege. From recent legislation (40 Stat. pt. 1, p. 1181) we gather the congressional intent to end the practice of holding that an error requires the reversal of the judgment unless the opponent can affirmatively demonstrate from other parts of the record that the error was harmless, and now to demand that the complaining party show to the reviewing tribunal from the record as a whole that he has been denied some substantial right whereby he has been prevented from having a fair trial." See also St. John v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1920) 268 Fed. 808.

f1. Liability for Costs (p. 679)

Costs on vexatious appeal.—Due process of law is not denied to an insurance company by a state statute under which, as construed by the state courts, a recovery of damages and attorneys' fees as for a vexatious refusal to pay a loss is permitted on the second trial of an action on the policy, following a reversal by the federal Supreme Court of a judgment against the company on the first trial, although there may have been no evidence of vexatious refusal except delay in payment of the claim. Hartford L. Ins. Co. v. Blincoe, (1921) 255 U. S. 129, 41 S. Ct. 276, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 279 Mo. 316, 214 S. W. 207, 12 A. L. R. 758.

8. Notice and Opportunity

a. In General (p. 679)

Restriction on right of nonresident to appear and defend.—A statute which affords a nonresident individual defendant in a suit begun by foreign attachment an opportunity to appear and defend only in case he gives bail or security for the discharge of the property seized to the value of such property and costs does not deny due process of law, even though defendant may have no resources or credit aside from the property attached. Ownbey v. Morgan, (1921) 256 U. S. 94, 41 S. Ct. 433, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1917) 7 Boyce (Del.) 297, 105 Atl. 838.

Acceptance by state tax commission of corporation's own figures as waiver of hearing.—A state statute imposing a franchise tax upon domestic corporations cannot be assailed on the ground that the taxing statute did not in terms provide for a hearing, where the state tax commission accepted the corporation's own figures, and the contest is wholly upon matters of law. St. Louis-San Francisco R. Co. v. Middlekamp, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 489, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Construction of highways.—The constitution and laws of Louisiana, relative to the creation of road districts and the imposition of special taxes for the construction and maintenance of roads therein, in and of themselves, are not in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution in that they deny due process of law because no provision is made for notice to taxpayers of contemplated action by the police jury in the formation of districts. Wight v. Police Jury, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 264 Fed. 705.

Adoption—notice to parents of abandoned child.—A state statute which permits the adoption of an abandoned child without notice to its parents does not violate this amendment. Fischer v. Meader, (N. J. 1920) 111 Atl. 503, wherein it was said: "The more radical attack, however, is made upon the act itself, in that as alleged it deprives the mother of the constitutional right of possessing her child, thus contravening the inhibition of the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution, requiring 'due process' as a condition precedent to the deprivation of a vested right. It may be said in limine that it is difficult to apprehend an existing legal right where such right has been abandoned by the party possessing it. The assertion of the right assumes its existence when in fact the decree of the court is proof of its abandonment. When this petitioner abandoned her child it became a public charge, and it became the duty of the state as parens patriæ to claim it, not only in the interest of the child, but also in the interest of the state itself, representing the people whose future morals and prosperity depend essentially upon the character and quality of the citizenship it develops.

"The claim of the petitioner is based upon the theory of a chattel ownership of the child, but no such right is capable of legal recognition. The right of the parent to the custody of the child subsists so long, and so long only, as the parent performs the duty of care and maintenance imposed upon her by law. . . . Where the performance of those duties is consistently neglected, the public safety becomes pro tanto endangered by the creation of a public burden which, as the same learned chancellor truly observes, may eventuate 'in such children becoming a public nuisance.' Id. 196. Salus populi suprema lex, is the controlling maxim of all civilized governments in such a situation, and no government can be said to be secure in its future development, which fails in its duty to its human derelicts and its prospective citizens by failing to properly maintain, develop and educate them."

Minimum wage law of Washington sustained despite want of provision therein for notice to the employer to be affected by the order of the proceedings of the Industrial Welfare Commission. Spokane Hotel Co. v. Younger, (1920) 113 Wash. 359, 194 Pac. 595.

11. Abatement of Nuisance (p. 692)

The word "nuisance" has a well-defined meaning in the law, and a thing cannot be declared a nuisance by statute, and abated as such, when in fact it is obviously not a nuisance. The rule laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States upon this point is that—

"While the Legislature has no right arbitrarily to declare that to be a nuisance which is clearly not so, a good deal must be left to its discretion in that regard, and if the object to be accomplished is conducive to the public interests, it may exercise a large liberty of choice in the means employed." Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. loc. cit. 140, 14 Sup. Ct. 502, 38 L. ed. 385.

This is clearly the farthest limits of the rule, so far as concerns the extent to which the Legislature may encroach on private rights, in the destruction, abatement, or damage of private property as a public nuisance. Further encroachment is forbidden by those provisions of the organic law having reference to the constitutional guaranty of due process of law and forbidding the taking of private property for public use without just compensation. U. S. v. Cohen, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 420.

12. Public Office and Officers (p. 713)

Officers of conservancy district.—The Fourteenth Amendment does not deprive the state of the power of determining whether the officers of a conservancy district shall be appointed or be elected by the people, or the duties to be performed by them; nor does it invalidate a tax levy or an assessment lawfully made by such officers for a duly authorized improvement, or deprive the district as a political subdivision of the power to levy and collect taxes or assessments to pay the amount charged against property or political subdivisions, such as municipalities, counties, or townships, within such district. Silvey v. Montgomery County, (S. D. Ohio 1921) 273 Fed. 202.

Failure of officer to pay over funds to successor.—A statute making punishable as embezzlement the failure of a public officer to pay over to his successor in office the money in his hands as such officer at the end of his term, does not violate this amendment. Collins v. State, (Ind. 1921) 131 N. E. 390.

17. Summary Destruction of Property

a. In General (p. 716)

Wooden buildings within fire limits.—The demolition and removal of a wooden building which the state courts find to have been erected in a municipality within the fire limits theretofore prescribed, contrary to valid local regulations duly enacted under the municipal charter, may be ordered by the municipality without violation of the federal Constitution. Maguire v. Reardon, (1921) 255 U. S. 271, 41 S. Ct. 255, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 41 Cal. App. 596, 183 Pac. 303.

c. Property Illegally Used (p. 717)

Forfeiture of an automobile used in violation of liquor law though the rights of an innocent mortgagee are not protected, does not deny due process of law. State v. Peterson, (1920) 107 Kan. 641, 193 Pac. 342.

20. Relation of Employer and Employee

h. Workmen's Compensation Law (p. 726)

To same effect as original annotation, see Scott v. Nashville Bridge Co., (1920) 143 Tenn. 86, 223 S. W. 844.

Provision prohibiting employers making direct payments from indemnifying themselves by insurance.—A ruling of a state industrial commission, justified or demanded by a change in the state law, by which the commission, revoking its previous discretionary action, declares that no employers shall be permitted to pay or furnish directly to injured employees or to the dependents of killed employees the compensation and benefits provided for in the State Workmen's Compensation Law if such employers, by contract or otherwise, shall provide for the insurance of the payment by them of such compensation and benefits, or shall indemnify themselves against loss sustained by the direct payment thereof, does not amount to a denial of due process of law or of the equal protection of the laws. Thornton v. Duffy, (1920) 254 U. S. 361, 41 S. Ct. 137, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 99 Ohio St. 120, 124 N. E. 54.

Act compulsory as to one employment and elective as to others.—A state may, consistently with the due process of law and equal protection of the laws clauses of the federal Constitution, enact a general workmen's compensation law applicable to all employees, and make it compulsory as to one hazardous employment (coal mining) and elective as to all others except railway employees engaged in train service, who are excluded. The inclusion within the terms of a state workmen's compensation act of all employees of coal mining companies, whether engaged in the hazardous part of the business or not, does not render repugnant to the due process of law and equal protection of the laws clauses of the federal Constitution the classification made by that act, which makes it compulsory as to all coal mining companies, while as to all other private business enterprises within the state, except railway employees in train service, who are excluded, it is purely optional. Lower Vein Coal Co. v. Industrial Board, (1921) 255 U. S. 144, 41 S. Ct. 252, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Classifying employees for purposes of liability act.—“A classification in a state employers' liability act of objects, based on a distinction between employers engaged in a particular business within the state (certainly where the business is that of operating a railroad, even where the railroad is not used in the business of a common carrier), as, for example, between employees of corporations engaged in such business and employees of partnerships or private persons engaged in the same or a similar business, is within the legitimate exercise of legislative discretion in classification of the objects of such legislation, and is valid in the purview of the equal protection clause aforesaid of the federal Constitution.” Karabalis v. Du Pont De Nemours, (Va. 1921) 105 S. E. 755.

q. Regulating Discharge of Employees (p. 729)

Forbidding discharge of employee for certain cause.—A statute which forbids the discharge of an employee because such employee has testified before the industrial welfare commission regarding the terms and conditions of his employment does not infringe this section. Poye v. State, (Tex. 1921) 230 S. W. 161.

23. Railroad Companies

c. Regulating Rates

(5) Regulating Passenger Fares

(c) Regulating Street Railway Fare (p. 741)

Municipal regulation.—A federal District Court has jurisdiction to enjoin a municipal corporation from enforcing a 5 cents fare provision of a street railway franchise ordinance, on the ground that the right to enforce such rate was not secured to the municipality by contract, and that such enforcement was beyond the power of the municipality because, the rate being admittedly confiscatory, to enforce it would violate this amendment. San Antonio v. San Antonio Public Service Co., (1921) 255 U. S. 547, 41 S. Ct. 428, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein it was held that a municipal corporation in Texas could not, after the adoption of Tex. Const. 1876, § 17, which provides that no irrevocable or uncontrollable grant of special privileges or immunities shall be made, but that all privileges and franchises granted by the legislature, or created under its authority, shall be subject to the control thereof, contract with a public service corporation as to street railway fares, so as to permit their enforcement if they were so low as to be confiscatory. The court said: “But it is urged that as by the amendment to the state Constitution of 1912 the city was endowed with authority broad enough to enable it to contract in granting a street railway franchise concerning the rate of fare to be charged, disenthralled from the limitation of § 17, article 1, of the state Constitution, it follows that the franchise ordinance must, after that date, be viewed as such a contract and treated accordingly. But as no contract between the city and the Traction Company, made after the constitutional amendment in 1912 concerning the fare in question, is referred to, it is plain that even if the proposition as to power of the city after 1912 be, for the sake of the argument, conceded, it is irrelevant to the case we are considering.

“And this is true also of the suggestion made in argument, that although no contract was possible under the constitutional restriction which would bind the city not to lower the rate, nevertheless there was a unilateral contract or condition resulting from the granting of the franchise which bound the railway company to the franchise rate, since again there is not the slightest suggestion of any attempt on the part of the parties consciously to produce such a condition. But besides, the error underlying the proposition is not far to seek. The duty of an owner of private property used for the public service to charge only a reasonable rate, and thus respect the authority of government to regulate in the public interest, and of government to regulate by fixing such a reasonable rate as will safeguard the rights of private ownership, are interdependent and reciprocal. Where, however, the right to contract exists and the parties, the public on the one hand, and the private owner on the other, do so contract, the law of the contract governs both the duty of the private owner and the governmental power to regulate. Where, therefore, as in the case supposed in the argument, the regulating power of government being wholly uncontrolled by contract, it would follow that that power would be required to be exerted, and hence the supposed condition operating upon the private owner would be nugatory. Such a case really presents no question of a condition, since it resolves itself into a mere issue of the exercise by government of its regulatory power."

Determination of what constitutes reasonable rate.—The fact that the board of public utility commissioners of a state, in determining what is a just and reasonable rate of fare to be charged by a street railway, take into consideration the safety, sufficiency, and adequacy of the service being rendered by the company, does not deprive it of its property without due process of law nor take its property for public use without just compensation. New Jersey Cent. Traction Co. v. Public Utility Commissioners, (N. J. 1921) 113 Atl. 692.

(7) Must Admit of Earning Just Compensation (p. 744)

To same effect as original annotation, see Houston Electric Co. v. Houston, (S. D. Tex. 1920) 265 Fed. 360.

(10) Whether Compensatory as to Entire Line (p. 749)

A state may not segregate a class of traffic and compel a carrier to transport it in intrastate commerce at less than cost, or without a substantial compensation, although the return by the carrier from its entire intrastate operations may be adequate. Vandalia R. Co. v. Schnull, (1921) 255 U. S. 113, 41 S. Ct. 324, 65 U. S. (L. ed. —, (reversing) (1919) 188 Ind. 87, 122 N. E. 225) wherein it was further held as to the pleading of the invalidity of the regulation that averments in the answer, in a suit to compel a railway company to keep in force certain intrastate freight rates prescribed by the order of a state commission, which assert that the order of the commission will not yield revenue sufficient to reimburse the railway company for handling and carrying the classes of property specified in the order and provide a fair return on the property used in the service, and that, therefore, if the order be enforced, the railway company will be deprived of its property without due process of law, are sufficient to present the issue whether the order of the commission was invalid because it required a service that the rates did not compensate, although the answer does not allege that the rates are not compensatory of the cost of the service between the stations to which they apply, and fails to specify upon what part of the carrier's property the rates will not yield a fair return.

a. Requiring Construction of Side Track or Switch (p. 760)

Dislocation of sidings by abolishing of grade crossings as entitling owners to complain on constitutional grounds.—Owners of private railway sidings have no constitutional ground for complaint because such sidings will be dislocated and their owners be put to further expense by the lawful compulsory abolition of certain highway grade crossings of a steam railway. Erie R. Co. v. Public Utility Com'rs, (1921) 254 U. S. 394, 41 S. Ct. 169, 65 U. S. (L. ed. —, affirming) (1916) 89 N. J. L. 57, 24, 98 Atl. 13, 28; (1917) 90 N. J. L. 672, 673, 714, 729, 677, 694, 715, 103 Atl. 1052, 1053, 1055, 1051.

m1. Requiring Alterations in Crossings at Expense of Company (p. 766)

A state may, consistently with the due process of law, commerce, and contract clauses of the Federal Constitution, require a railway corporation engaged in interstate commerce to abolish at its own expense, whatever the cost, and without regard to financial ability, highway grade crossings, including those at streets laid out after the railway was built, if it can reasonably be said that the public safety requires the change. It follows that a railway company which might constitutionally have been charged under the state laws with the whole expense of abolishing certain highway grade crossings and may not complain that not more than 10 per cent of the cost of abolishing three crossings used by a street railway is thrown upon the latter company. Erie R. Co. v. Public Utility Com'rs, (1921) 254 U. S. 394, 41 S. Ct. 169, 65 U. S. (L. ed. —, affirming) (1916) 89 N. J. L. 57, 24, 98 Atl. 13, 28; (1917) 90 N. J. L. 672, 673, 714, 729, 677, 694, 715, 103 Atl. 1052, 1053, 1055, 1051.

p1. Erection and Alteration of Bridges (p. 767)

The property of a bridge company, specially incorporated by N. Y. Laws 1857, chap. 753, to build a railroad bridge over the Niagara river, and later consolidated with a similar Canadian corporation, pursuant to New York and Canadian statutes, subject to all the duties of each of the consolidated companies, cannot be said to have been taken without due process of law by N. Y. Laws 1915, chap. 666, amending the original charter, in the exercise of the state's reserved power to amend, by requiring the construction of a roadway for vehicles and a pathway for pedestrians on that part of the bridge within the jurisdiction of the state, where there is nothing to show that the addition to the structure will not yield a reasonable return. International Bridge Co. v. New York, (1920) 254 U. S. 126, 41 S. Ct. 56, 65 U. S. (L. ed. —, affirming) (1918) 223 N. Y. 137, 119 N. E. 351.

(1) In General (p. 768)

Abolishment of grade crossings.—A street railway company crossing the tracks of a

x1. Street Railways

steam road at grade in a public street may, consistently with the Federal Constitution, be required to bear a part of the expense of abolishing the grade crossing, and the payment of the amount charged, if not excessive, may be made a condition of the street railway company's continued right to use the streets. Erie R. Co. v. Public Utility Com'rs, (1921) 254 U. S. 394, 41 S. Ct. 169, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1916) 89 N. J. L. 57, 24, 98 Atl. 13, 28; (1917) 90 N. J. L. 672, 673, 714, 729, 677, 694, 715, 103 Atl. 1052, 1053, 1055, 1051.

(7) Effect of Expiration of Franchise (p. 770)

Requiring removal of tracks.—Where a street railway company operating in the streets of a city under a franchise granted for a definite period has enjoyed the full term of the grant, the municipality may, upon failure of renewal of the grant, require the company within a reasonable time to remove its tracks and other property from the streets without impairing any contractual obligations protected by the Federal Constitution, or depriving the street railway company of its property without due process of law. Detroit United Ry. v. Detroit, (1921) 255 U. S. 171, 41 S. Ct. 285, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) wherein it was further held that subjecting a street railway company whose franchises have expired, to the alternative of accepting an inadequate price for its property, or of ceasing to operate in the city streets, and removing its property therefrom, does not take property without due process of law, where the city has the right to require such cessation and removal, and no purchase can be effected without approval by the city electors.

25. Telegraph and Telephone Companies (p. 771)

Moving of poles and wires necessitated by abolition of grade crossing of railroad.—An interstate telegraph company may, consistently with the Federal Constitution, be required to bear the expense of the changes in its poles and wires made necessary by the compulsory abolition of certain highway grade crossings of a steam railroad. Erie R. Co. v. Public Utility Com'rs, (1921) 254 U. S. 394, 41 S. Ct. 169, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1916) 89 N. J. L. 57, 24, 98 Atl. 13, 28; (1917) 90 N. J. L. 672, 673, 714, 729, 677, 694, 715, 103 Atl. 1052, 1053, 1055, 1051.

27. Gas and Electric Companies

b. Regulating Rates (p. 776)

Compelling corporation to devote property to public use without reasonable compensation.—Where a public service corporation is compelled by an order of a state public utilities commission to furnish heat to the inhabitants of a city at a rate which causes it a loss, without reasonable compensation, it is deprived of its property without due process of law. Mt. Carmel Public Utility, etc., Co. v. Public Utilities Commission, (1921) 297 Ill. 303, 130 N. E. 693.

In Landon v. Court of Industrial Relations, (D. C. Kan. 1920) 269 Fed. 411, a rate established by the state for supplying natural gas by distributing companies was held to be "noncompensatory, unreasonably low, confiscatory and violative of the Constitution of the United States." See also Landon v. Court of Industrial Relations, (D. C. Kan. 1920) 269 Fed. 433.

Enforcement of confiscatory rates fixed by contract.—Confiscatory rates for services to be performed by public service corporations, fixed by governmental agencies, cannot be enforced unless they are secured by contract obligation. If, however, public service corporations and governmental agencies dealing with them have power to contract as to rates, and exert that power by fixing by contract the rates to govern during a particular time, the enforcement of such rates is controlled by the obligation resulting from the contract and the question as to whether such rates are confiscatory becomes immaterial. But municipal corporations in Iowa have no power, under the rate regulation provisions of Iowa Code, 1897, § 725, to contract with public service corporations as to rates in franchise ordinances so as to permit the enforcement of such rates if they are so low as to be confiscatory. Southern Iowa Electric Co. v. Chariton, (1921) 255 U. S. 539, 41 S. Ct. 400, 65 U. S. (L. ed.), reversing (S. D. Ia. 1919) 256 Fed. 929.

Items considered in determining whether rate confiscatory, see New York, etc., Gas Co. v. Newton, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 269 Fed. 277.

Length of test of alleged confiscatory rate.

—See Consolidated Gas Co. v. Newton, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 267 Fed. 231.

An injunction should be granted against the enforcement of a statute fixing gas rates where it is shown that the cost of production and distribution is in excess of the rate fixed by statute. New York, etc., Gas Co. v. Newton, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 269 Fed. 277.

Injunctive relief will not be granted against the enforcement of rates fixed by a state for a public utility on the ground that they are confiscatory until there has been a finality of action in the state tribunal. Thus where a proceeding is pending before a state commission in which the complainant before the federal court has asked for an increase of rates, the federal court has refused to act. Wisconsin-Minnesota Light, etc., Co. v. Railroad Commission, (W. D. Wis. 1920) 267 Fed. 711.

32. Banks and Banking

a. In General (p. 784)

Prohibiting use of words "bank," etc.—A statute prohibiting the use of the words "bank," "banker," "banking" or "trust" as a designation or part of a name under which business may be conducted by any person, firm or corporation other than a bank, is valid as an exercise of the police power of the state and does not contravene this amendment. Inglis v. Pontius, (Ohio 1921) 131 N. E. 509.

33. Insurance Companies

a. In General (p. 785)

Prescribing who shall be agents of insurer.—A state statute providing that any person who acts for an insurance company in the making of a contract of insurance or the adjustment of a loss shall be the agent of the insurer does not violate this section. Globe, etc., F. Ins. Co. v. Walker, (1920) 150 Ga. 163, 103 S. E. 407.

c. Licensing Insurance Agents (p. 786)

Revocation of license of insurance agent.—So much of section 7 of the act of the General Assembly entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of a department of insurance," etc., approved August 19, 1912 (Acts 1912, pp. 119, 124), as provides that "the license of any soliciting agent may be revoked at any time by the insurance commissioner in his discretion," is violative of the due process clause contained in section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Riley v. Wright, (Ga. 1921) 107 S. E. 857.

35. Regulating Production, Use and Rates of Natural Gas (p. 790)

Statute prohibiting wasteful use of natural gas.—Neither the manufacturer of carbon black from natural gas nor the owner of the land on which are the gas wells and the pipe line, and of mineral leases covering proved gas territory, is deprived of his property without due process of law, or denied the equal protection of the laws, nor are the obligations of pre-existing contracts unconstitutionally impaired, by a state statute which prohibits the use of natural gas for products where such gas is burned or consumed without fully and actually applying and utilizing the heat therein contained for other manufacturing or domestic uses (but only when the gas well or source of supply is located within 10 miles of an incorporated town or industrial plant), and forbids the owner or lessee of natural gas wells within the 10-mile limit to sell or dispose of the gas for the purpose of manufacturing or producing carbon or other resultant products from the burning or consumption of such gas unless the heat therein contained is fully and actually applied and utilized for other manufacturing or domestic purposes, since, there being great disproportion between the volume of gas and the product, the state could exert its police power in this way to conserve the gas supply for less wasteful uses. Walls v. Midland Carbon Co., (1920) 254 U. S. 300, 41 S. Ct. 118, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

37. Control of Municipal Corporation

d. County Printing (p. 794)

State Printing Commission.—An act giving to a State Publication and Printing Commission power to designate official newspapers in which alone county publications shall be made does not deny due process of law. Daly v. Beery, (N. D. 1920) 178 N. W. 104. This case was decided by a divided court under a provision of the state Constitution that no statute shall be held unconstitutional except by the concurrence of four judges, but apparently there was no dissent as to the point above stated.

38. Regulating Manufacture and Sale of Goods

j. Of Cigarettes (p. 804)

Anti-Cigarette Law sustained.—The act (chapter 166, Laws 1917) prohibiting and prescribing penalties for bartering, selling, or the giving away of cigarettes or cigarette papers and the keeping of them for barter, sale, or free distribution is within the police power of the state, and does not violate any of the principles of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The provision making the possession of cigarettes and cigarette papers prima facie evidence of the selling and keeping for sale of the prohibited articles is not a denial of due process of law. State v. Nossaman, (1920) 107 Kan. 715, 193 Pac. 347.

41. Eminent Domain

k. Question of Necessity (p. 822)

In a case involving the taking of property by the United States for river improvements under Act of May 16, 1906, (9 Fed. Stat. Ann. 2nd ed. p. 33), the rule is stated that a hearing on the question of necessity is not essential to due process of law in the sense of the Fourteenth Amendment. In re Condemnations, etc., (E. D. Mich. 1920) 266 Fed. 105.

42. Regulating Pursuit of Occupations (p. 830)

License tax on dealers in firearms is not discriminatory so as to infringe this section because it excepts rifles of 22 and 25 caliber. State v. Winehill, (1920) 147 La. 781, 86 So. 181.

Requiring reports of furniture movers.—An ordinance requiring furniture movers to report to the city register the name of such person, firm or corporation owning, or having the custody, possession and control of such property, the street address or location from and to which such property was removed, a brief, general description of the property removed, the date of such removal, and the name and address of the person, firm or corporation, owning or operating vehicles used in such transportation does not take property without due process of law. Wagner v. St. Louis, (1920) 284 Mo. 410, 224 S. W. 413, 12 A. L. R. 495.

a. Practice of Medicine

(1) In General (p. 830)

Regulating furnishing of habit-forming narcotic drugs.—A state, in the exercise of its police power, may, consistently with this amendment, regulate the administration, sale, prescription, and use of dangerous and habit-forming narcotic drugs, and in so doing may make it unlawful for a physician to furnish such drugs to habitual users out of stocks kept on hand by himself. Minnesota v. Martinson, (1921) 256 U. S. 41, 41 S. Ct. 425, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 144 Minn. 206, 174 N. W. 823.

b. Practice of Dentistry (p. 831)

In Noble v. Douglas, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 274 Fed. 672, a statute relating to admission to the practice of dentistry and creating a board of examiners was held to be unconstitutional as vesting the board with arbitrary powers.

c. Practice of Osteopathy (p. 832)

Discrimination as to qualifications for practice.—A statute is unconstitutional as discriminating against osteopaths and chiropractors, where it provides that the minimum standard of professional education for the practice of medicine and surgery in all its branches shall be the graduation from a medical school of good standing and completion of the course of study in such college, but that for the practice of any system of treating human ailments without the use of drugs, the applicant must be a graduate of a professional school or college teaching such system, which requires as a prerequisite to graduation four years' course of instruction. People v. Love, (1921) 298 Ill. 304, 131 N. E. 809.

f. Practice of Law (p. 833)

The refusal of a state to grant a license to practice law after due notice and opportunity to be heard is not a violation of this section. Keeley v. Evans, (D. C. Ore. 1921) 271 Fed. 520, wherein it was said: "Without doubt, the right of an attorney to practice law is a property right, which can be taken from him only after judicial hearing and a fair opportunity to be heard in his own defense. Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. 333, 18 L. Ed. 366; Ex parte Robinson, 19 Wall. 505, 22 L. Ed. 205; State ex rel. McElhinney, 241 Mo. 592, 606, 145 S. W. 1139; Smith v. Medical Examiners, 140 Iowa, 66, 117 N. W. 1116. As we have seen, the proceedings against complainant were not for his disbarment, but, notwithstanding, it is without question that he not only had ample notice and a fair opportunity to be heard, but he actually appeared before both the board and the court, and was afforded full and adequate opportunity to present his case in all of its angles. Due process of law does not embrace nor control mere forms of procedure in state courts, or regulate practice therein. All of its requirements are complied with, provided, in the proceedings which are claimed not to have been due process, the person proceeded against has had sufficient notice and an adequate opportunity has been afforded him to defend."

43. As Affecting Conveyance of or Title to Land (p. 837)

Fixing maximum rent of farm lands.—

A statute invalidating farm land leases which stipulate for more than one-third of the grain or one-fourth of the cotton as rental violates this section. Rumbo v. Winterrowd, (Tex. 1921) 228 S. W. 258.

44. Health Laws

a. In General (p. 840)

Regulating establishment of hospitals in cities.—An ordinance requiring a permit to be granted only on the hearing of objection by adjacent property owners, for the erection of a building to be used as a sanatorium, private hospital or the like does not infringe this section. Blackman Health Resort v. Atlanta, (Ga. 1921) 107 S. E. 525.

Requirement of dipping of sheep is not a violation of this section. State v. Hall, (Wyo. 1921) 194 Pac. 476.

107. Taxation

a. In General (p. 860)

A state tax law, where conflict with Federal power is not involved, will be held to conflict with the 14th Amendment only where it proposes or clearly results in such flagrant and palpable inequality between the burden imposed and the benefit received as to amount to the arbitrary taking of property without compensation. Dane v. Jackson, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 566, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Power to tax business out of existence.—Even though a license tax should destroy a business, it would not be invalid or require compensation upon that ground alone. Those who enter upon a business take that risk. There is no constitutional objection to exacting a discouraging rate of taxation as the alternative to giving up a business when the legislature has the full power of taxation. Alaska Fish Salting, etc., Co. v. Smith, (1921) 255 U. S. 44, 41 S. Ct. 219, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

If a tax law is invalid, it follows that to enforce collection of the tax is to take a person's property without due process. J. & A. Frieberg Co. v. Dawson, (W. D. Ky. 1920) 274 Fed. 420.

b. For Public Purposes (p. 861)

Taxation and confiscation of dogs.—Dog owners are not deprived of their property nor of their liberty without due process of law by a state statute under which those desiring to keep dogs must secure licenses from, and pay fees to, a private corporation created by the state to enforce the laws enacted to prevent cruelty to animals, such fees to be used by it for the payment of expenses fairly incurred, and any excess to be retained as compensation for its services in law enforcement. Nichia v. New York, (1920) 254 U. S. 228, 41 S. Ct. 103, 65 U. S., (L. ed.) —, 13 A. L. R. 826 (affirming (1918) 224 N. Y. 637, 121 N. E. 884) wherein the court said: "The validity of the act was questioned upon the ground that it violates the 14th Amendment, § 1, by 'depriving a citizen of his liberty without due process of law; to wit, the liberty of owning and harboring a dog without procuring a license from and paying a fee therefor to the Society, a private corporation.' In Fox v. Mohawk & H. River Humane Soc. (1901) 165 N. Y. 517, 51 L. R. A. 681, 80 Am. St. Rep. 767, 59 N. E. 353, the court of appeals declared a statute essentially the same as chapter 115 before the amendment of 1902 invalid under the state Constitution, because it appropriated public funds for the use of a private corporation, and also because it conferred an exclusive privilege. But the court repudiated the suggestion that the statute deprived dog owners of property without due process, or delegated governmental power to a private corporation. Thereafter (1902) the legislature amended chapter 115, with the evident purpose of meeting objections pointed out in the Fox Case. Thus amended, the law has been upheld. Our only concern is with the suggested Federal question.

"The American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals was incorporated by chapter 489, Laws of New York 1866. 'The purpose of the corporation was to enforce the laws enacted to prevent cruelty to animals.' David v. American Soc. 75 N. C. 362, 366. It has long been recognized by the legislature as a valuable and efficient aid toward the enforcement of those laws. New York Penal Laws, article 16, § 196. The payment of public funds to a similar corporation for assistance in enforcing penal statutes has been declared unobjectionable. People ex rel. State Charities v. New York Soc. 161 N. Y. 232, 239, 250, 55 N. E. 1063.

"Property in dogs is of an imperfect or qualified nature, and they may be subjected to peculiar and drastic police regulations by the state without depriving their owners of any Federal right. Sentell v. New Orleans & C. R. Co., 166 U. S. 698, 41 L. ed. 1169, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 693, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 773; Fox v. Mohawk & H. River Humane Soc. supra. Its power to require those who wish to keep dogs to secure licenses from and pay fees to a public officer is also clear. And when the state, in the reasonable conduct of its own affairs, chooses to intrust the work incident to such licenses and collection of fees to a corporation created by it for the express purpose of aiding in law enforcement, and in good faith appropriates the funds so collected for payment of expenses fairly incurred and just compensation for the valuable services rendered, there is no infringement of any right guaranteed to the individual by the Federal Constitution. Such action does not amount to the taking of one man's property and giving it to another, nor does it deprive dog owners of liberty without due process of law."

To permit state to engage in private business.—An act providing that the state shall engage in the business of manufacturing and selling cement, issuing bonds for the expense of entering into that business does not take property without due process. In re Opinion of Judges, (1920) 43 S. D. 648, 180 N. W. 957.

p. As to Whether Property Within or Outside the State

(1) In General (p. 866)

Tax on profit of foreign corporation earned in state.—Measuring for tax purposes the net profits earned by a foreign manufacturing and trading corporation within the state by taking such proportion of the whole net income as the fair cash value of the corporation's real and tangible personal property within the state bears to the fair cash value of all the real and tangible personal property of such corporation cannot be said to be so inherently arbitrary, nor, as applied to a corporation whose profits were largely earned in a series of transactions, beginning with manufacture in the state, and ending with sale in other states, to produce so unreasonable a result, as to render invalid the state law prescribing such rule, as taxing business outside the state, and hence denying due process of law, where the only showing made in support of this constitutional objection is that but a very small part of the corporation's net receipts was received within the state, while, under the statutory method of apportionment, nearly one half of the corporation's net income is attributable to operations within the state, since the percentage of net profits earned within the state may, none the less, have been even larger than the percentage arrived at by the statutory method. Underwood Typewriter Co. v. Chamberlain, (1920) 254 U. S. 113, 41 S. Ct. 45, 65 U. S., (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 94 Conn. 47, 108 Atl. 154) wherein it was further held that a foreign corporation may not successfully attack as invalid, a state tax applicable alike to all foreign and domestic corporations, measured by the net profits of the corporation earned within the state, on the ground that such corporation had made large permanent investments in the state before the state tax law was enacted.

Computation of proportion of property in state.—Due process of law is not denied by a franchise tax law on the property of a foreign corporation employed in the state providing that for the purposes of this act such corporation shall be deemed to have employed in this state that proportion of its entire capital stock and surplus that its property and assets in this state bears to all its property and assets wherever located. State v. Williams, (1920) 284 Mo. 456, 224 S. W. 822.

z. Succession or Inheritance Tax (p. 875)

Construing a state inheritance tax law as operative when a trust deed for the benefit of the grantor for life, with remainder over at his death, was executed after the statute was passed, but before it was to take effect, infringes no rights under the federal Constitution. Nickel v. Cole, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 467, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

A state statute imposing an estate tax on all property of the decedent upon which no town or city tax has been assessed or upon which no state tax has been paid during the year preceding the decedent's death, does not violate this amendment by depriving the creditors and distributees of the estate of their property without due process of law. Bankers' Trust Co. v. State, (Conn. 1921) 114 Atl. 104.

a1. Income Tax (p. 875)

Distribution of proceeds.—The distribution of the proceeds of a state income tax, conformably to Mass. Gen. Act 1919, chap. 314, among the various towns, cities, and taxing districts of the state to the extent thought by the legislature necessary to supply the loss which such taxing subdivisions would sustain by the withdrawal from their taxing power of the intangible property, the income of which was taxed by the state, such payments to continue until 1928, prior to which date any excess of the income tax fund over these required payments, and beginning with that year and continuing thereafter the whole of that fund, is to be distributed to such subdivisions in proportion to the amount of the state tax imposed upon each for such year, does not violate the due process of law and equal protection of the laws clauses of U. S. Const. 14th Amend., —conceding that such payments may be used by the local subdivisions receiving them, if they so elect, for local proprietary purposes, which may not confer any certain benefit upon taxpayers in other taxing subdivisions, there being nothing to justify the assumption that the several municipalities intend to devote to other than public use any portion of the income tax thus distributed to them, and the tax being uniform in its application to all income within the description of the act of all inhabitants of the state, without regard to the taxing subdivisions in which they may reside. Dane v. Jackson, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 566, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

c1. On Wholesale Dealers in Oil (p. 877)

The excise tax imposed by N. M. Laws 1919, chap. 93, upon the sale and use of gasolene according to the number of gallons sold and used, does not, as applied to domestic sales and use, infringe rights of dealers in such product under the due process of law and equal protection of the laws clauses. Bowman v. Continental Oil Co., (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 606, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

e1. Assessment for Public Improvement

(1) In General (p. 879)

Drainage districts.—In the absence of flagrant abuse or purely arbitrary action, a state may establish drainage districts and tax lands therein for local improvements, and none of such lands may escape liability solely because they will not receive direct benefits. Miller v. Sacramento, etc., Drainage Dist., (1921) 256 U. S. 129, 41 S. Ct. 404, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, dismissing writ of error to review (1920) 182 Cal. 252, 187 Pac. 1041, and denying writ of certiorari.

Assessment according to value.—An assessment of land for drainage according to value rather than according to benefits does not violate this section. In re Bonds of Drainage Dist. No. 4, (Ariz. 1920) 193 Pac. 833.

The Nevada Irrigation District Law does not deny due process of law. In re Walker River Irr. Dist., (Nev. 1921) 195 Pac. 327, following Fallbrook Irr. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 17 S. Ct. 56, 41 U. S. (L. ed.) 369.

Taxing district.—A state legislature may create taxing districts to meet the expense of local improvements, and may fix the basis of taxation without violating U. S. Const. 14th Amend., unless its action is palpably arbitrary or plain abuse; but if the statute providing for the tax is of such a character that there is no reasonable presumption that substantial justice generally will be done, the probability being that the parties will be taxed disproportionately to each other and to the benefit conferred, the law cannot stand against the complaint of one so taxed in fact. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Road Imp. Dist. No. 6, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 604, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1919) 139 Ark. 424, 215 S. W. 656, 217 S. W. 773.

Assessment of railroad right of way for benefits from a street improvement does not deny due process. Grand Rapids v. Grand Trunk R. System, (Mich. 1921) 182 N. W. 424, following Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Barber Asphalt Co., 197 U. S. 430, 25 S. Ct. 466, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 819.

(9) Arbitrary Determination of Taxing District (p. 886)

Arbitrary method of determining area assessed.—A charter which directs "that where tracts of land to be taxed for improvements are divided into lots and blocks the line of the taxation or benefit district shall extend back to the middle line of the block, and that where the tracts are not divided into lots or blocks the line shall extend back 150 feet from the near line of the street" does not deny due process, at least in the absence of any showing of inequality. Dickey v. Seasted, (1920) 283 Mo. 167, 223 S. W. 57.

m1. Notice and Opportunity to Be Heard

(1) In General (p. 889)

Notice with opportunity to contest assessment.—Where a state in levying an assessment on a portion of an interstate bridge within its borders provides a mode of confirming or contesting the charge thus imposed in the ordinary courts of justice, with notice to the person assessed, such assessment is not without due process. People v. St. Louis, (1921) 297 Ill. 199, 130 N. E. 366.

Hearing as to amount.—A statute which, while not affording notice and hearing to all property owners as to the initiation of the proposed improvement, gives them an opportunity to be heard as to the validity and amount of the tax is valid. Gillum v. Rife, (Colo. 1921) 197 Pac. 1017.

(2) In Assessments for Public Improvements

(a) In General (p. 890)

Operation of railroad by state; notice of assessment for deficiency.—Where a statute provides for the operation by the state of certain street railways and for an assessment against certain cities and towns for any deficiency arising from such operation, it is not essential to its validity that it provide for notice and a hearing by the trustees in charge of such railroad before they levy such assessment. Chelsea v. Treasurer, (Mass. 1921) 130 N. E. 397.

(4) Opportunity to Be Heard at Some Stage of Proceedings (p. 894)

Hearing before arbitrators required to agree within limited time.—Due process of law is not afforded a taxpayer where the county board of assessors, conformably to the state tax law, increased the valuation of his property as returned for taxation without notice or hearing, other than notice given after the assessment was made and a hearing in the arbitration provided for in case of the taxpayer's dissatisfaction, and such arbitration failed because the arbitrators could not agree within the ten-day period fixed by law, and hence no majority award could be made, though all believed the assessment was too high. Turner v. Wade, (1920) 254 U. S. 64, 41 S. Ct. 27, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1918) 147 Ga. 666, 95 S. E. 220.

XI. WHO MAY INVOKE CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT

1. In General (p. 903)

Witnesses before grand jury.—A witness duly subpoenaed to testify before a grand jury is not entitled to be heard upon an exception to the jurisdiction of the court, and is not entitled to raise any question about the constitutionality of the act authorizing the investigation or the authority of the grand jury to call before it a witness to ascertain any infraction of such statute. U. S. v. Watson, (N. D. Fla. 1920) 266 Fed. 736.

Nonresident publisher of school books.—Although in order to comply with conditions attached by statute to the purchase and sale of school books by the school officials, it is claimed by a nonresident publisher that it would suffer financial loss, it is not for that reason deprived of any right without due process of law as such plaintiff is not compelled to sell its books to the school authorities and has no right to make a contract of sale to such authorities without the consent of the state. Macmillan Co. v. Johnson, (E. D. Mich. 1920) 269 Fed. 28.

of state funds to settlers on state lands and giving a preference to settlers who have been in the military service in time of war, admitting other persons to share in the loans only where there are no such preferred applicant does not deny equal protection of the laws. Wheeler v. South Dakota Land Settlement Board, (1921) 43 S. D. 551, 181 N. W. 359, 14 A. L. R. 1145.

(3) Individuals Not to be Subject to Discriminating Legislation (p. 925)

Discrimination between nonresident individual defendant and foreign corporate defendant as to giving security.—No denial of the equal protection of the laws results from the provisions of the Delaware foreign attachment laws, under which a nonresident individual defendant is debarred from appearing and defending without first giving special security, while a foreign corporate defendant may appear and answer without giving any security except for the lien of the process upon the property attached. Ownbey v. Morgan, (1921) 256 U. S. 94, 41 S. Ct. 433, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1917) 7 Boyce (Del.) 297, 105 Atl. 838.

IV. THE EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS

4. As Affected by State Action

a. Power to Classify Subjects of Legislation

(1) In General (p. 922)

Limiting use of natural gas taken within certain distance of town or industrial plant.—The equal protection of the laws is not denied by a state statute which makes the location of a well or other source of supply of natural gas within 10 miles of an incorporated town or industrial plant essential to render applicable the prohibition of the statute against the use of natural gas for products where such gas is burned or consumed without fully and actually applying and utilizing the heat therein contained for other manufacturing or domestic uses, and against the sale or disposition of such gas by the owner or lessee of the wells for the purpose of manufacturing or producing carbon or other resultant products from the burning or consumption of such gas unless the heat therein contained is fully and actually applied and utilized for other manufacturing or domestic purposes. Walls v. Midland Carbon Co., (1920) 254 U. S. 300, 41 S. Ct. 118, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

(2) Applicable to All Persons Similarly Situated (p. 924)

Loan of state funds—Preference to war veterans.—A statute providing for the loan

d. Exercise of Police Power

(1) In General (p. 927)

Limitation of rights generally.—A state may, when exercising its police power, consider the relation of rights, and accommodate their coexistence, and, in the interest of the community, limit one right that others may be enjoyed. Walls v. Midland Carbon Co., (1920) 254 U. S. 300, 41 S. Ct. 118, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Legislation suspending right of landlord to recover possession of certain leased premises in certain localities.—There is no unconstitutional discrimination in respect of the cities affected or the character of the buildings, in N. Y. Laws 1920, chaps. 942 and 944, passed in the exercise of the police power in the emergency growing out of the World War, which suspended until November 1, 1922, the right to recover possession of real property occupied for dwelling purposes, although such laws are operative only in a city having a population of one million or more, and in cities in a county adjoining such a city, and do not extend to buildings occupied for business purposes, hotel property, or buildings in course of erection. Marcus Brown Holding Co. v. Feldman, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 465, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (S. D. N. Y. 1290) 269 Fed. 306.

e. State Control Over Court Procedure

(1) In General (p. 931)

Equal protection defined.—Equal protection of the law in its constitutional sense implies that all litigants similarly situated may appeal to the courts both for relief and for defense under like conditions and with like protection and without discrimination. Arizona Commercial Min. Co. v. Iron Cap Copper Co., (1920) 236 Mass. 185, 128 N. E. 4, also holding that the dismissal because of lack of jurisdiction of a suit between mining corporations organized under the laws of another state and conducting mining operations in a third state, did not deny the plaintiff equal protection of the laws where the suit involved a decision as to the title of mining claims in the third state.

l. Corporations, Officers and Stockholders

(1) Individuals and Corporations (p. 968)

Discrimination as to amendment of by-laws.—A statute permitting the amendment of by-laws by a smaller proportion of the stockholders to corporations organized for the operation of irrigation systems under the Carey Act [8 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 698 et seq.] than is permitted in the case of corporations engaged in similar enterprises but which have procured their canal systems from sources other than Carey Act construction companies, is invalid. Crom v. Frahm, (1920) 33 Idaho 314, 193 Pac. 1013.

Requiring examination of officer under penalty of dismissal.—A state statute authorizing dismissal of an action by a foreign corporation for the refusal of an officer thereof to appear within the state for examination and produce the books and papers of the corporation, does not deny equal protection of the law. Kentucky Finance Corp. v. Paramount Auto Exch. Corp., (1920) 171 Wis. 586, 178 N. W. 9.

o. Water Companies (p. 995)

Moving of pipes necessitated by abolition of grade crossing of railroad.—A water company required to bear the entire expense of moving its pipes, as necessitated by the abolition of certain highway grade crossings of a steam railroad, is not denied the equal protection of the laws merely because a street railway company occupying such streets, instead of being charged with the expense of moving its tracks, is charged 10 per cent of the total expense at its crossings. Erie R. Co. v. Public Utility Com'rs, (1921) 254 U. S. 394, 41 S. Ct. 169, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1916) 89 N. J. L. 57, 24, 98 Atl. 13, 28, (1917) 90 N. J. L. 672, 673, 714, 729, 677, 694, 715, 103 Atl. 1052, 1053, 1055, 1051.

(3) Condemnation of Plant (new)

Municipal condemnation under a state public utilities law of a water plant operated under a franchise does not deny the equal protection of the law. Superior Water, etc., Co. v. Superior, (Wis. 1921) 183 N. W. 254.

w. Banking and Trust Companies

(1) Licensing Banking Business (p. 1000)

Prohibiting certain classes from transmitting moneys to foreign countries.—A statute which prohibits natural persons, firms or partnerships from transacting the business of banking or of transmitting money to foreign countries, buying and selling foreign money and receiving money on deposit to be transmitted to foreign countries, but which provides that express, steamship and telegraph companies may continue the business of transmitting money and receiving money to be transmitted, is unconstitutional as depriving of the equal protection of the laws persons engaging in such business. Wedesweiler v. Brundage, (1921) 297 Ill. 228, 130 N. E. 520.

a1. Manufacture and Sale of Goods

(1) Anti-trust Laws

(a) In General (p. 1006)

Enforcement of Act which is partially suspended.—That a state anti-trust act is suspended as to some kinds of business by the Lever Act (1918 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. p. 181), does not make its enforcement, as to a business with respect to which it is not thus suspended, a denial of the equal protection of the laws. Nugent v. Robertson, (Miss. 1921) 88 So. 895.

c1. Relating to Local Government

(7) Classification of Cities

(e) Restricting Use of Automobiles (p. 1023)

Ordinance requiring fenders on certain motor trucks.—An ordinance requiring motor vehicles designed for carrying freight and merchandise, of 1,500 pounds' capacity or more, to be equipped with a fender at the front end in such manner and of such design as to prevent injury to pedestrians, unreasonably discriminates between persons similarly situated and is in violation of this constitutional provision. Consumers' Co. v. Chicago, (1921) 298 Ill. 339, 131 N. E. 628.

e1. Relation of Employer and Employee

(2) Regulating Payment of Wages

(a) In General (p. 1031)

Penalty for failure to pay wages promptly.—A statute imposing 10% per day as liquidated damages for the failure of certain kinds of corporations to pay wages promptly is invalid as class legislation. Davidow v. Wadsworth Mfg. Co., (1920) 211 Mich. 90, 178 N. W. 776, 12 A. L. R. 605.

(4) Workmen's Compensation Act

(a) In General (p. 1033)

Act compulsory as to one employment and elective as to others.—A state may consistently with the due process of law and equal protection of the laws clauses of the federal Constitution, enact a general workmen's compensation law applicable to all employees, and make it compulsory as to one hazardous employment (coal mining) and elective as to all others, except railway employees engaged in train service, who are excluded.

The inclusion within the terms of a state workmen's compensation act of all employees of coal mining companies, whether engaged in the hazardous part of the business or not, does not render repugnant to the due process of law and equal protection of the laws clauses of the federal Constitution the classification made by that act, which makes it compulsory as to all coal mining companies while as to all other private business enterprises within the state, except railway employees in train service, who are excluded, it is purely optional. Lower Vein Coal Co. v. Industrial Board, (1921) 255 U. S. 144, 41 S. Ct. 252, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

ff. Regulating Pursuit of Occupations

(5) Barbering (p. 1040)

"In so far as the practice of barbering is concerned, the public welfare and comfort—outside of, and beyond what is included in its health and safety—are so insignificant as not to lend color to any right claimed under the police power of the state." Timmons v. Morris, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 271 Fed. 721, wherein it was held a system of grading on examinations for licenses under which "it is possible, . . . for a man to pass and be licensed, though he has only got 4 points out of the 24 in those subjects affecting the public health, provided he is excellent in the nonessentials. in so far as health is concerned; while the applicant who is perfect in so far as matters affecting health are concerned, and yet 'poor' in deportment, razor honing, and time taken in the work—matters that can in no sense be held to touch the public health or safety—would be deprived of the right to practice barbering," clearly had no substantial relation to the public health and, therefore, was not a valid exercise of the police power.

x2. State Taxation

(1) Equality

(a) In General (p. 1057)

To same effect as original annotation, see People v. St. Louis, (1921) 297 Ill. 199, 130 N. E. 366.

(b) Power of Classification

aa. In General (p. 1058)

Additional transfer tax on investments escaping fair share of tax burden.—The additional transfer tax of 5 per cent imposed by § 221b of the New York Tax Law, upon certain bonds and other obligations held by a resident decedent at his death, upon which neither the general property tax nor an optional stamp tax had been paid for a fixed period, does not deny the equal protection of the laws. Watson v. State Comptroller, (1920) 254 U. S. 122, 41 S. Ct. 43, 65 U. S.

(L. ed.) —, (affirming (1919) 226 N. Y. 384, 123 N. E. 758) wherein it was further held that a property tax cannot be said to be imposed by a state statute exacting an additional transfer tax upon certain bonds and other obligations held by a resident decedent at his death, upon which neither the general property tax nor an optional stamp tax has been paid for a fixed period, merely because the existence of the statute may induce the owners of such property to present it for taxation, nor can the law be deemed to impose a penalty merely because the decedent's estate may, under it, be required to pay more for taxes than the deceased would have paid if he had presented his property for taxation. The court in the course of its opinion said: "The occasion and the purpose of the statute are shown by the court of appeals. An owner of investments is not required either to list them for assessment locally under the General Property Tax Law, or to present them for stamping under the Investment Tax Law. Whether the investments of a resident are taxed during his life depends either upon his own will or upon the vigilance and discretion of the local assessors. This condition led to loss of revenue by the state, and to inequality in taxation among its citizens. To remedy both evils this additional transfer tax was imposed upon investments of a decedent which had wholly escaped taxation. It is insisted that the tax is discriminatory because under it other property of the same kind, bequeathed to persons standing in the same relationship to the decedent, will not be taxed. But the power to classify for purposes of taxation is fully established. The executors admit, as they must, that a classification is reasonable if made with respect to the kind of property transferred; or, to the amount or value of property transferred; or, to the relationship of the transferees; or, to the character of the transferee,—for instance, as engaged in charity. Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 300. 42 L. ed. 1037, 1045, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Billings v. Illinois, 188 U. S. 97, 47 L. ed. 400, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 272; Campbell v. California, 200 U. S. 87, 50 L. ed. 382, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 182. But their list does not exhaust the possibilities of legal classification. See Beers v. Glynn, 211 U. S. 477, 484, 53 L. ed. 290, 293, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186; Keeney v. New York, 222 U. S. 525, 56 L. ed. 299, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1139, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 105; Maxwell v. Bugbee, 250 U. S. 525, 63 L. ed. 1124, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 2. Compare New York ex rel. Hatch v. Reardon, 204 U. S. 152, 51 L. ed. 415, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 188, 9 Ann. Cas. 736. Any classification is permissible which has a reasonable relation to some permitted end of governmental action. It is not necessary, as the plaintiff in error seems to contend, that the basis of the classification must be deducible from the nature of the things classified,—here the right to receive property by devolution."

Classifying pipe line companies.—The classification, for the purpose of taxation, of pipe line companies engaged in the business of transporting oil and gas into those whose systems are under 10 miles in length and those whose systems are over 10 miles in length, is founded upon a substantial distinction, and is not violative of that clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States guaranteeing to all persons the equal protection of the laws. Eureka Pipe Line Co. v. Hallanan, (W. Va. 1921) 105 S. E. 506.

Discriminating between manufacturers of oil from different kinds of fish.—There is nothing in the federal Constitution that prevents a territorial license tax upon the manufacture of fish oil, fertilizer, and fish meal, in whole or in part, from herring, even though the tax be greater than that imposed upon similar use of other fish, or upon the offal of salmon. Alaska Fish Salting, etc., Co. v. Smith, (1921) 255 U. S. 44, 41 S. Ct. 219, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said: "The complainant alleges that the tax will prohibit and confiscate the plaintiff's business, which is that of manufacturing fish oil, fertilizer, fish meal, and by-products from herring, either in whole or in part; that the tax unreasonably discriminates against the plaintiff, as it levies no tax upon the producers of fish oil, etc., from other fish, and is otherwise extortionate; and that it contravenes the act of Congress in lack of uniformity and in exceeding 1 per centum of the actual value of the plaintiff's property. The prophecies of destruction and the allegations of discrimination as compared with similar manufactures from salmon are denied by the attorney general for Alaska, the latter denial being based upon a comparison of the statutes, which, of course, is open. We are content, however, to assume for the purposes of decision that, not to speak of other licenses, the questioned acts do bear more heavily upon the use of herring for oil and fertilizer than they do upon the use of other fish. But there is nothing in the Constitution to hinder that. If Alaska deems it for its welfare to discourage the destruction of herring for manure, and to preserve them for food for man or for salmon, and to that end imposes a greater tax upon that part of the plaintiff's industry than upon similar use of other fish or of the offal of salmon, it hardly can be said to be contravening a Constitution that has known protective tariffs for a hundred years."

bb. Systematic Undervaluation of Other Property (p. 1059)

Railroad property.—Where tangibles, including the tangibles of railway companies, in a county, are, as a result of a settled practice or custom systematically assessed below their true value, and the intangibles of the railway companies assessed at their true value, the railway company against which such actual value is assessed is entitled to enjoin the collection of so much of the tax against it as was based upon the assessment of its intangibles at a higher proportionate value than that of other property within the state, upon the ground such assessment is in violation of section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution, guaranteeing equal protection of the law. Druesdow v. Baker, (Tex. 1921) 229 S. W. 493. In that case however the court added: "It is equally well settled that if the intangible assets of a railway company are assessed at their full value and its tangible assets at less than their true value and below the value of the tangible property generally of the county, and such overvaluation of intangibles is equalized by the undervaluation of tangibles, as a result of which it is called upon to pay no more than others, it is not entitled to equitable relief because one class of its property is valued above another."

(3) Discriminating Between Residents and Nonresidents

(c) Discriminating Between Domestic and Foreign Corporations (p. 1061)

License tax for sale of automobiles.—A state act imposing a license tax upon all manufacturers or persons or corporations engaged in selling automobiles in the state unconstitutionally discriminates against non-resident manufacturers doing business in the state through local sales agents, where it reduces the tax to one fifth of its normal amount if the manufacturer of the automobiles has three fourths of his assets invested in the bonds of the state or of some of its municipalities, or in other property situated therein and returned for taxation. Bethlehem Motor Corp. v. Flynt, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 571, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Excise tax on capital stock of foreign corporations.—A state statute imposing an excise tax on foreign corporations and providing that for the purpose of assessing such tax upon corporations whose stock was issued without a par value of one hundred dollars shall be considered par, does not contravene this amendment. American Uniform Co. v. Com., (Mass. 1921) 129 N. E. 622, wherein the court said: "We are of the opinion that there is nothing in the statute here assailed in conflict with the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. It was said in District of Columbia v. Brooks, 214 U. S. 138, 150, 29 Sup. Ct. 560, 563 (53 L. ed. 941) that—

"The Fourteenth Amendment is unqualified in its declaration that a state shall not deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. Passing on that amendment, we have repeatedly decided—so often that a citation of the cases is unnecessary—that it does not take from the states the power of classification. And also that such classification need not be either logically appropriate or scientifically accurate. The problems which are met in the government of human beings are different from those involved in the examination of the objects of the physical world and assigning them to their proper associates. A wide range of discretion, therefore, is necessary in legislation to make it practical, and we have often said that the courts cannot be made a refuge from ill-advised, unjust or oppressive laws.

"The principle thus stated seems to us to govern the case at bar. The present statute is not a property tax and is not regulative of interstate commerce. Baltic Mining Co. v. Commonwealth of Massachusetts, 231 U. S. 68, 34 Sup. Ct. 15, 58 L. ed. 127. It is not discriminatory or unequal in the sense of denying to the petitioner the protection of equal laws. Absolute equality is impossible even in the operation of laws for the taxation of property. It is even more difficult to arrive at exact uniformity in the operation of excise laws. That is not required by the Constitution. It is enough if they are not unreasonable in the light of all the conditions to which they are likely to apply. The present statute applies evenly to all foreign corporations seeking to avail themselves of the privilege of doing a domestic business within the borders of Massachusetts and having capital stock without par value. Its design is to put the corporations having capital stock without par value as nearly as may be on the same footing touching excises as those having a capital stock with a par value. The petitioner is not singled out as a special object for hostile or discriminating legislation. It is not easy to perceive any more equitable way of dealing with a somewhat puzzling and difficult question than that adopted by the legislatures. In any event we think it cannot be said that this statute is unequal in its operation, or that it deprives the plaintiff of its property without due process of law."

(7) Exemptions from Taxation

(a) In General (p. 1065)

Waiver of invalidity of statute.—A taxpayer by writing "none" in his income tax return in the blank appropriate for claim of exemption waives the right to urge that a state income tax law is invalid because it discriminates in the matter of exemptions between residents and nonresidents. State v. Phelps, (1920) 172 Wis. 147, 178 N. W. 471.

(10) Assessments for Local Improvements

(a) In General (p. 1069)

Discrimination against railroad in assessments for highway improvement.—A state statute which sanctions assessing a railway company for benefits from a highway improvement upon a theory which, disregarding area and distance from the highway, assumes that 9.7 miles of railway in a purely farming section, treated as an aliquot part of the railway system, will receive benefits amounting to $67,900 from the construction of 11.2 miles of gravel road, while farm lands and town lots are assessed according to area and position, and wholly without regard to their value, the improvements thereon, or their present or prospective use, is invalid as producing a discrimination against the railway company so palpable and arbitrary as to amount to a denial of the equal protection of the laws. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Road Imp. Dist. No. 6, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 604, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1919) 139 Ark. 424, 215 S. W. 656, 217 S. W. 773.

(11) Railroad Companies

(a) In General (p. 1071)

Company taxed upon its own figures.—A railway company taxed upon its own figures, in accordance with the statute, cannot complain that it was taxed disproportionately, as compared with other railways. St. Louis-San Francisco R. Co. v. Middlekamp, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 489, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

(16) Of Franchises

(a) In General (p. 1074)

Until the highest court of the state decides otherwise, the Federal Supreme Court will assume that there is no such unconstitutional inequality of treatment in the taxation of franchises of domestic corporations between corporations with stock having a stated par value and those having no stated par value for their stock as is asserted to exist on the theory that the state court having decided that corporations with stock having no stated par value can be admitted to do business in the state all such corporations fall within the statutory provision imposing a tax of only $25 upon foreign corporations without a capital stock. St. Louis-San Francisco R. Co. v. Middlekamp, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 489, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

(21) Of Property of Domestic Corporations Situated Outside State (p. 1075)

A franchise tax whereby a domestic corporation is assessed on the entire amount of its capital stock does not infringe this section, even as applied to a corporation which has property outside the state and which is therefore placed at a disadvantage as compared to foreign corporations which are taxed only on the basis of their property within the state. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. State, (1920) 204 Ala. 80, 85 So. 424.

(24) Graduated Income Tax (p. 1076)

Distribution of proceeds.—The distribution of the proceeds of a state income tax, conformably to Mass. Gen. Act 1919, chap.

314, among the various towns, cities, and taxing districts of the state to the extent thought by the legislature necessary to supply the loss which such taxing would sustain by the withdrawal from their taxing power of the intangible property, the income of which was taxed by the state, such payments to continue until 1928, prior to which date any excess of the income tax fund over these required payments, and beginning with that year and continuing thereafter the whole of that fund, is to be distributed to such subdivisions in proportion to the amount of the state tax imposed upon each for such year, does not violate the due process of law and equal protection of the laws clauses of U. S. Const. 14th Amend., conceding that such payments may be used by the local subdivisions receiving them, if they so elect, for local proprietary purposes, which may not confer any certain benefit upon taxpayers in other taxing subdivisions, there being nothing to justify the assumption that the several municipalities intend to devote to other than public use any portion of the income tax thus distributed to them, and the tax being uniform in its application to all income within the description of the act of all inhabitants of the state, without regard to the taxing subdivisions in which they may reside. Dane v. Jackson, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 566, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Vol. XI, p. 1110, amend. 16.

"Income" as including gain from isolated sale of personal property.—The gain derived from a single, isolated sale of personal property which has appreciated in value during a series of years is income within the meaning of this Amendment. Merchants' Loan, etc., Co. v. Smietanka, (1921) 255 U. S. 509, 41 S. Ct. 386, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —; Eldorado Coal, etc., Co. v. Mager, (1921) 255 U. S. 522, 41 S. Ct. 390, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —; Goodrich v. Edwards, (1921) 255 U. S. 527, 41 S. Ct. 390, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —; Walsh v. Brewster, (1921) 255 U. S. 536, 41 S. Ct. 392, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

"Income" as including stock dividend.—To the same effect as the annotation under this catchline in 1920 Supp. 882 see Walsh v. Brewster, (1921) 255 U. S. 536, 41 S. Ct. 392, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing in part and affirming in part (D. C. Conn. 1920) 268 Fed. 207.

Vol. XI, p. 1112, amend. 17.

Application to Federal Corrupt Practices Act.—The validity of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act (see 3 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 120), antedating the 17th Amendment, must be tested by powers possessed by Congress at the time of its enactment. An after-acquired power cannot ex proprio vigore, validate a statute void when enacted. Newberry v. U. S., (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 469, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

 1. Power of congress.
 2. Power of states.
 3. Power of municipalities.
 4. "Concurrent power."
 5. "Appropriate legislation."

For National Prohibition Act enacted to enforce this Amendment, see 1919 Supp. 202; and for annotations to such Act see 1920 Supp. 590 and this Supplement, supra, p. 535.

I. CONSTITUTIONALITY

Constitutionality—As affected by resolution proposing Amendment.—This Amendment is not invalid for the reason that the congressional resolution proposing it declared that it should be inoperative unless ratified within seven years. Dillon v. Gloss, (1921) 256 U. S. —, 41 S. Ct. 510, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (N. D. Cal. 1920) 262 Fed. 563.

Adoption of Amendment.—"A recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States [see National Prohibition Cases, (1920) 253 U. S. 350, 1920 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. 848] has foreclosed all discussion of this question in holding that the referendum provisions of state Constitutions and statutes cannot be applied consistently with the Constitution of the United States in the ratification or rejection of amendments to that Constitution, and that the Eighteenth Amendment, prohibiting the manufacture, etc., of intoxicating liquors for beverages, is within the power to amend reserved by article 5 of the United States Constitution; in other words, that the 'Legislatures of three-fourths of the . . . states,' as the words are employed in that article (5), has reference to legislative bodies as they were known at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, and not by any other body or the people generally. The action of the respondents, therefore, in attempting to refer the legislative ratification of the Eighteenth Amendment to the people, was without authority, and the trial court was in error in so ruling." Carson v. Sullivan, (1920) 284 Mo. 353, 223 S. W. 571.

Due process of law is not abrogated by the Eighteenth Amendment. U. S. v. Crossen, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 264 Fed. 459.

II. SCOPE AND EFFECT OF AMENDMENT

1. In General

Date of ratification.—This amendment was ratified January 28, 1919, and took effect January 29, 1920. Regal Drug Corp. v. Wardell, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1921) 273 Fed. 182.

Amendment as in harmony with Fourth and Fifth Amendments.—The Eighteenth

Amendment to the federal Constitution is as sacred as the Fourth and Fifth Amendments, but no more so. They stand on an equality. There is no inconsistency between them. U. S. v. Rykowski, (S. D. Ohio 1920) 267 Fed. 866.

Effect of Amendment — In general.—The Amendment "rendered obsolete or repealed all earlier law that applied to, sanctioned and taxed distilled spirits for beverage purposes." Violette v. Walsh, (D. C. Mont. 1921) 272 Fed. 1014.

Instead of granting a right, it is a limitation on privilege. Woods v. Seattle, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 270 Fed. 315.

As to the effect of section 2 of the Amendment, it has been said:

"The truth is, in my judgment, that too much concern seems to have been manifested because of the incorporation of section 2 into the Eighteenth Amendment. The power thereby sought to be conferred upon Congress would have been conferred by the adoption and ratification of section 1 alone; a power being accorded to the federal government, Congress, even in the absence of an express grant, would be authorized to legislate in the exertion of such power. Paragraph 18 of section 8 of the first article of the federal Constitution specifically authorizes Congress —

"to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the government of the United States, or any department or official thereof."

"Obviously this section would authorize Congress to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the Constitution or any amendment thereof. As was said by Hamilton in the Thirty-First number of the Federalist, respecting the particular provision just quoted, together with the one contained in the second clause of article 6:

"... It may be affirmed with perfect confidence that the constitutional operation of the intended government would be precisely the same, if these clauses were entirely obliterated, as if they were repeated in every article. They are only declaratory of a truth which would have resulted by necessary and unavoidable implication from the very act of constituting a federal government, and vesting it with certain specified powers."

"So, too, the authority of the several states was not materially changed by the inclusion of the second section. As heretofore shown, they never surrendered their power, originally possessed in virtue of their sovereignty, to prohibit effectually within their respective limits the traffic in intoxicants. They still have that power. They merely granted to the federal government the same right within its domain. In addition, by the positive terms of the grant to themselves of 'concurrent power,' they were authorized to legislate in enforcement of the amendment — a lesser power, strictly speaking, than they already possessed, in virtue of their own sovereignty — and, if they wished, to enforce in their own courts the prohibitions and penalties to be provided by Congress for enforcement in the federal courts." Ex p. Crookshank, (S. D. Cal. 1921) 269 Fed. 980.

On Fifth Amendment.—As to the effect of the Eighteenth Amendment on the Fifth Amendment, it has been said:

"But it is contended that the Fifth Amendment has not been abrogated by the Eighteenth Amendment. Broadly speaking, this is, of course, true. The adoption of an amendment to the organic law, which does not expressly change or repeal a former provision, necessitates construction of the effect of such amendment upon the older provision. A constitutional amendment cannot be unconstitutional. If it is in conflict with an older provision, so that the two cannot be reconciled or construed together, clearly the older one must yield at the tangent of conflict to the newer law. Courts have found themselves compelled to adopt, for the construction of constitutional provisions, rules strikingly similar to the rules used in construing statutes. It may be a matter of regret that age-old provisions making for the liberty of action of the citizen have been encroached upon, and to a degree whittled away; but this is not a matter wherein the courts may relieve. It is a political question, and not a judicial one.

"It follows that, if a newer constitutional amendment in point of time of adoption permits, as the Eighteenth Amendment obviously does, the passage of a law which forbids the transportation of whisky, a law which is well within the constitutional grant of power on this point is not unconstitutional, even though the effect of such a law may be to encroach upon the rights given by older provisions of the organic law, and theretofore deemed to be inalienable." Corneli v. Moore, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 267 Fed. 456.

On trademark rights.— "The Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution and the laws for its enforcement, relating to the subject of prohibition, have compelled transition from the production and sale of alcoholic beverages to nonalcoholic beverages, which calls for liberal protection of trademark rights affected by this enforced change." Sexton v. Schoenhofen Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1921) 273 Fed. 327.

On obligation of lessee.—"A lessee is not released from liability for rent under a lease of premises 'to be used and occupied as a café and for no other purpose whatsoever' merely because he was subsequently deprived of their use for the sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes for the remainder of the term by the Eighteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution and the Volstead Act [1919 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. 202]: it appearing that no provision was made in the lease for such a contingency." Proprietor's Realty Co. v. Wohltmann, (N. J. 1921) 112 Atl. 410. The court further said:

"By the lease the use of the premises was limited to café purposes. The word 'café' was originally a French word meaning 'a coffee house,' but the word as now ordinarily and popularly used in English means a restaurant or house for refreshments.

"In construing a written contract the words employed will be given their ordinary and popularly accepted meaning, in the absence of anything to show that they were used in a different sense. In the present case there is nothing to show that the parties used the word in any other than its popular and ordinary meaning.

"It follows, therefore, that under such a lease refreshments of all kinds allowed by law might be kept and sold.

"No doubt the parties contemplated, among other things, the sale of both intoxicating liquors and nonintoxicating beverages, because the lessee covenanted in the lease, among other things, 'to strictly comply with all national, state, municipal, or other laws, ordinances, regulations, and rules of any kind governing the possession, sale, ownership or handling of intoxicating liquors or beverages of any kind that the lessee may sell, own, have possession of, or handle.' But such intention was of course contingent upon such sale continuing to be lawful. This is to be inferred, not only from the language used, but from the fact, of course known to them, that the right to sell intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes then rested in the discretion of public officers, and above all was subject to federal and state control.

"Since neither the Eighteenth Amendment nor the Volstead Act deprived the lessee of the right to keep and sell non-intoxicating beverages and refreshments, we are called upon to deal only with a case where the lessee was subsequently deprived of the use of the premises for one only of the several purposes contemplated by the lease, and we limit our discussion and decision to such a case. Now the general rule is that, where the contract does not restrict the use of the leased premises to a single purpose, it is not invalidated by a subsequent enactment prohibiting the use for one of the several purposes contemplated by the lease. Pertinent cases are collected in a useful note in 7 A. L. R. 836.

"This rule proceeds upon the theory that, since such leases are for more than one purpose, the depriving of the lessee of one or more less than all of the purposes contemplated does not deprive him of the beneficial use of the leased property; he being still entitled to use the premises for the carrying on of the unrestricted part of the purposes contemplated by the lease. . . .

"Coming now to the application of the rule to the present case, it will be seen that the lessee has not been entirely deprived of the beneficial interest which the lease contemplated. The sale of intoxicating liquors was not the only use to which the property was agreed to be devoted. It was in legal effect leased for the double purposes of the sale of intoxicating liquors and the sale and service of nonintoxicating beverages and refreshments, and there is no prohibition against its continued use for the latter object. These lines of business were not identical or inseparable. There being, consequently, a serviceable use for which the property is still available consistently with the limitations of the demise, the lessee is not in a position to assert that he is totally deprived of the benefit of the tenancy. It is further to be observed that, while the impossibility of obtaining a license for the sale of intoxicating liquors on the rented premises during the whole of the term of the lease might have been reasonably anticipated, no provision was made in the agreement for the relief of the lessee in such a contingency." See also Goldberg v. Callender, (Conn. 1921) 113 Atl. 170.

Property in intoxicating liquors.—The courts everywhere, in dealing with property rights in whisky before the adoption and ratification of the Eighteenth Amendment, uniformly recognized the existence of such rights. Cornell v. Moore, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 267 Fed. 456.

2. Effect on State Statutes

Amendment as repealing state statutes.—In general.—"There is nothing in the amendment indicating an intention to repeal or supersede the legislation of the several states, whenever the enforcement of such legislation would aid in carrying into effect the provisions of the amendment." State v. Hartley, (1921) 115 S. C. 524, 106 S. E. 766; Shreveport v. Marx, (1920) 148 La. 31, 86 So. 602.

A state statute prohibiting having liquor in possession for the purpose of sale was not repealed by the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment and the enactment of the Volstead Act. State v. Fore, (1920) 180 N. C. 744, 105 S. E. 334, followed in State v. Muse, (1921) 181 N. C. 506, 107 S. E. 320. See to the same effect Scroggs v. State, (1920) 150 Ga. 753, 105 S. E. 363; Smith v. State, (1920) 150 Ga. 755, 105 S. E. 364.

A state statute forbidding sale of intoxicants survives this provision and the federal statute enacted to enforce it. Alexander v. State, (1921) 148 Ark. 491, 230 S. W. 548.

The Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and the "national prohibition act," popularly known as the Volstead Act, do not supersede or abrogate the existing state law known as the prohibition act, approved March 28, 1917 (Act Ex. Sess. 1917, p. 7). Jones v. Hicks, (1920) 150 Ga. 657, 104 S. E. 771, 11 A. L. R. 1315.

A state statute prohibiting sales of intoxicating liquor without a license and providing a penalty for the violation thereof is not abrogated by this Amendment but remains valid and enforceable. Com. v. Nickerson, (1920) 236 Mass. 281, 128 N. E. 273, 10 A. L. R. 1568. See also Ulman v. State, (1921) 137 Md. 642, 113 Atl. 124, wherein it was said: "Certainly there is no conflict so far as the state law applies to sales for nonbeverage purposes. Because it permitted the license of sales for beverage purposes also when such sales were not prohibited by the federal Constitution, and because such licenses can no longer be issued, it does not follow that the whole law has been abrogated. On the contrary, it is not unreasonable to suppose the Legislature would have enacted laws regulating the liquor business and providing for a revenue from such sales as would have been permissible if the Eighteenth Amendment had then been in force. One of the ways of exercising control over the business by the state and preventing clandestine and illegal sales would be to enforce the prohibition feature of the existing license laws, the effect of which would be to punish every one selling without a license whether for beverage or nonbeverage purposes. The inhibition being against any sale without a license, all sales are covered, both those permitted and those prohibited by the Eighteenth Amendment. But even if it were probable that the Legislature of Maryland would not have enacted the existing liquor license laws or any part of them if it could have foreseen the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment, that could not be taken into consideration in determining the question now before us. Doubtless many statutes would not be enacted if happenings of the future could be foreseen."

But compare State v. Green, (1921) 148 La. 376, 86 So. 919, where the court said regarding the repeal of such a state statute: "Act 66 of 1902, by prohibiting the selling of intoxicating liquors without a license, implies the right of any and every person to obtain the license. Such a law, if enacted subsequent to the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment, would not be 'appropriate legislation.' It would be absolutely violative of the amendment. The statute is altogether inconsistent with the constitutional amendment, and is therefore without effect."

Statute setting up different standard as to liquor.—"Under the existing laws, should an effort be made to enjoin the officers of the United States government from prosecuting in the state of Texas an individual who dealt in an intoxicating liquor fit for beverage which contained more than one-half of 1 per cent., the case of Rhode Island v. Palmer would be a conclusive authority against the issuance of the injunction. The impotence of the state, in view of the federal law, to render lawful the manufacture, sale, or transportation of a beverage containing more than one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol does not imply that the state, in the exercise of its judgment, could not elect to punish persons who dealt in intoxicants containing 1 per cent. or more of alcohol. Its refusal to punish where the percentage of alcohol was less than 1 per cent. would not obstruct or impede the right of the federal government to do so under its own law. The prosecution by the state of those who disobeyed its mandate with reference to intoxicants containing 1 per cent. or more of alcohol would conduce to make effective the prohibition declared in the amendment to the national Constitution." See p. Gilmore, (1921) 88 Tex. Crim. 529, 228 S. W. 196.

Prohibition amendment as binding on legislative bodies, courts, etc.—To same effect as 1920 Supplement annotation, p. 863, see Jones v. Cutting, (Mass. 1921) 130 N. E. 271, holding that the fact that certain parts of a state statute are void because in conflict with this amendment does not invalidate the whole statute where the valid and enforceable parts of it are so independent of the inoperative portions as to lead to the conclusion that they would have been enacted apart from the latter, and the several sections of the statute are not so mutually dependent upon each other as to require the belief that they were intended to be an indivisible unit.

The relation of state and federal regulations to each other was stated in Allen v. Com., (Va. 1921) 106 S. E. 589, as follows: "We think that there can be no conflict between the federal and state legislation on the subject under consideration so long as neither state nor federal government attempts to interdict the other from dealing with the conduct in question as federal or state offenses, respectively, as the case may be, and where the legislation of the state is confined to punishing the conduct as state offenses and the legislation of the federal government is confined to punishing the same conduct as federal offenses, neither undertaking to nullify the laws of the other enacted and operating as the expression of their edicts, respectively, promulgating the provisions as to what shall be offenses against the respective sovereignties and the punishments therefor."

III. "CONCURRENT POWER" OF CONGRESS AND STATES TO ENFORCE AMENDMENT BY "APPROPRIATE LEGISLATION"

1. Power of Congress

Power of Congress — In general.—"Practically the effect of the Eighteenth Amendment was to confer on Congress the same powers to deal with the manufacture, sale, and transportation of intoxicating liquors intrastate as it formerly possessed interstate, and also to confer on Congress the same police powers therein, and in any state, that the several states themselves had within their own territorial limits, on the same subjects, before the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment. Taking this view, which is a hurried expression and construction of a far-reaching condition, and of a far-reaching statute, it follows that what a state could do within its own territorial limits before the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment to stamp out the manufacture, sale, and transportation of liquor, Congress may now do.

"It follows that this is true, not only as to interstate commerce, but as to intrastate commerce. If a state could, as a part of its police powers, in furtherance of its efforts to prevent the manufacture, sale, and transportation of intoxicating liquors enjoin the use of houses, premises, and places of manufacture and sale as a common nuisance, Congress may now likewise pass a law to enjoin within any state such things as common nuisances." U. S. v. Cohen, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 268 Fed. 420.

"The power conferred on Congress by section 2 of the Eighteenth Amendment is plenary in its nature, and commits to Congress the discretion to determine the legislation necessary and appropriate to enforce the provisions of section 1 of this constitutional amendment. Unless the enactment has no substantial relation to the enforcement of the constitutional prohibition of the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from, the United States and all territories subject to the jurisdiction thereof, for beverage purposes, a court has no power to determine the wisdom of the enactment or challenge the manner of the exercise by Congress of the authority and discretion confided to it by the second section of this constitutional amendment." Rose v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 245.

Legislation must lend to aid enforcement.

"Any legislation enacted by Congress, pursuant to the amendment, must be calculated to enforce it by appropriate means, and not to 'defeat or thwart the prohibition' contained therein. Rhode Island v. Palmer, supra. For the same reason, any legislation enacted by the state, or any instrumentality exerting the power of the state, must be in aid of the enforcement of the amendment or in furtherance of the prohibition therein commanded; the several states have lost the power to do otherwise." Ex p. Crookshank, (S. D. Cal. 1921) 269 Fed. 980.

Intrastate transportation of liquor.—Since the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment Congress can deal not only with interstate, but also with intrastate transportation of liquor. Street v. Lincoln Safe Deposit Co., (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 267 Fed. 706.

Places where liquor may be possessed.—

Under the police power delegated by the Eighteenth Amendment Congress has the right to prohibit any transportation of liquors and in order to reduce the necessity for transportation to a minimum it has the power to legislate as to the places where liquor may be lawfully possessed. Street v. Lincoln Safe Deposit Co., (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 267 Fed. 706.

Invasion of police power of state.—"In the enforcement of the powers conferred by the Eighteenth Amendment Congress may invade the field of the police power of the state, and its legislation may accomplish the same or similar purposes theretofore accomplished by state legislation. This results, not because the police power of the state is superseded, but because the exercise of the constitutional power has taken Congress into the field formerly occupied exclusively by state legislation. This does not mean that the police power of the state, in whole or in part, has been taken from the state, nor that the police power has been vested in the United States. The United States may not exercise the police power as such within the state, for it 'lacks the police power.' This was reserved to the states by the Tenth Amendment; the state does not act under the police power upon an implied authority to exercise a power delegated to Congress until such time as Congress shall see fit to act. Hamilton v. Ky. Distilleries Co., 251 U. S. 147, 40 Sup. Ct. 106, 64 L. ed. 194; Ex parte Guerra (Vt.) 110 Atl. 224. The National Prohibition Act has not deprived our state of its right to exercise its police power in the regulation and restriction of the liquor traffic.

"Section 1 of the Eighteenth Amendment 'invalidates every legislative act—whether by Congress, by a state legislature, or by a territorial assembly—which authorizes or sanctions what the sections prohibit.' National Prohibition Cases, 253 U. S. 350, 40 Sup. Ct. 486, 588, 64 L. ed. 946. Unless the state's exercise of that power conflicts with the constitutional grant or with the act of Congress passed in enforcement of the grant, its authority to act within its police power is supreme." State v. Ceriani, (Conn. 1921) 113 Atl. 316.

"In the practical exercise of the police power prohibiting the liquor traffic, any conflict between the exercise of such power by the federal government and that by a state government would have to amount to repugnancy or conflict of such a direct and positive nature as that 'the two acts could not be reconciled or consistently stand together.'" Ex p. Crookshank, (S. D. Cal. 1921) 269 Fed. 980.

2. Power of States

Power of states, in general.—The prohibiting by national legislation of traffic in liquor with more than one-half of one per centum of alcohol by volume does not prevent the state, or the city within the granted police power, to decide upon measures that are needful for the protection of its people by prohibiting possession or delivery of intoxicants fit for beverage purposes, under the guise of innocent preparations not within the National Prohibition Act. Woods v. Seattle, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 270 Fed. 315.

The state may by appropriate legislation exert its power to enforce article 18, either by new legislation or appropriate existing legislation. Neither article 18 nor the Congress sought to destroy any existing remedies by a state to curb the drink evil, and where existing remedies are provided by a state, available for the enforcement of article 18, and in harmony with the Prohibition Act, the power of the state, through its courts, may be invoked, and a conviction in a state court for conduct which is in violation of the Prohibition Act, is a bar to a prosecution in the federal courts. It seems manifest that it was not the intent that a person should be punished by the state and federal law for the same offense. U. S. v. Peterson, (W. D. Wash. 1920) 268 Fed. 864.

As to the effect of the adoption of this amendment on the power of the states it has been said that it may not "be maintained with success that in the adoption and ratification of the Eighteenth Amendment the several states were surrendering any of the powers theretofore possessed by them, respecting their own jurisdiction to prescribe effective prohibition of that traffic. In all that was done, they were simply conferring upon the federal government the like power to prohibit, which theretofore, in virtue of its organization and the character of the powers reserved to the states, it had not possessed. Hamilton v. Distilleries Co., 251 U. S. 146, 156, 40 Sup. Ct. 106, 64 L. ed. —. In other words, there was a surrendering by the states of the power to permit the liquor traffic, but no diminution of their power to prohibit it; they accorded to the federal government the jurisdiction to enforce absolute prohibition of the traffic (Ruppert v. Caffey, 251 U. S. 264, 40 Sup. Ct. 141, 64 L. ed. —; Rhode Island v. Palmer, 253 U. S. 350, 40 Sup. Ct. 486, 588, 64 L. ed. —, decided June 7, 1920); but they still retained the same right to themselves (Commonwealth v. Nickerson [Mass.] 128 N. E. 273, 277).

"As a consequence, in so far as Congress should fail successfully to provide for effective prohibition, the state under its retained right could legislate to accomplish that end. In addition, pursuant to the express terms of the 'concurrent power' granted, the state might 'by appropriate legislation,' in consonance with congressional action, itself legislate in enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment within the limits of its own territory. Such I conceive to be the general effect of the situation created." Ex p. Crookshank, (S. D. Cal. 1921) 269 Fed. 980.

Regarding the power of the states to enact legislation for the enforcement of the Prohibition Amendment, the court, in Ex p. Ramsey, (S. D. Fla. 1920) 265 Fed. 950, said:

"On June 7, 1920, the Supreme Court of the United States handed down its decision in the seven cases pending before it, in which the construction of the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act was involved. The court in its ninth conclusion say:

"The power confided to Congress by that section [section 2 of the amendment], while not exclusive, is territorially coextensive with the prohibition of the first section, embraces manufacture and other intrastate transaction, as well as importation, exportation, and interstate traffic, and is in no wise dependent on or affected by action or inaction on the part of the several states or any of them."

"In considering the effect of the Eighteenth Amendment, the Volstead Act, and the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on existing state legislation, it must be borne in mind that two of the seven cases were original actions brought by two states whose Legislatures had passed acts increasing the alcoholic strength of beverages over that given in the Volstead Act, and these suits were dismissed. The reason for such action, other than those expressed in the concurring opinion of the Chief Justice, is not given. The Chief Justice filed his concurring opinion, and, discussing the contentions of counsel before the court says:

"It is said, conceding that the concurrent power given to Congress and to the states does not as a prerequisite exact the concurrent action of both, it nevertheless contemplates the possibility of action by Congress and by the states, and makes each action effective; but as under the Constitution the authority of Congress in enforcing the Constitution is paramount, when state legislation and congressional action conflict the state legislation yields to the action of Congress as controlling. But as the power of both Congress and the states in this instance is given by the Constitution in one and the same provision, I again find myself unable to accept the view urged, because it ostensibly accepts the constitutional mandate as to the concurrence of the two powers and proceeds immediately by way of interpretation to destroy it by making one paramount over the other."

"The Chief Justice, in further announcing his decision, has this to say:

"In the first place, it is indisputable, as I have stated, that the first section imposes a general prohibition which it was the purpose to make universally and uniformly operative and efficacious. In the second place, as the prohibition did not define the intoxicating beverages which it prohibited, in the absence of anything to the contrary, it clearly, from the very fact of its adoption, cast upon Congress the duty, not only of defining the prohibited beverages, but also of enacting such regulations and sanctions as were essential to make them operative when defined. In the third place, when the second section is considered with these truths in mind, it becomes clear that it simply manifests a like purpose to adjust, as far as possible, the exercise of the new powers cast upon Congress by the amendment to the dual system of government existing under the Constitution. In other words, dealing with the new prohibition created by the Constitution, operating throughout the length and breadth of the United States, without reference to state lines or distinctions between state and federal power, and contemplating the exercise by Congress of the duty cast upon it to make the prohibition efficacious, it was sought by the second section to unite national and state administrative agencies in giving effect to the amendment and legislation of Congress enacted to make it completely operative.'

"It is clear to my mind, from the conclusions reached by the majority of the court, as announced in its ninth conclusion, and from the discussion by Chief Justice White in his concurring opinion, that the second section of the amendment does vest certain powers of legislation in the states to carry out the purposes of the first section of the amendment. If I am correct in this conclusion, does it make any difference whether the legislative action of a state was taken before or after the going into effect of the amendment and the Volstead Act? I think not. Of course, I do not mean to say that the state could pass legislation which would so conflict with the congressional action as to make that a crime under the state law which would not be a crime under the Volstead Act. The decision of that particular question is not involved in these cases, and therefore I express no opinion on that subject. But if any effect is to be given to the second section of the amendment, then surely a state could pass legislation for the purpose of carrying out the amendment under the authority given in the amendment itself, which was not in violation of any provisions of the Volstead Act, and this it seems to me could be done either before or after the Eighteenth Amendment went into effect.

"The Legislature of the state of Florida, as before noted, in December, 1918, enacted chapter 7736 of the Laws of Florida, at the special session called by the Governor, and section 3 of that act provides that it shall be unlawful for any person, association of persons, or corporation, or any agent or any employé of any person, association of persons, or corporation, to have in his, her, their, or its possession, custody, or control, in this state, any alcoholic or intoxicating liquors or beverages, except as hereinafter provided. Section 3 of title 2 of the Volstead Act provides as follows:

"No person shall on or after the date when the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States goes into effect, manufacture, sell, barter, transport, import, export, deliver, furnish or possess any intoxicating liquor except as authorized in this act.'

"I fail to perceive that there is any conflict whatever between these provisions. In fact, it might almost be said that the Volstead Act, being passed subsequent to chapter 7736, was copied from such act. The laws of Florida fix the penalty for the violation of that particular section of the state law, and it is to enforce this penalty, as I understand it, that the informations in these cases were filed, and in the first case on which the trial and conviction was had.

"While it is true that the Volstead Act affixes as the only penalty for the possession of alcoholic liquors the forfeiture of the liquor, which, etc., and the Florida statute provides a fine or imprisonment, yet such a difference in punishment does not constitute a conflict. As pointed out in some of the adjudicated cases, it is not necessary that the penalty should be identical. The act charged, if a violation of the state law and also an act of Congress, may be punished as provided in the laws, state and federal.

"It seems to me that an indictment or information which charged the possession, within the county, subsequent to the going into effect of the Eighteenth Amendment, of certain intoxicating liquor, would charge an offense against the Florida statute. If the defendant in the case relied upon showing that his possession was lawful by reason of the provisions subsequently contained in the act, such defense must be presented by the defendant. It would not invalidate the indictment or information because the act, in the Florida statute, provides for a lawful possession in subsequent sections; the exceptions not being contained in the section which forbids the possession of intoxicating liquors. It would not be necessary to state in the indictment or information that such possession was not held under the authority contained in the subsequent sections, to make such indictment or information valid. If the question should arise as to whether the limitation of quantity as pronounced in the Florida statute, and the question of right of possession as allowed under the Volstead Act, should control, it would then be time to decide the question thus raised."

Extent of legislation by state.—"It would never be competent for a state, in a matter respecting the use of liquor, to enlarge upon rights limited by congressional action. It might legislate more rigorously than Congress, in furtherance of more complete prohibition; but, in view of the supremacy of Congress in the field, it could not legislate more liberally. Nor would the fact that different, particularly more drastic, penalties are prescribed by the inferior sovereignty, necessarily result in their invalidity." Ex p. Crookshank, (S. D. Cal. 1921) 269 Fed. 980.

The police power of the state is paramount where it does not authorize what the National Act prohibits, and through its inherent reserve power it has the right to legislate in such manner. The state may prohibit, but it may not authorize. Woods v. Seattle, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 270 Fed. 315, holding a city may under power from the state prohibit the sale of jamaica ginger.

"In adopting the amendment, the states did not deprive themselves of the power to make laws for their internal government upon the subject of intoxicating liquors. Though conferring additional powers upon Congress, they merely surrendered the power to legalize and permit a traffic now forbidden, and retained the right to enforce within their own territory provisions against violations of the acts prohibited thereby.

"The fact that under the amendment Congress may enact a law, national in its scope, and that the states may likewise enact laws effective within their own boundaries, may give rise to a situation by which the laws of each state may differ from those of each other, and also differ from the laws of Congress upon the same subject. Such state laws may not permit that which the first section of the amendment forbids, nor may acts of Congress do so. But so long as legislation of a state actually seeks to enforce, by appropriate legislation under the second section of the amendment, what is prohibited by the first, no valid objection can be made, even though the state law may differ from that of Congress. The authority of the states is not to enforce the acts of Congress, but to enforce the amendment itself. . . .

"That our prohibition law was enacted prior to the adoption of the amendment does not thereby render it inoperative." State v. District Ct., (1921) 58 Mont. 684, 194 Pac. 308. See to the same effect State v. Turner, (Wash. 1921) 196 Pac. 638, wherein it was said: "Whatever may be the precise effect of the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act, passed pursuant thereto (Act of Congress, Oct. 28, 1919, c. 85, 41 Stat. 305), it cannot be said that, so far as the statutes prohibiting bootlegging and conducting illegal joints are concerned, they are not in aid of the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment, and the Eighteenth Amendment permits the passage and the enforcement of laws which were enacted either before or after that amendment which tend to the enforcement of the amendment; that power being specifically reserved as concurrent with the power of the federal government." State v. Turner, supra, was followed in State v. Woods, (Wash. 1921) 198 Pac. 737.

Invalid exception in state statute.—Though a state statute contains an exception which is in conflict with this amendment or with the Volstead Act, no conviction can be had in a state court in a case falling within the exception. State v. Barksdale, (1921) 181 N. C. 621, 107 S. E. 505, wherein the court said: "As heretofore stated, under Rhode Island v. Palmer, supra, and other like decisions, any and all state legislation in contravention of the Eighteenth Amendment and the valid provisions of the Volstead Act passed to enforce same are abrogated, and for conduct in violation of the criminal provisions of the Volstead Act a defendant can be indicted and convicted in the federal courts, notwithstanding that the provisions of the state law would not inculpate. But there is no part of the Volstead Act that provides for or permits an indictment in the state court, and we are well assured that, though an exception may be in violation of the federal law on the subject, a defendant may not be indicted and convicted in the state court for violation of a state statute which contains an exception exculpating him until our own Legislature has acted in the matter and passed a statute that condemns him. Our state police regulations must be established by our own Legislature."

Jurisdiction to prosecute.—The offense of selling liquor unlawfully may be prosecuted in a state court notwithstanding the amendment. Shaw v. State, (Tex. 1921) 229 S. W. 509. See to the same effect as to the offense of possessing equipment for the manufacture of intoxicants. Andres v. State, (Tex. 1921) 229 S. W. 503.

In a prosecution under a state statute where the defendant seeks his release on a writ of habeas corpus on the ground that the federal legislation is paramount and prevails over that of the state legislation wherever there is conflict, he is not entitled to his discharge, unless the state statute is so completely at variance with the federal statute that nothing remains of the state statute under which the relator may be prosecuted on the indictments found against him. Ex p. Finegan, (N. D. N. Y. 1921) 270 Fed. 665, wherein the court, in a prosecution under the Walker Act of New York State prohibiting the sale of beverages containing more than 2.75 per cent. of alcohol by weight, said: "The border line between intoxicating and nonintoxicating beverages being somewhat uncertain, this court cannot say as a matter of law that 2.75 per cent. of alcohol by weight makes the beverage intoxicating, and therefore cannot hold in this proceeding that the statute is unconstitutional because of conflict with the Eighteenth Amendment."

3. Power of Municipalities

Delegation of power to city.—A city may enact prohibitory measures tending to enforce the National Prohibition Act where it acts in pursuance of police power granted by the state under the state constitution with a limitation that ordinances shall not be enacted in contravention of the state statute. Woods v. Seattle, (W. D. Wash. 1921) 270 Fed. 316. And in Ex p. Crookshank, (S. D. Cal. 1921) 269 Fed. 990, the power of a city to legislate subsequent to the Eighteenth Amendment was recognized under a grant of power to legislate in regard to the sale of intoxicating liquors conferred prior to that Amendment.

Compare U. S. v. Peterson, (W. D. Wash. 1920) 268 Fed. 864, holding that while the concurrent power given to the state does not authorize the state to delegate that power to municipalities, and that it is a power which must be exercised by the state itself, yet the state may confer power on municipal courts and officers to enforce under state authority the provisions of this Amendment.

Prosecution under ordinance infringing Amendment.—On the prosecution of a person for violation of the provisions of a city ordinance relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors the fact that such ordinance contains provisions relating to the sale of liquors for nonbeverage purposes pursuant to permits which may infringe on the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment as provided for by Congress in the Volstead Act is immaterial. Ex p. Crookshank, (S. D. Cal. 1921) 269 Fed. 980.

4. "Concurrent Power"

"Concurrent power."—As to the meaning of the term "concurrent power" it has been said:

"An interpretation according with the court's conclusions is that the word 'concurrent' was used in the second section of the Eighteenth Amendment in the same or similar sense in which it has been used by the Supreme Court as illustrated in Sexton v. California, 189 U. S. 324, 23 Sup. Ct. 543, 47 L. ed. 833. In that case there was a conviction in the state court for the crime of extorting money by threatening to falsely accuse a person of an act that was made criminal only by federal law. It was urged in the federal Supreme Court that the particular acts of the offender were denounced by a federal law against extortion and therefore cognizable only in the federal courts, to the exclusion of the state courts. Sec. 711, U. S. Rev. Stat. In the federal statute against extortion, referred to, there was a provision that nothing in the title contained shall be held to take away or impair the jurisdiction of the several states under the laws thereof. The Supreme Court denied the claim of a federal jurisdiction such as to exclude the jurisdiction of the state court over the acts in question, and expressed itself in this language:

"The jurisdiction of the state court over the crime of extortion, when perpetrated under the circumstances stated in the indictment, is at least concurrent with that of the courts of the United States."

"The conviction by the state court was sustained as a proper exercise of the sovereign powers of the state; but the power of the federal government to proceed to punishment for the offense against its sovereignty was entirely unaffected. Because both courts may act against the same person for the same acts, the court used the words concurrent jurisdiction, without introducing any confusion whatever into the thought of those who are familiar with such coexisting powers of state and national governments.

"Again, the same word 'concurrent' is used in the same sense by Mr. Justice Johnson in Houston v. Moore, 5 Wheat. 33, 5 L. ed. 19:

"Why may not the same offense be made punishable both under the laws of the states and of the United States? Every citizen of a state owes a double allegiance. He enjoys the protection and participates in the government of both the state and the United States. * * * The actual exercise of this concurrent right of punishing is familiar to every day's practice. The laws of the United States have made many offenses punishable in their courts, which were and still continue punishable under the laws of the states. Witness the case of counterfeiting the current coin of the United States, under the Act of April 21, 1806, in which the state right of punishing is expressly recognized and preserved. Witness also the crime of robbing the mail on the highway, which is unquestionably cognizable as highway robbery under the state laws, although made punishable under those of the United States." U. S. v. Holt, (D. C. N. D. 1921) 270 Fed. 639.

"Section 2, art. 18, and section 2, art. 6, must have harmonious relation, since no express declaration in the amendment was made, nor are the provisions necessarily inconsistent. The national legislation, therefore, is paramount, and the state laws, when in conflict, must yield, Ballaine v. Alaska N. Ry. Co., 259 Fed. 183, 170 C. C. A. 251, and cases cited. Much 'bewilderment' is created by 'concurrent power to enforce by proper legislation,' granted by section 2, art. 18. This is a conferred power, not upon courts of the state, giving them concurrent jurisdiction to enforce a congressional act, but primarily a power conferred upon the state legislature, and through it upon the state courts, by such legislation as it may enact in harmony with the National Prohibition Act, to enforce article 18, and while the amendment 'of its own force repeals' all inconsistent laws, it preserves inviolate laws of the state consistent with its provisions." U. S. v. Peterson, (W. D. Wash. 1920) 268 Fed. 864.

In Com. v. Nickerson, (1920) 236 Mass. 281, 128 N. E. 273, 10 A. L. R. 1568, the court, in defining the word "concurrent" as used in section 2 of this Amendment, said:

"We are of opinion that the word 'concurrent' in this connection means a power continuously existing for efficacious ends to be exerted in support of the main object of the amendment and making contribution to the same general aim according to the needs of the state, even though Congress also has exerted the power reposed in it by the amendment by enacting enforcing legislation operative throughout the extent of its territory. Legislation by the states need not be identical with that of Congress. It cannot authorize that which is forbidden by Congress. But the states need not denounce every act committed within their boundaries which is included within the inhibition of the Volstead Act, nor provide the same penalties therefor. It is conceivable also that a state may forbid under penalty acts not prohibited by the act of Congress. The concurrent power of the states may differ in means adopted provided it is directed to the enforcement of the amendment. Legislation by the several states appropriately designed to enforce the absolute prohibition declared by the Eighteenth Amendment is not void or inoperative simply because Congress, in performance of the duty cast upon it by that amendment, has defined and prohibited beverages and has established regulations and penalties concerning them. State statutes, rationally adapted to putting into execution the inexorable mandate against the sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage contained in section 1 of the amendment by different definitions, regulations and penalties from those contained in the Volstead Act and not in conflict with the terms of the Volstead Act, but in harmony therewith, are valid. Existing laws of that character are not suspended or superseded by the act of Congress. The fact that Congress has enacted legislation covering in general the field of national prohibition does not exclude the operation of appropriate state legislation directed to the enforcement by different means of prohibition within the territory of the state.

"The power thus reserved to the states must be put forth in aid of the enforcement and not for the obstruction of the dominant purpose of the amendment. It must not be in direct conflict with the act of Congress in the same field. Subject to these limitations growing out of the nature of our dual system of government, the power of the states is constant, vital, effective and susceptible of continuous exercise."

In State v. Ceriani, (Conn. 1921) 113 Atl. 316, regarding the meaning of words, "Concurrent power" as used in section 2 of this Amendment, the court said:

"What 'concurrent power' in section 2 means has occasioned very considerable discussion. Three constructions have been suggested, and each is a possible construction.

(1) That it means joint power to Congress and the several states; (2) that it means a separate and independent power vested in each; (3) that it means a separate and independent power in each, but that such parts of the state act as conflict with the act of Congress must fall, since the National Act is the supreme law of the land. No additional construction of this term has been suggested, and no other seems permissible.

The United States Supreme Court, in National Prohibition Cases, 253 U. S. 350. 40 Sup Ct. 486, 588, 64 L. ed. 946, have decided that—

"'Concurrent power' does 'not mean joint power, or require that legislation . . . by Congress, to be effective, shall be approved or sanctioned by the several states or any of them; nor . . . that the power . . . is divided between' them 'along the lines which separate or distinguish foreign and interstate commerce from intrastate affairs.'

"[3] While the court has not gone further and expressly defined the meaning of 'concurrent power' we think it necessarily follows from the decision that this power is not joint; that it is a separate and independent power which the Congress and the several states exercise in the enforcement of this amendment. Each has the right to act separately and independently in aid of the amendment. But neither can act in repugnance to it.

"Concurrent power as used in this section, and when read in the light of the context and the purpose of the amendment, must be held to mean a conferred power by this amendment existing continuously in federal and state Legislature, and equal in each, and co-operating for the enforcement through appropriate legislation of the prohibitions of the Eighteenth Amendment. Commonwealth v. Nickerson, 236 Mass. 281, 128 N. E. 273.

"Between the two points of view that the power is separate and independent, or that it is separate and independent, but that the federal act will supersede any state legislation inconsistent with it, we think the latter to be the better, and, indeed, the necessary view.

"Article 6 of the federal Constitution must be construed in harmony with all parts of the Eighteenth Amendment. Section 2 of the Eighteenth Amendment gives to Congress and the several states equal authority to enforce this amendment. But when the federal and state acts conflict, then article 6, which provides that 'the Constitution and the laws . . . which shall be made in pursuance thereof . . . shall be the supreme law of the land,' makes the federal act supreme in those particulars in which there is conflict. The Eighteenth Amendment and article 6 can be, and hence must be, construed in harmonious relation. Warren v. Mayor of Charlestown, 2 Grav (Mass.) 84. 99. The rest of the state act remains in force. State v. Districts Court (Mont.) 194 Pac. 308. 310.

"Perhaps the difference in results would not be of great practical importance if either view prevailed. If the first view be accented, then the more restrictive law would in practice prevail, and the less restrictive be supplanted by it. But if the second view be accepted, the act of Congress remains the supreme law of the land, and uniformity in the enforcement of this amendment will obtain.

"Legislation by the state must support the primary purpose of the amendment, and cannot be repugnant to the act of Congress. Appropriate legislation by a state need not cover all that the act of Congress does. It may differ in its definition of intoxicating liquor and in the penalties it provides, and yet serve the purpose of helping to enforce the amendment."

Applying this construction to a state statute the court further said: "Section 2792, Rev. 1918, provides that a licensed dealer who had filed his application for a renewal shall not be convicted pending the decision upon his application. If this section be in force in its entirety, then sales of intoxicating liquor could be made, although prohibited by the amendment. And this shows clearly that so far forth as this statute would permit the licensed dealer to sell contrary to the prohibitions of the amendment and of the National Act it is invalidated. As to sales of less than one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol it is valid, since such sales are not contrary to the National Act. The sales for which the accused was tried and found guilty were of intoxicating liquor whose alcoholic contents were in excess of one-half of 1 per cent. The trial court properly charged that section 2790, which the accused was charged with having violated, was at that time in force, and that the fact that the accused had made application for a renewal of his license which was pending for decision before the county commissioners did not give him a right to make such sale."

"We have found nothing in the meaning of the term 'concurrent,' as defined in the reported cases or the dictionaries, which leads us to conclude that, as used in the amendment to the Constitution, it was intended that the right of the states to pass appropriate legislation to enforce the prohibition should be more restrictive than the power conferred upon Congress to affect the same result, save that the laws of Congress should affect all the people in the United States, while the laws of the state should affect only those within its boundaries." Ex p. Gilmore, (1921) 88 Tex. Crim. 529, 228 S. W. 199.

5. "Appropriate Legislation"

The term "appropriate legislation," as used in this section, necessarily means such legislation as will tend to make this constitutional provision completely operative and effective. Rose v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1921) 274 Fed. 245.

"In the exercise of its police power the state may legislate for the enforcement of the amendment by different means and methods which do tend to this end. Undoubtedly the power conferred upon the states of enforcing this amendment by appropriate legislation contemplated the passage of new legislation by the states to provide such enforcement. But this does not attempt to compel it or to control the manner in which the state may effect this. It impairs no right theretofore existing in the state except that of acting in repugnance to the amendment. It does not expressly require the passage of enforcing legislation, nor limit the power of the state to the newly enacted legislation. It does not invalidate state legislation which is not inconsistent with the amendment or the National Prohibition Act. Such state legislation, in existence when the amendment became effective, if it may serve in the enforcement of the amendment, is 'appropriate legislation.' This term in the Eighteenth Amendment was used in the same sense in which it was used in the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments, and means such legislation as may make the amendment fully effective and adapted to its fundamental purpose. Ex p. Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 344, 25 L. Ed. 676; United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 218, 23 L. Ed. 563. The state may thus enforce this amendment by appropriate legislation, newly enacted, or by existing legislation." State v. Ceriani, (Conn. 1921) 113 Atl. 316.

"The term 'appropriate legislation,' as used in other amendments to the Constitution, has been construed by the Supreme Court of the United States to mean legislation contemplated to make the amendment fully effective; that is, legislation adapted to carry out the objects the legislators had in view. . . . The framers of the amendment, having selected language specifically conferring upon the states concurrent power to enforce the prohibition by 'appropriate legislation,' in our opinion did not intend that the state's legislation should be identical with that of Congress, nor that it should be confined to the enforcement of the laws of Congress. A general law adapted to all parts of the country, it is conceived, might be inadequate to meet the conditions requisite in the enforcement of the prohibition in a given state. Legislation by the state supplementing that of Congress would seem more consistent with the intent of the framers of the amendment. Should an irreconcilable conflict develop, no doubt the provision of the federal Constitution, making that document and the laws of Congress paramount would prevail. But neither Congress nor the state being able to thwart the prohibition, but being empowered only to enforce it, the development of such a conflict would appear remote, if not impossible. The difference in the penalty prescribed by Congress and the state would not condemn the state law as unconstitutional." Ex p. Gilmore, (1921) 88 Tex. Crim. 529, 228 S. W. 199.

1920 Supp., p. 821, amend. 19.

Amendment as within amending power of Constitution.—This amendment is within the amending power of the Constitution as set forth in Article 5 thereof. Leser v. Garnett, (Md. 1921) 114 Atl. 840.

Effect of Amendment on state constitution.—In Opinion of Justices, (Me. 1921) 113 Atl. 614, it was held that, in view of the enactment of this amendment, which in effect amended art. 2, § 1 of the Maine Constitution regarding the qualifications of voters, the Governor of that state could appoint women as justices of the peace under art. 5, pt. 7, § 8, and art. 6, § 5 of the constitution of the state.

Effect on state election laws generally.—

This amendment automatically strikes from the state laws, organic and statutory, all discriminatory features authorizing one sex to vote and excluding the other, or placing conditions or burdens upon one not placed upon the other as a condition precedent to the right to vote, but in no wise interferes with, changes, or alters state laws with reference to elections that cannot and do not amount to a discrimination in favor of one sex against the other. It protects the man and woman alike, and a burden cannot be placed upon one sex that is not put upon the other, nor can a privilege, benefit, or exemption be given one to the exclusion of the other. The said amendment, by its own force and effect, strikes from section 177 of our state Constitution the word "male," as used in defining who are or may become electors, as well as where used in other parts of our organic or statutory laws when used in connection with the right and qualification to vote, and also strikes therefrom the use of the masculine pronoun wherever it appears, so as to make the same include and applicable to both sexes. And as the said amendment prohibits a discrimination against women by section 177, and perhaps other provisions of our state law, it likewise prohibits a discrimination against men by sections 178 and 194 of our Constitution, and has the same effect upon these provisions as to the elimination of the male sex as when used in section 177 and other provisions. The result is that upon the final ratification of the Nineteenth Amendment it had the effect of making our organic as well as statutory laws applicable to men and women alike, and placed all women in the state upon the same footing with men. Graves v. Eubank, (Ala. 1921) 87 So. 587, wherein the court said further as to the liability of a woman to a poll tax:

"The result is that, the Nineteenth Amendment becoming operative prior to the 1st day of October, 1920, all women who were over 21 years of age and under 45 on said date became liable to the payment of the poll tax due on said date and which would become delinquent the 1st of the following February as a condition to vote in succeeding elections, and this appellant, having tendered the tax collector the amount of her tax, is entitled to the writ of mandamus compelling the acceptance of same and the issuance to her of a receipt therefor, and which said writ was erroneously denied by the trial court. It must not be understood from this holding that the court means to intimate that any vote heretofore cast in the November election or any other election held prior to the 1st day of February, 1921, is invalid when cast by those who acquired the right to vote by virtue of the Nineteenth Amendment, but we do hold that, in order to vote in future elections occurring after the 1st of February, they must have paid the poll tax which becomes delinquent on said 1st day of February."

Amendment as qualifying women for jury service.—This amendment does not operate in terms or by implication to qualify women as jurors. It requires legislation to do that. State v. James, (N. J. 1921) 114 Atl. 553, wherein it was held that a male defendant could not raise the objection that women were not drawn for jury service.

Where under the statutes of a state persons are selected for jury service from the qualified voters of the state, the legislature, in view of this amendment, is authorized to enact legislation so that women may be made liable to jury duty. In re Opinion of Justices, (Mass. 1921) 130 N. E. 685.

Validity of state statute requiring registrants to state age.—State statutes requiring applicants for registration as voters to state their exact ages in years and months, do not impose in any way an injurious, unreasonable, or unnecessary restraint, impairment, or impediment on the exercise of the elective franchise. On the contrary, we think that it is a reasonable, uniform, and impartial regulation, calculated to facilitate and secure the exercise of this right and to prevent its abuse, and as such does not violate this amendment. State v. Hillenbrand, (Ohio 1920) 130 N. E. 29, 14 A. L. R. 256.
